There may, therefore, be some scope, if not for prohibiting the sale of playing fields in all circumstances, for saying that it should be a condition of any planning development—as an element of planning gain—that the developer must maintain part of the site and provide enhanced facilities, if the major part of the acreage is developed, thus ensuring that the opportunity of using the playing fields is not entirely removed.

It is worth pointing out that it is not merely a case of school playing fields, as many large institutions, such as those hospitals in which we used to incarcerate anyone with any kind of mental disability, have substantial playing fields. The preservation of those fields and the extent to which they can be made available to the public is another issue worth considering.

On structure, most people who have an interest in these matters welcome the rationalisation of the structure of the sports councils, which the Minister first announced and is about to implement. I hope that I will not embarrass him when I welcome him as a convert to the concept of federalism, because he has created a United Kingdom Sports Council, under which there are to be four councils with proper representation for all the home countries—England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales.

Often, these questions of structure are less important in theory than in practice. The benefit that might accrue from the implementation of the Minister's decision is that there might be a much clearer demarcation of responsibility.

There is no doubt that there was a considerable period of uncertainty in all the sports councils while the proposals and counter-proposals were being debated. The Minister has therefore brought an element of certainty to a situation that went very much against the interests of the proper management and development of sport in this country. He is to be congratulated on that. All of us who have an interest in the issue wish the new arrangements success not only in theory but in practice.

It would be too cynical to say that the announcement of a debate on sport is a signal that the general election cannot be far away. However, if one examines the history of these debates, it becomes apparent that they have a remarkable capacity of coming up in the period not long before a general election. I do not want to make that observation—it would be much too cynical—but I must say that the Minister displayed a great deal of enthusiasm and, on some occasions, passion in his account of what he was about. The House welcomes that, but will welcome with just as much enthusiasm the opportunity to keep a close eye on the development of the matters to which he referred. I take this opportunity to ask the Minister to confirm to what extent the Government have implemented the plans contained in the document that has been central to our discussion.

Mr. Anthony Coombs (Wyre Forest): I congratulate the hon. and learned Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell) on what must be a world record intervention. I also congratulate him on the speed with which the Government reacted to his suggestion; that must also be something of a world record.

I agree with the hon. and learned Gentleman that it is slightly ironic that when something in the region of £300 million a year, potentially, is coming from the lottery for capital projects—we appreciate that facilities still have to be evened up across the country even though they have improved greatly over the past 20 years—people who have reached the top of their profession should still be living hand to mouth.

The current British doubles ice dance champion lives in my constituency. She told me that she had been living hand to mouth until she eventually got sponsorship. Would not it be better if part of the lottery funds were put into a trust fund to be used to cover the revenue costs of people who achieve such standards of excellence?

Having said that, I congratulate my hon. Friend the Minister of State on his promotion. It is not only well deserved personally but a proper reflection of the importance of the Department of National Heritage to our lives. I also congratulate him on the excellent initiatives contained in "Raising the Game". It may take 10 years, but I think that that document will have a revolutionary impact not only on participation in sport but on health, excellence and, I hope, social attitudes. I commend him for the enormously important work that he is doing.

I am sad that my hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, Central (Mr. Lord) is no longer in his place because I should like to remonstrate with him. He talked in rather antediluvian terms about the great virtues of amateurism in rugby union and argued that the awful professional game of association football was played by the lower orders and was full of people who kick spectators and misbehave on the field. Frankly, the opposite is the case.

For too long, the Rugby Football Union, as we saw in the Select Committee on National Heritage, has been an organised hypocrisy that turned its back on people who wanted to play in another league and actively discriminated against them. Thank heavens it has seen sense in the past year and got its act together by coming to terms with the enormous and inevitable impact of the media on sport.

On the other hand, association football has sensibly and constructively taken advantage of the funds that have been made available to it by competing television companies—of which BSkyB is obviously the main one. It has got its act together and launched great initiatives.

Teams such as Arsenal, the Hammers, Aston Villa and Birmingham City—I have to say Birmingham City because it does the job so well and it is the premier team in the second city—have reached out to communities extremely constructively, exactly in tune with the "Raising the Game" philosophy.

[Mr. Anthony Coombs]

I wish to speak about the dichotomy, or past dichotomy, between the amateur side of sport—the participation side—and the professional side of sport, into which so much money is now coming.

There are some curious contrasts in sport. If we consider sport on one level, we find that it thrives as never before. The latest census figures show that 29 million people take part in active sport at least once a month, and no fewer than 6.5 million people belong to sporting clubs. There are 150,000 clubs. As I said, although they may not be evenly spread throughout the country, facilities have grown to be better than ever before. That is so in my constituency, where some sporting facilities are not only excellent but, sadly, at the moment underused. I understand that there are about 1,100 swimming pools, 1,600 sports halls, 500 athletics tracks and even 99 dry ski slopes. More and more of them are being professionally run.

The national lottery pumps £300 million a year into sport and private sponsorship puts in about £250 million a year. Local authorities spend about £450 million on sport. The Sports Council makes a relatively small contribution, but the sum that it has received from the Government in the past 20 years to put into sport has increased in real terms. It puts about £50 million a year into sport.

There is therefore an enormous amount of activity. The total economic impact of sport has been estimated to generate about 460,000 jobs in this country. When one considers that it is the sporting events that break records on television, whether it be 23 million people watching Torvill and Dean at the most recent winter Olympics or 14 million people watching Nigel Benn fight Chris Eubank, one becomes aware of the hold that sport has on people's imagination, and many people take part in sport as well.

On the other hand, the figures for participation by young people are disappointing. We know that they spend too long watching television. The Minister mentioned the words "couch potato" and I suppose that that would account for many of those who spend 25 or 26 hours a week watching television and only an hour and 10 minutes a week doing sport in their schools.

Undoubtedly, the teachers' pay dispute in the 1980s had the effect that many teachers who previously were involved in extra-curricular activities reduced their commitment. However, to be fair, many teachers spend an enormous amount of time, often at their own expense, on Saturdays and after school, looking after and promoting sport, although it must be admitted that, perhaps as a result of the demands of the national curriculum, the number of people choosing to specialise in physical education at teacher training colleges has decreased, which is one of the reasons why the number of suitably qualified physical education teachers has gradually decreased.

All that leads to potential health hazards. The university of Exeter and the Health Education Authority, with Allied Dunbar, found that a third of men and two thirds of women could not negotiate a 1 in 20 slope on a walk for 10 minutes without being significantly breathless. In the 16 to 24-year-old age group, they found that 70 per cent. of men and 91 per cent. of women did not do enough exercise to avoid future heart or cardiovascular problems. Even at school age—that is, under 16—it was found that 50 per cent. of girls and one third of boys did too little exercise to guard against heart problems.

The problem was not so much the amount of exercise that schools allowed for—although as we have heard, many do too little—but the type of exercise. A report called "Health-Related Fitness in Secondary School Physical Education—a descriptive analytic study" prepared by the Somerset county adviser for health-related and physical education and by Exeter university academics—although for some reason it was funded by the university of Alabama—involved studying the work of physical education teachers carefully and in depth. It says:

"Although the 20 teachers in this study were clearly hardworking and dedicated professionals, they provided their pupils with limited opportunities in which to participate in the type of physical activity associated with health benefits, allocated no time for pupils to engage in fitness activity or acquire health-related fitness knowledge, and did not promote or demonstrate fitness."

What matters is not only the quantity but the quality of the physical education that takes place in schools. I hope that the Minister will take that fact on board when discussing such matters with the Teacher Training Agency. The high quality of physical education is as important as the amount of it.

However, although we have been saying that insufficient recruits for the British Army have the right upper body strength, that is not a new phenomenon. The Victorian age is often looked upon as a halcyon age when everyone was playing all sorts of team sports, but during the Boer war the country was so disappointed with the quality of its recruits that a committee on physical deterioration was set up to improve the situation. The problem is of long standing, and I congratulate the Minister on trying to tackle it.

Mr. Devlin: I am glad that my hon. Friend mentioned the worries about physical deterioration, because that led on to the eugenics movement, and a significant improvement was made in the health and abilities of young people between 1918 and 1938. There was a further boost between 1950 and 1960, but from about 1960 onwards the fitness of the nation went back into decline. I believe that that was due to materialism rather than to poverty.

Mr. Coombs: Yes, there may be a direct relation between electronic and computer sophistication, and people's physical activity levels and therefore their fitness.

As I said, there is a dichotomy between the large sums pushed into one part of sport and the relatively low levels of proper fitness activity in another. In the context of "Raising the Game", although more inspection of schools by Ofsted is important, as is extra teacher training and the idea that schools, especially in the grant-maintained sector, may be allowed to specialise in sport, the most important part of the initiative lies in bringing the voluntary and professional sectors together. The £2 million from the Sports Council, although a relatively small sum, will be immensely valuable in improving links between schools and clubs.

In my constituency there is Stourport hockey club, which has a close relationship with King Charles school in Kidderminster, and Stourport athletics club, which has close relationships with Stourport schools. We also have Kidderminster Harriers, which should have been a football league team but was robbed of that opportunity. That team too has a close relationship with several schools through its coaching clinics.

Mr. Lord: I am sorry that I missed my hon. Friend's remarks about me. I have popped out of the Chamber only a couple of times this morning, yet it seems that the moment I leave, people start saying things about me. I am being described as some sort of out-of-touch buffer. But I have received a letter from Ian Beer, the ex-president of the RFU, which says that he is entirely supportive of what I am doing. It might also be of interest to the House to know that—while it was not at the right university as far as I am concerned—Simon Halliday, who is a lot younger than I am and has a large number of England caps, spoke at Oxford university yesterday on professionalism in rugby union and said that he was entirely against it. The movement is growing.

Mr. Coombs: I hear what my hon. Friend has to say.

The relationship between clubs and schools is extremely important, and we must encourage it. We must get more active sportsmen and women into our schools as volunteers. I did that at schools and universities, and found it to be immensely valuable and rewarding. It can buttress the number of people who are available to take school sports.

It is equally important to give local companies an opportunity to sponsor school sports to a far greater extent than they do at present. Too often, companies regard school sports as forming a part of the public sector, and think that never the twain shall meet. We must make sure that some of the £250 million sponsorship money available every year gets to schools and clubs.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Stockton, South (Mr. Devlin) said, the type of initiative that has been embarked upon by people such as Sir John Hall in Newcastle is not a step on the slippery slope to professionalism, but a sign of ensuring that professional resources are made available to communities, so that we can strengthen sport within local communities and make sure that more people have access to it. That can involve the private and public sectors.

I am immensely proud that, in my constituency, we have got the money together for a regional sports centre for a relatively small set of three towns. The first work on the centre is to be done in the next few months. How did we do it?. I pay tribute to the local authority—which is not Conservative-controlled—which has done a first-class job in bringing people, including the county council and local schools, together. We received a significant grant from the Foundation for Sport and the Arts, and local clubs such as Stourport hockey club and the Stourport squash and tennis clubs have all sold land to help us put money into the pot. That has now been topped by a magnificent grant from the lottery of £1.5 million. That is a classic example of the voluntary sector, the state sector, local councils and the private sector coming together to produce a facility that will be enormously used and will be extremely valuable for the people of my area.

I end on that note. I applaud the Government's intention, and I applaud "Raising the Game", which will be crucial if we are to make a success of sport in this country. It is vital to ensure that the interface of the professional side of the game and the voluntary, or in old-fashioned terms, amateur side of the game is not criticised when one side moves to another, as we have heard this morning. That should be seen as part of a continuing movement towards a shared goal—everybody doing all that they can to bring more sport to more people at a higher standard than ever before.

Miss Kate Hoey (Vauxhall): I shall mention the hon. Member for Suffolk, Central (Mr. Lord) at the beginning, so he can feel free to leave the Chamber when he wishes. I do not know who is conveying to him that he is an "old buffer", but it must be realised that the hon. Gentleman speaks for a lot of people who are concerned about the way sport is going. I do not agree with what you said about rugby union, but I am glad that you made your views known.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. May I remind the hon. Lady that she is addressing me, rather than the hon. Gentleman?

Miss Hoey: I am sorry, Madam Deputy Speaker. This is the beginning of a new Session, or nearly the beginning of a new Session, and obviously I had forgotten that requirement.

I share the concern that this debate is being held on a Friday. Since I entered Parliament, there have been about three debates on sport at different times. But perhaps only two or three more hon. Members would have been present if this were not a Friday, and that reflects how let down sport has been by Parliament, even though hon. Members may have said many things in their own constituencies.

I welcome "Raising the Game" not necessarily for its content and detail but as a measure of the importance of sport and of the need for it to be central in social policy. The more that can be achieved without party political back-stabbing, the better. I agree with the hon. and learned Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell) that all political parties can share in the future of sport. We do not serve sportsmen and women or the millions of people who enjoy watching and following different sports by always trying to identify policy divisions. There is strong agreement, as has been shown this morning.

Fundamental to any policy must be the opportunity for people at all levels fully to participate in the sport of their choice to the limit of their abilities. I strongly support the consultation paper's emphasis on team sports. There is no doubt that sports taught properly in schools are beneficial to young people in channelling their energy, aggression and competitiveness. We have seen standards fall in team sports in schools. Some people may think it old-fashioned to talk about team sport, good sportsmanship, obeying rules and self-discipline. If it is, I am proud to be seen as old-fashioned. Team and individual sports are not mutually exclusive and should not be played off against each other, but if youngsters do not get the chance at school to play team sports, many of them will not get that chance elsewhere. I am pleased that the Minister has considered the time to be given to sport in the school curriculum, although two hours is still too little. There should be greater emphasis on sports activities before and after school. There needs to be much more flexibility in the school day, and that applies not just to sport.

I welcome the plan for schools to account for their sports activities in their prospectuses. If sport matters enough to be included in a school's prospectus and to be monitored, that will raise the status of staff in physical education and sports departments. I welcome also sports and PE inspections. When I intervened earlier, my concern was that Ofsted would not have enough resources—given all the extra things that it is already doing—to take on another commitment. I was not thinking in terms of money, but perhaps we can return to that matter later.

We must try also to get rid of the hang-up about compulsory competitive sports. There will always be youngsters who do not like participating in sport, as in any other type of lesson. I hated mathematics at school. I was hopeless at it, and probably still am, but I had to do maths because it was compulsory—and I probably got something out of those lessons. Of course teachers are sensitive these days to pupils' interests, so the idea of compulsion does not really alarm me. Any sensitive PE teacher or sports coach these days will not force a 14-year-old to do something against his or her will. But if there is no compulsion, and sport is not made central to the curriculum, its status will decline, as it has done in recent years. We should not therefore spend too much time in detailed argument about compulsion; it is the principle that matters.

The Minister did not fully deal with all the points in the document, some of which I should like to discuss now. I was delighted to hear him announce his drug education measures. The document itself does not contain much about substance abuse, but it is a growing problem from the top to the bottom of sport—it is no good pretending otherwise. There needs to be international agreement on how to tackle it. Fine words and resolutions agreed at European meetings are not enough.

The Sports Council runs a drug testing programme, but it does not publish the results of all who are tested. The drug testing programme needs much more transparency. The names of all who are tested and found not to have taken drugs should be published, as well as the names of those who have failed their tests. That would damp down speculation about the size of the problem. Those who pay good money to watch competitive sport should be in a position to know that an honest competition is taking place, untainted by drugs. The fear is that what we do now may be just the tip of an iceberg. That is why we need a highly organised campaign, run by sports organisations with the co-operation of the Government and schools, to educate young people about drugs. Ultimately it is the responsibility of the governing bodies to make sure that the sports that they govern are clean.

National vocational qualifications are not mentioned in the document, either. They allow many people to enter sports administration and coaching. The problems, however, lie with the bureaucracy and in-fighting which have delayed the availability of NVQs in many sports. But there is a great deal of demand for them, and I hope that the Minister will knock some sense into those concerned and sort out the difficulties between the Sports Council and the awarding bodies, so that NVQs become more widely available in sport.

There is general agreement that, without qualified coaches, sports development and talent spotting will for ever be handicapped, talent will be lost and participation stunted. I welcome the extra money going into coaching. We need to take action to promote training and the development of coaching in all sports at all levels, for without coaches and a national coaching scheme the work of the British sports academy will be put in jeopardy.

Sports coaches must also be given training in the ethics of sport, to enable them to proceed more sensitively when teaching vulnerable young people. Sport is not just about winning all the time, although that is exciting and wonderful; it is also about discipline and self-esteem. Role models are very important, and more and more of them are emerging from sport.

There has been a great deal of discussion recently of boxing and the martial arts. Perhaps the Minister would like to tell us about the current state of the law reform study considering the legal aspects of those activities. Did the Minister give evidence himself; may we be told what he said?

As for cricket, I declare my interest, having been lucky enough to be elected as the Member for Surrey county cricket club, as it were, and having now been elected on to the committee. The club has not been doing especially well on the cricket field but I can promise hon. Members on both sides of the House that that will change. Two of its fine cricketers, Alec Stewart and Graham Thorpe, are currently members of the England team. England is today playing its first match at the Oval in Soweto. I am sure we all wish the England team the very best of fortune in its tour of South Africa.

Much more could be done for cricket. Local authorities of all political colours throughout the country are having to increase the hiring charges that they levy on cricket teams. Pitches are becoming poor and dangerous. Cricket in schools is being discussed but much needs to be done.

Girls' cricket has been extremely successful at all levels up to the women's England team. There is, however, a lack of facilities, such as poor changing rooms. Costs are increasing and generally poor facilities are detrimental to women's cricket. Even where there is a will, there is often the problem of lack of resources. There is also difficulty in ensuring that resources are brought to where they are needed. Last night I was pleased to host at the House the Test and County Cricket Board test match ground committee's meeting.

There is a determination among all the county clubs to do more and work for schools. Some may be slower than others but there is a determination throughout for changes to be made. The clubs know that if they do not begin to get the kids coming through, the long-term aim of getting a better international cricket team will not be realised. Substantial sums from the national lottery will have to be used to increase the capacity of test grounds. The money that is generated by test matches on the few days when they are played can then be pushed down to the grass roots. I have an interest, of course, in ensuring that Surrey county cricket club receives extra money so that the capacity of its ground can be increased. As part of the deal the club is working closely with the local authority and the Sports Council to ensure that community facilities, in an extremely poor area, are improved and that everybody will benefit, not only those who like to watch cricket, including test matches.

I was concerned by the attack of my hon. Friend the Member for Bassetlaw (Mr. Ashton) on London, as he would expect me to be. I hope that the Minister will say something about the national stadium. It is crucial that a decision is taken. I know that there are supporters of Birmingham on the Government Benches. Along with the hon. Member for Falmouth and Camborne (Mr. Coe), I worked extremely hard to have London accepted as the site for the Olympic games a few years ago. We felt that it was the only place in the United Kingdom that could realistically host them. It is pleasing that the British Olympic Association now agrees with us that London is the only place that will ever bring the Olympic games back to this country. The association takes the view that it will be London and nowhere else.

Mr. Ashton: My hon. Friend will agree that there is no local council representing London. There is no Greater London council. We all know that the Government abolished it. That is one of the great handicaps when it comes to bringing anything to London. After all, London has no governing body.

Miss Hoey: I am sure that my hon. Friend shares my confidence that the next Labour Government will introduce a Greater London authority. It will not be, I am sure, like the old GLC. I am confident, however, that it will be an authority that will bring London together. But there is already in London a great deal of co-operation and co-ordination. London First and many other organisations in the business community and the private sector are involved. We still have the City of London. There is unity in London. The BOA is backing London. It has decided not to continue its support for either Manchester or Birmingham.

We talk about what comes to London and what goes out of London but we must not forget that London is the capital. On the whole, tourists want to come to London. All the other bids in the past have included bits about London, for example, visits to Buckingham palace—all the nice bits about London—as a way of attracting people to come to Manchester and Sheffield. If we did win the Olympic bid for London, the benefits to the whole of the United Kingdom would be fantastic. Wembley is a brand name across the world. People know what Wembley is. One does not have to spend millions of pounds on marketing it, so we already have an advantage. I think that the combination of the new stadium at Wembley, with its very imaginative design—I am not an architect, but to me it looks very imaginative—allowing the athletics to continue, and the whole system that is already in place there means that it has to be the location for the national stadium, although I appreciate that hon. Members have views on their own areas. I remind hon. Members that Wembley is already building a new underground station.

I shall make a quick point about swimming, as it has been given only one mention in the document, and I do not think that any positive plans have been announced for the extension of swimming pool opening hours. Again, it is a local authority problem. It is very remiss that the document makes virtually no mention of local authorities. One cannot ignore them. The Minister may not like some of the things that they have done, but they cannot be ignored, and they have to be brought on board. We have to learn from the good things that they have done and be able to use that. Swimming is one of those areas where the local authority has to be central. For people of all ages, swimming is the greatest physical recreation. As a competitive sport, it is also exciting, and Britain has had a successful record. I would like the Minister to say something about where he sees recreational swimming, competitive swimming and diving fitting into the development of sport.

We know about the wonderful role of volunteers, sports administrators and so on. I do not think that anyone can question the amount of voluntary effort that goes into sport. I am sure that the Minister will praise all those people who do so much at their own expense, but within "Raising the Game" there is nothing about the quality of administration. I wonder whether we need to look at bringing the quality of our administrators, who are so important in the governing bodies, up to a higher level.

Whatever happened to ice skating—I was going to say whatever happened to Torvill and Dean—and the plan for a stadium when Richmond closed? It was promised that Richmond ice rink would be replaced. I am sure that other boroughs would be interested in a new national ice centre. I could offer one area in my own borough, Streatham, that has great experience and is an obvious site.

I now deal with the national game—football. I do not share the optimism of my hon. Friend the Member for Bassetlaw about how wonderful everything is in football. Yes, attendances are up and there are lots of new all-seater stadiums, but if we are honest—I am not talking about some of the things that have happened off the field—we must recognise that football has changed. Perhaps that is what people want. Perhaps they want to see a different type of supporter, but there is absolutely no doubt that many football supporters have been driven out because of the cost. They cannot afford to go. They certainly cannot afford to go regularly. There is no doubt that many clubs have abused the loyalty of their fans in terms of what people have to pay.

I am pleased that the Football Supporters Association, which is one of the most progressive organisations in football, has been taken on board and been given funding to work with the football authorities for the European championships next year. The Football Supporters Association shares the concern that football has changed. It is all very well looking at things in the short term, but if the Football Association and the governing bodies of sport generally are prepared to forgo the long term for short-term financial gains, that is very sad. I think that there will be some serious problems over the way in which football has been treated in a short-term way, how the money is being used, and how it is not trickling down to the lower divisions as it used to. To return to the pyramid mentioned by the hon. and learned Member for Fife, North-East, if we do not have a broad football base at local park and school level, the Premier league will ultimately suffer.

Last January I called in the House for an independent inquiry into the state of our national game and, particularly, the allegations of corruption, bungs, alleged match fixing and greed. I think that the Minister responded then by expressing his complete confidence in the Premier league's own inquiry. I hope that he will return to that point. I wonder whether he still has complete confidence in the Premier league inquiry getting to the bottom of the matter.

It will be two years next week—4 November—since the Premier league commission was set up to inquire into allegations of undercover payments during transfer deals and into the role of agents in an attempt to restore the public's faith in the propriety of football. So far there has been one report on the transfer of John Jensen from the Danish club, Brondby, to Arsenal, which resulted in George Graham being banned from football for 12 months.

[Miss Hoey]

There is now a system of licensing agents. The FA kindly sent me a list of agents who have been registered. Some 16 agents are registered and have all put up £100,000, which is a measure of their confidence that they will not break the rules. But some agents who have registered are already beginning to ask: what is the point of registering if other people who still deal with players in this country have not registered? It is important that the FA requires FIFA to strengthen that system, or it will be brought into disrepute. Many clubs are still involved in transfers using agents who are not registered. Although the penalties in the documents seem to be severe, I am not confident that the FA will carry out the penalties. I shall not mention some of the agents involved who are not registered, but one or two of them certainly need investigating.

The original reason for setting up the Premier league commission of inquiry was to investigate the allegations of wrongdoing and bribes involving the transfer of Teddy Sheringham from Nottingham Forest to Tottenham. As we all know, it involved the England team manager, Terry Venables, and the former Nottingham Forest manager, Brian Clough. Some two years later there has still been no report on the subject. Terry Venables has not been cleared and new evidence has recently come to light.

Those of us who read The Daily Telegraph—I read the sports pages in particular—will have seen that on 30 September its sports correspondent, Mihir Bose, produced new evidence about the controversial Teddy Sheringham transfer in 1992. In a long article which, for legal reasons, does not contain everything, it was made clear that The Daily Telegraph had seen documents suggesting that the original invoice involved in the transfer might not have been the only invoice. I have also seen those documents.

It seems that, for some reason, two days before the invoice relating to the £50,000 payment to First Wave Sports Management was presented to Tottenham, another invoice was drawn up by another company. That was three days before Sheringham was transferred from Nottingham Forest to Tottenham in August 1992. That company specialised in naughty knickers—that was the description in The Daily Telegraph, not The Sun. That invoice, which was presented to Tottenham, was for the same amount and used the same wording as the invoice from First Wave Sports Management. Frank McLintock, who was at that time a partner in First Wave, presented the invoice to Tottenham and was paid £50,000 plus VAT in cash. Tottenham did not pay on the invoice from the Naughty Nighties company and knew nothing about it until very recently. The Daily Telegraph published it, and the Silver Rose International Ltd. invoice states:

"For the assistance in arranging a distribution and merchandising network on behalf of THFC in the USA, to include travel and all consultancy work involved in the project—£50,000."

No one denies that the First Wave one was paid. It states on that invoice:

"For the assistance in arranging a distribution and merchandising network on behalf of Tottenham Hotspur Football Club in the United States, to include travel and all consultancy work involved in the project."

Obviously, someone somewhere was trying to launder money and, let us be blunt, launder it out of Tottenham. Because of the work by The Daily Telegraph and particularly Mr. Bose on this matter, Rick Parry, who is in charge of the Premier league commission, has stated:

"The evidence The Daily Telegraph has uncovered is interesting and very significant. It points the inquiry in a new direction and our lawyers are looking at it very closely. It is too early to say where it will lead to but we may have to recall some of the people we have already questioned."

I am delighted that Rick Parry is saying that because this is a serious issue and all those who have been involved from day one know that there is much more to come.

It may be difficult for the Premier league commission to accept that it does not have the power to get to the bottom of this matter. It cannot subpoena witnesses and it took over a year for it to get Brian Clough to turn up. Nobody is on oath and that makes it difficult to elicit evidence. Much of the story came out afterwards when people in the media asked questions.

We may have to accept that this issue is too big and cosy for the football authorities to investigate. I do not think that there is any secret about the fact, although it may not yet be public knowledge, that the Department of Trade and Industry investigation division is currently looking into an allegation that Terry Venables may have committed an offence that is contrary to section 47 of the Financial Services Act 1986 in that he may have made a misleading, false or deceptive statement in an offer document. I understand that other matters are being investigated and that there may soon be some developments.

I do not want to go into the business side of these issues because I am interested only in what is happening in football. However, such matters leave a big question mark over who is in charge of football, and who is our national coach. We are soon going into the European championships and we must get to the bottom of this. The Minister must waken up to the fact that large amounts of public money are going into football and that ultimately he and Parliament have a responsibility to make sure that such things do not happen.

As I said in January, the problems in our national game are far too close to home for the football authorities to cope with by themselves. Football culture has traditionally turned a blind eye to wrongdoing. Can we really expect those inside the game to do other than keep quiet and hope that all these problems will go away? They will not go away, and unless the Minister and Parliament take an active interest, such back-hander deals will continue, no matter what changes are suggested or how much the Premier league and the FA say that they are all being sorted out. They will not be sorted out unless someone is prepared to take an interest.

I started on a positive note because I appreciate that what the Minister has said is a great step which allows scope for all-party support. There is huge support for sport in Britain but I am sorry to say that if we cannot get our national game right and sort out the mess, it will not bode well for the future of football or any other sport.

Several hon. Members rose—

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. Before I call the next hon. Member, may I point out that unless the succeeding speeches are somewhat shorter there will be some disappointed Members?

1.29 pm

Mr. Harry Greenway (Ealing, North): I shall endeavour to be brief, Madam Deputy Speaker. With regard to the previous speech, I simply say that as a London Member of Parliament I support the hon. Member for Vauxhall (Miss Hoey) in her strong support for retaining Wembley as this country's central stadium. Its name is well established and, rebuilt, it will be a fine stadium. The Olympics can go nowhere but London. I supported the last bid for the Olympics to come here and I am supporting the next one.

Without disrespect to the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde (Mr. Pendry), the Labour party's spokesman on sport, whom I regard highly, I must say that he did not give me anything like satisfaction when I invited him to support me in my endeavours to keep the important playing fields of Dormers Wells high school, which the Labour council in Ealing is determined and doing its damnedest to sell for housing development. It is no use talking about what a Labour Government would do; I should be more impressed with a commitment now to the effect that the council is behaving outrageously in its efforts to sell school playing fields. If Labour policy is as the hon. Gentleman suggests, why does the Labour party not come out and condemn that Labour-controlled council and support me in my strong efforts to save those playing fields for the children in that part of Ealing?

It is not just that I could do with support, if Members really believe in sport and in saving playing fields, but the same council rightly opposed an application by British Rail to develop housing on the Great Western Railway sports playing fields, which have been there for nearly 100 years. I worked up a public meeting of 400 to 500 people to oppose British Rail on that. Ealing council's chairman of planning came running in at the last minute, when I had got the meeting and the whole region 100 per cent. behind me, and said that the council would refuse planning permission. However, the council's action in refusing planning permission in relation to privately owned playing fields while pushing for the sale of its own publicly owned playing fields has given British Rail the right and the arguments with which to appeal for the destruction of those lovely playing fields in west Ealing.

In a double whammy of the nastiest kind, therefore, we could lose both Dormers Wells playing fields and the GWR playing fields, which are in a very built-up part of west Ealing. If those playing fields go as a result of the devious behaviour of Ealing Labour council, playing facilities will be taken from hundreds, perhaps thousands, of children and older people. I cannot understand how the Labour party can stand by and say, "We oppose the sale of playing fields—give us the credit and give us your votes," while behaving like that: it does not wash and we do not like it.

I have been to the GWR playing fields, which British Rail is trying to dispose of, a number of times recently and found all the tennis courts, rugger and soccer pitches, and bowling greens—all the facilities that one could imagine—packed with people of all ages. It was a thrilling sight to see every inch of those playing fields taken up and used, but for the reason that I have given they are in danger.

If the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde would join me in writing to the Department of the Environment saying that those fields should not be developed, I would be grateful. It would be helpful and would add ballast to what so far have merely been pious sentiments. I do not say that in a mean spirit as I regard the hon. Gentleman as a friend, but I ask him to do that.

Ealing Labour council set out to privatise public facilities which have been running for many years and has laid down such severe criteria that developers are coming in with bids that will give that council lots of money. It already has £17 million in reserve and is not short of money. The criteria on which it is encouraging bids are so severe that my constituents will be priced out of using the facilities. The Ealing northern sports centre is to be privatised in such a severe fashion that my constituents will have to pay £50 when until now they have paid £10. What does that Labour council think that it is doing? At the same time, the Opposition say how keen they are on sport. The same will happen to Northolt Swimerama, which is in an area where it is much needed, and to the Gurnell pool in west Ealing. There again, the developers have been set such tight criteria that their bids will price many of my constituents out of using those facilities. Rich people will be drawn in from around and about, but I do not see the future in that. I do not know what the Labour party thinks it is doing.

Less controversially, or perhaps more controversially, but in a different field, I must say a word or two in support of boxing as that great sport has been so severely attacked. There is no one who does not regret damage to a boxer and there is no question but that the death of Jim Murray moved and hurt the nation. It was especially stirring when his father said on television two days after his tragic death that Jim would have wanted the sport to continue and that he himself would continue to support it.

I speak as vice-chairman of the all-party parliamentary friends of boxing group. I do not believe that any legal process could succeed in outlawing the sport of boxing. It would go underground and be pursued in rough forms in all sorts of undesirable places and money would change hands. Whether we like the sport or not, we have no alternative but to live with it and to try to enhance it.

Boxing is the noble art of self-defence, not of knocking your opponent's block off, damaging his brain and all the rest of it: that is not the object of the sport. While I warmly welcome the recently announced proposals of the British Boxing Board of Control to make the sport more supervised, both medically and while fights are in progress, I would go further and give the medical authorities the right to stop a fight, as they can in America. I hope that that right will be conceded.

I want the sport of boxing to be encouraged in schools—it is still practised in some, but far fewer than formerly—as a suitable sport for boys. If it is felt that there is far too much readiness on the part of those teaching it to young boys to encourage them to go for the head, I should like it to be made illegal for the head to be punched at schoolboy level. If boxers were simply attacking or defending their own bodies and the head were left out, one could continue with the sport, as it would be acceptable to parents and thus the practice would increase in schools.

Boxing is a useful sport in schools. I was a schoolmaster for 23 years. If there was an altercation between two boys and they could not settle their argument in any other way, I could say, "I don't want you fighting outside school or anywhere else, but you can get in the ring and be properly supervised—would you like to do that?" Sometimes they would say, "No, we've finished," and sometimes they said yes. It was a way of resolving nasty differences between boys in a properly supervised manner.

Due to pressure of time I shall not speak for much longer, but I must point out that some other sports are much more dangerous than boxing. Riding, for example, is one of my best loved sports. No one loves horses and riding more than I do. I have ridden the horse that Mark Davies, a famous event rider, used to ride and, indeed, trained. I saw Mark Davies die while event-riding. It was an accident that could have happened to anyone. I have tried to get this message across before, but more people died in the Cairngorms last winter than have died in 50 years of boxing. That should be remembered. Motor racing can also be lethal, but one cannot stop the adventurous spirit of men and women or their wish to compete in sometimes dangerous activities. We should seek to minimise the danger while maximising that adventurous spirit and giving it full reign.

I thoroughly agree with my hon. Friend the Minister that team games in school are crucial and that we should bring them back where they have been abandoned because they develop the character. I also know from my own experience that sixth formers in particular gain a great deal from competing in individual sports against themselves or against an environment, as happens in mountaineering. There is certainly a place for that approach and I commend it.

1.40 pm

Ms Diane Abbott (Hackney, North and Stoke Newington): One cannot underestimate the significance of sport and sports people in the lives of youngsters, especially those in the inner city. In my area of Hackney, sportsmen and women are considered far more important and heroic than mere Members of Parliament.

As the Minister said in his introductory address, one of the important things about sport is the values that it can teach. The document "Raising the Game" states early on:

"Sport can provide lessons for life which young people are unlikely to learn so well in any other way."

One of the values that sport, the administration and practice of sport and the behaviour of spectators should demonstrate is a commitment to equality and anti-racism. My remarks deal with the experiences of some black sportsmen and women and with racism in sport.

In many ways, sport is multiracialism in action. Since the war, it has been noticeable that an ever-increasing number of black Britons have represented this country with dignity and a remarkable degree of success: 50 per cent. of Britain's athletics squad is black, 50 per cent. of current British boxing champions are black, and 25 per cent. of our professional footballers are black. There are rising ethnic minority stars in many sports.

At many levels, however, there is still evidence of racial discrimination, whether in the attitude of those at the top of the sport or in that of spectators. That is the experience of sportsmen and women. Despite the central role that sport plays in our life—the many hours devoted to sport in the media and the number of Members of Parliament who enthuse about it—there is almost a conspiracy of silence about racism in sport.

Racism in sport can deter black spectators from attending sporting events. We have been talking about how to increase involvement and participation in sport, but the fact that some people still feel unable to attend a football match because of the atmosphere and some of the chanting does not help to make them more sports-minded. Racism can put great pressure on young black sportsmen and women and cut off their career opportunities. In some sports, it can deter inner-city young people from getting involved. For instance, although there may be a great many black participants in football, young black people and people from the ethnic minorities are noticeable by their absence from sports such as tennis, swimming and even some club rugby union and club cricket.

Racism operates at many levels. One of the problems is still the attitude at the very top. One of the most disgraceful recent incidents, which shocked many people, was the article in Wisden Cricket Monthly, which tried to make out that black people—simply because of their colour—could not play cricket for England with the same commitment, determination or passion as people with white skins. As recently as yesterday, Philip de Freitas was awarded damages for that article, as was Devon Malcolm. I want to say, on behalf of anyone who is a cricket lover, whatever the colour of their skin, that that article was a tremendous slur on black and Asian people who play for England at a national or county level and I am surprised that that publication ever considered it worth publishing.

Friends and colleagues who are more familiar with the world of football than me say that, in many ways, attitudes of managers have moved on in recent years. However, not so long ago, even in football, where black footballers have excelled, managers had some very prejudicial attitudes to black players.

I recall Jim Smith, who was then manager of Queen's Park Rangers, saying that black players use very little intelligence and get by on sheer natural ability. It used to be very common for football managers to say that black footballers may have had flair but that they did not have the work rate, did not want to work and did not like the cold. I do not hear that so often now, but it was not so long ago.

Sadly, racist chanting and the flinging of bananas on the pitch continue. When I hear, from people who are now friends of mine, what they had to put up with as young black professionals going on to the pitch, I wonder at their nerve, determination and courage. How many of us could go on to a sports pitch and stand thousands of people chanting abuse at us because of the colour of our skin? Thankfully, that has lessened in recent years, as many of the top teams have star black players. However, as recently as last season, Derby County was forced to take its two black players off the field during a match against Millwall as a result of the racist chanting of Millwall supporters.

Football spectators are not the only offenders. Martin Offiah, who is a rugby league star, has said:

"Black players still get taunts at nearly every game, and occasionally you can still get banana skins thrown at you."

A recent survey found that every black and Asian player in professional rugby league has suffered racial abuse at some time.

Club cricket and club rugby were mentioned earlier. I have not played sport since I was at school, but I have friends and relatives who are enthusiastic players of cricket and rugby. When they were at school and occasionally went out into the home counties or the shire counties to compete against some of those clubs at rugby or cricket, they did not meet—at least in the club room afterwards—a positive attitude which would have encouraged them, as young men from inner-city Brixton or Hackney, to continue playing those games once they left school.

We must consider some of the social attitudes surrounding club rugby union and club cricket if we want to find the answer to the question why fewer young black people and fewer inner-city young people than we would like remain involved in sports once they leave school.

The issue in relation to race that is most controversial is the incidence of racism and fascism among supporters. Everyone in the House was ashamed by the display put on by supporters of England at the match in Dublin last year. We read regularly about the incidence of organised racism, about Combat 18 and—more frighteningly—about the extent to which small but organised fascist groups of supporters throughout Europe are linking up to abuse and attack players when our English national team goes abroad. I want, and I know that many black sportsmen want, the Football Association and many football clubs to take a strong position on that. It is difficult for black sportsmen and sportswomen to speak out about that issue because, if they do so, they are thought of as whingeing and not showing a British stiff upper lip. That is partly why I welcome the opportunity to raise the issue in the House.

In Italy, where there was especially bad racist abuse of two young Dutch players, there was a day of action, and a banner reading "No to racism" was worn by all the players. I and many people, including some of our sportsmen and sportswomen, want the clubs, organisations and officials to be much more vocal and more definite and to play much more of a leadership role in making it clear to spectators that racist abuse and racist chanting are unacceptable in football and other games. Specifically, I want the Football Association to support more strongly the Commission for Racial Equality campaign, "Let's Kick Racism out of Football." Some clubs have done a great deal. Sheffield Wednesday, of which my hon. Friend the Member for Bassetlaw (Mr. Ashton) is director, has played a leading role but there is more to be done. The fact that individual black men and women in football and other sports cannot speak as openly about it as they would like does not mean that it is not still an issue.

One cannot play sport as a competitor for ever, so some thought should also be given to how possible it is for black sportsmen who leave active sport to move on to coaching and management. Strangely, there is not one black coach or manager in the football league at present. If we are good enough to play, why are we not good enough to manage or coach?

I have already said how significant sport and sportsmen are for our young people, especially the type of young people in Hackney whom I represent. On issues such as racism, sportsmen can play a leadership role and encourage values. It is time to end the conspiracy of silence, and time for people with influence in sport, such as the sports administrators and some of my colleagues in the House, to take a more positive lead. When apartheid was still in place in South Africa, it used to be fashionable among Tory Members of Parliament to say that we should not mix sport and politics. But sport has always played a role in society—setting standards, inculcating values and demonstrating what society believes in.

Not everyone in the House remembers the 1936 Olympics, but we all know what happened there, when Jesse Owens, the black American sprinter, won four gold medals and said more by his performance than anyone could have said in words about the shame and indignity of Nazism and about segregation in his own country, the United States of America. If sporting administrators and people of influence in sport—important people such as Members of Parliament—took racism and racist abuse more seriously and gave a lead, that would say more than mere words and speeches ever could about what we as a society think about equality and justice for all people, regardless of their colour.

Mr. Geoffrey Clifton-Brown (Cirencester and Tewkesbury): I am sorry to have to follow the hon. Member for Hackney, North and Stoke Newington (Ms Abbott), because I profoundly disagree with what she said. The Minister of State picked up on an item this morning in the "Today" programme—I do not know whether the hon. Lady heard it—about Devon Malcolm in Soweto encouraging young black Africans to take part in sport. They are turning up in their thousands to see the English cricket team, and trying to emulate them.

Surely that is a classic example of how sport can start to break down the ethnic and social barriers. People who play team sports and other sports have to rub shoulders with each other. Sometimes they win, sometimes they lose. It seems to me that that breaks down ethnic and social barriers more quickly than almost anything else.

Ms Abbott rose—

Mr. Clifton-Brown: I shall give way to the hon. Lady, but time is short.

Ms Abbott: Time is short, but I cannot believe that the hon. Gentleman was listening to what I said. The question I asked about what happened to Devon Malcolm was: why should someone who plays with such courage for England, and who is doing good work in South Africa, have to read the sort of slur that he saw in Wisden Cricket Monthly, implying that simply because of the colour of his skin he was not playing his heart out for England? That was my point, and the hon. Member for Cirencester and Tewkesbury (Mr. Clifton-Brown) could not have been listening to it.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: I hear what the hon. Lady says. Nevertheless, probably 25 per cent. of our cricket team are now from ethnic backgrounds. I remember when Basil d'Oliveira was one of the first ethnic people to play in our cricket team, but now we are becoming a multi-ethnic sporting nation, and we are all the better for it. We should play up those advantages rather than always emphasising the divisions in our society.

I warmly welcome the policy and the document issued today. The Prime Minister wrote in the preamble:

"My ambition is simply stated. It is to put sport back at the heart of weekly life in every school."

[Mr. Clifton-Brown]

He also said that he wanted

"to bring every child in every school within reach of adequate sporting facilities by the year 2000."

That is an exemplary goal for which to aim.

Many hon. Members have said that throughout our history we have not been especially well equipped with sporting attributes. We have forgotten the lessons that the Greeks and Romans taught us about the necessity for physical fitness and sporting competition as part of a complete education. We forgot that during the 1960s and 1970s, when so many other ills affected our education system. The nation was deemed to be very unfit during recruitment for the second world war, and that is why the training and recreation legislation stated that sport should be given a greater priority.

My hon. Friend the Minister pointed out that television and other media aids have resulted in children today spending far too much time in a sedentary way of life, instead of a physical way of life in which sport is the primary activity. I have thought for a long time that the school day of 8.30 am to 3.30 pm is far too short, and I welcome the teachers who are good enough to give up their time off for free to teach extra-curricular sporting activities. That is to be welcomed, and teachers should where necessary be rewarded for doing that.

I realise that time is getting on, and I shall make my remarks very brief. I should like to bring to the attention of the Minister a problem with a school in my constituency. It is an excellent school, which caters for children aged from eight to 16 years, and it has built a lavish sports hall. The hall was built following a great community effort and with the assistance of grants from the Foundation for Sport and the Arts and the Sports Council.

The school, which is grant-maintained, has now run into a problem with VAT. It received a grant from the Department for Education and Employment to cover an increase in VAT, but a condition of the original grants from the two bodies was that the school had to use the hall for the local community. That is quite right, and everyone would expect that. But the school has run into the VAT trap. If more than 10 per cent. of the use of the hall is by the community, the school will get clobbered for VAT on the entire capital value—including the grants—of the sports hall. In this case, the VAT would amount to some £40,000 or £50,000.

I have taken the matter up with the Department for Education and Employment and with Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, but I have not received satisfactory replies. I urge my hon. Friend the Minister—who knows about the problem as I have spoken to him about it privately—to make representations to the Treasury to see whether we can find a way round the problem. It would be unfortunate for all that community effort to be jeopardised.

I welcome a number of things in the paper, and I shall mention one or two in the time available. I particularly welcome the fact that the national lottery is to put £300 million into sport, of which £100 million will go to a new national academy. I wish to make one or two suggestions for that academy. The sports councils were required to submit a plan, as my hon. Friend said, by September, but it has not been mentioned whether that was adhered to. The tenders are to be let by mid-1996, and we hope that the national academy will be built fairly soon thereafter. I hope that that timetable does not slip too much.

The national academy should be built along the lines of the excellent academies that we have. We must look at them and see which sports are well represented, and we must make sure that other sports that are not so well represented at present are included in the national academy.

My hon. Friend the Minister has been to Adelaide to look at its national academy, and I hope that our academy will provide scholarships to allow our best and most talented sportsmen to go to foreign institutes of sporting excellence. By doing that, we can start to encourage exchange visits to our academy, so that our young sportsmen can mix with sportsmen from other countries. They will gain enormously from doing so.

The policy document encourages all schoolchildren to take a greater part in sport. It also mentions the further and higher education sector, where the greatest improvements could be made. There are 3 million students in further and higher education, yet only 20,000 of them regularly entered college competitions in 1993-94. We should encourage children not only to take part in school sports but voluntarily to continue their sporting activities into further and higher education and throughout their adult lives.

I commend my hon. Friend's actions in respect of the national lottery, which are an excellent way of starting to improve the nation's sporting abilities. The Chipping Campden swimming pool complex in my constituency has just been given a grant of £109,000 to improve its facilities for the benefit of not only that school but the whole community.

Like the hon. and learned Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell), I am keen that the excellent sporting facilities provided basically by public money through the lottery should be fully utilised. It is no use having a wonderful sports facility that is used only partly, during the day. It should be used during the day, in the evening and before breakfast as well. The lottery is beginning to involve local communities in that way. Deer Park school in Cirencester is an example of a way of encouraging children, adolescents and adults to participate in sport throughout their lives.

The whole nation feels better when we have a great sports triumph. We all remember England winning the World cup in 1966. We all feel joy when one of our football teams takes the European cup or when our sportsmen and women win Olympic gold medals. I hope that we shall win medals in profusion at next year's Olympics in Atlanta. I have no doubt that my hon. Friend's policy document will sow the seeds for the future, so that at successive Olympics—and I hope that we may look forward to the Olympic games being staged in London in 2004—sportsmen and women from all ethnic backgrounds representing the United Kingdom will be well up in the league table of gold, silver and bronze medals. That would be no small tribute to the work of my hon. Friend the Minister and of the Government in producing their policy statement.

2.1 pm

Mr. Alan Keen (Feltham and Heston): I am sorry that the hon. Member for Stockton, South (Mr. Devlin) has left the Chamber because his speech filled me with nostalgia, when he mentioned the disabled and Thornaby. I remember playing table tennis against The Teesside Deaf team on many occasions. We had some great battles. They made up for the disadvantage of not being able to hear the ball bounce and come off the bat by making a tremendous noise throughout the game. I send them my best wishes all these years later.

I do not have time fully to combat the remarks of the hon. Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway), but I know that the Labour group on Ealing council would not be cutting back on sport and sports grounds were it not under such pressure from central Government. It is unfair to attack the council on that basis.

Sport is an integral part of the lives of many people, but many others have dropped it. We must encourage them to participate in sport again. For me as a youngster, sport was my one interest in life when there was little else to do. It is more necessary these days than for many years that people have the opportunity to involve themselves in sport—and not just youngsters. I was delighted to come out of cricket retirement last season, to be rewarded by a place on the Lords and Commons tour of South Africa. We enjoyed ourselves greatly and made some tremendous links. I was pleased to see the England team playing on the same Alexandra Township ground that we used, and at which the Prime Minister opened new facilities earlier this year. The England team opened the pavilion that was being built while we were there. Such links are well worth while.

I shall probably never reach the Opposition Front Bench, and even if I did it would be an anticlimax after sitting on the front bench so often at Premier league football grounds—frequently next to Jack Charlton in my previous life as a tactical scout for Middlesbrough. So I do not mind too much if I never reach the Front Bench here. I am happy to see the Premier league flourishing. Grounds are full, television gives the game great prominence, and the world's best players are coming to England for the first time in ages. All that is good.

We should also give some credit to the press. Good reporting has taken some of the heat and hatred out of games. It is useful to hear people such as Brian Glanville and Patrick Barclay discussing tactics before and after games, letting fans know that there is more to football than just bashing the ball from end to end. In the past, bad reporting gave the impression that a game played in September was the decider for the championship of London. That just gets fans agitated before the game even starts.

The good reporting that I have just mentioned contrasts starkly with the disgraceful—although tongue-in-cheek—article in the Evening Standard the other week criticising the transfer of Juninho to Middlesbrough. I welcome him and his family to Britain. He will bring flair, and more, to English football, strengthening our sporting links with other nations. I congratulate Middlesbrough club too.

Bill King, chair of the Vauxhall Conference, addressed those of us who serve on the Back-Bench football committee the other night. It was good to hear his attitude to maintaining the links between schools throughout the country, even in what are not always thought of as footballing areas. The conference provides the links to clubs through the process of relegation and promotion through to the football league. I agreed with the Minister about the need to involve teachers and to take some of the other pressures off them so that they can participate again as they used to when I was a youngster. That will help football to flourish.

I welcome the Minister's commitment to consultations on the centres of excellence. I am not completely comfortable with the whole idea. We do not want youngsters to be isolated from the rest of society. They need to be involved in normal school life and not start to think that they are special—that could harm them more than help them.

I am sorry that it took Mr. Murdoch and Sir John Hall to bring about the new thinking in rugby. I am also sorry that the hon. Member for Suffolk, Central (Mr. Lord) said what he said. I was going to use the words "bone-headed prejudice", but perhaps I will not after all. I understand his views; people have enjoyed the sport as it is for many years and change is always difficult.

As for boxing, I voted against banning it the last time a vote was held. I am finding it hard now to sustain my point of view. As the hon. Member for Ealing, North said, swift moves must be taken to improve the sport; otherwise public opinion against it will become so strong that it will be hard to resist.

No one should doubt the value of sport. The youngsters in the townships of South Africa are in the same position as I was as a young child: sport is the only thing there is. I do not say for a moment that sport is all that is necessary to make South Africa flourish. It needs inward investment as well, but sport is playing a huge part, and I am proud that Britain has played her part in helping the townships of South Africa. I am sure that sport will help South Africa to flourish, to the benefit, eventually, of the whole of Africa.

2.9 pm

Mr. Piers Merchant (Beckenham): As the general election reached its climax, I remember knocking on the door of one of my would-be constituents to introduce myself. I was greeted by a rather unhealthy-looking gentleman who said, "I don't have time to talk to you now because I am watching the election on television." That starkly brought home to me my personal lack of appeal and the grip that television has on people's lives. In many instances they seem to prefer to live in the fantasy world that is presented to them on the box than to experience reality. Anything that can be done to get people out of their chairs to engage in a healthy pursuit is a positive move. What can be better than sport?

I very much welcome the remarks of my hon. Friend the Minister and the paper that he published before the summer recess. The document sets out many major steps forward. It has been warmly welcomed in my constituency, which is especially well endowed with sporting facilities. For example, there is the national sports centre at Crystal Palace. It has been a centre of sporting activity for about 130 years. The original British Olympian Association was based there. W. G. Grace played there. Cup finals before the first world war were held there. It has been a national sports centre for just over 30 years. There are excellent facilities, including a large stadium, an Olympic-size swimming pool and a large sports hall. It manages to combine the staging of major international events alongside important community provision. It is so large that it is able to keep community provision running even when international events are taking place. The centre is an important facility for my constituents and the borough and for the surrounding parts of London. It is strategically situated at the boundary point of five different boroughs.

Secondly, there is tennis at Beckenham each year. The event has been running since the last century and it is one of the major tennis events in the country. Indeed, it is an international event. It is privately sponsored and attracts the leading world players.

Thirdly, there is a profusion of private clubs and private provision. Some of the most well-known clubs in the country are based at Beckenham. The Park Langley club, for example, recently won a national award. There are also three major sports grounds attached to three international British-based banks. They are all in the small area of my constituency. I have an interest in sport, therefore, as have the majority of my constituents.

Fourthly, there is the role of the local authority. Bromley has a reputation of being one of the leading local authorities for the provision of sport. It carries out best practice. I hope that in the implementation of the policies that flow from my hon. Friend's paper he will take into account best practice and examples of the good provision that already exists. That point was raised by the hon. Member for Vauxhall (Miss Hoey) most persuasively, along with other valid comments, including the importance of reinvigorating school sport teaching. It is clear that the role of local authorities is important.

Despite the national sports centre's great reputation and past, it has problems, and two specific ones have been identified. First, it is in desperate need of modernisation in parts. An examination of the facilities immediately demonstrates that. The second problem is that it is funded entirely by the Sports Council. It cannot have access to any national lottery money because the Sports Council is a distributor. The centre is missing out when other comparative facilities in the area can attract generous funding. I hope that my hon. Friend will be able to find some way of getting round that problem, of rearranging the structure or detaching the national sports centres from the Sports Council, in a way that will enable them to get their fair share of national lottery money. They are not asking for any more than their fair share, but they are in danger of being left behind by an unfortunate anomaly.

The national sports centre has another problem: access. That cannot be entirely solved. It happens, historically, to be in a place that was once very accessible, which is why the Crystal Palace was originally built there and why for many decades it attracted millions of Londoners every weekend, and, indeed, during the week as well. But the way in which transport has developed and the way in which the population has grown makes the area difficult to access now. I hope that means can be found to encourage the five London boroughs involved to work together more effectively to improve the road system that feeds Crystal Palace—it could feasibly be improved—and that the rail operators will consider ways of ensuring better services to the railway station there. I believe that, with co-ordination and encouragement, that could be developed to overcome the problem.

I now return to my comments about local authorities and will give a few examples of the way in which the London borough of Bromley has been so effective. Its own strategy document, "Building Partnerships through Sport", has provided a broad framework for encouraging sporting provision in Bromley and has stressed partnership opportunities. Bromley has a sports partnership fund, which is used to enable that to happen, and in particular an active lifestyles project, which is designed to encourage sport as a means of building health in the community. That has been praised by the Health Education Authority, which has described Bromley as a model borough. There are many examples of partnership with private operators to enable extra money to be put into sport in the borough. The result is that Bromley, which enters a full range of sporting events between boroughs, has succeeded in winning, for example, the swimming championship every year for the past nine years. It also plays an active role in the London youth games, which are held annually at the national sports centre at Crystal Palace.

For all those reasons, my hon. Friend's policies and his Department's policy document have been warmly welcomed in my borough. I hope that in implementing it he will take into account the points that I have made and the importance of the contribution that local authorities are making to sport, and that he will use the policies to encourage best practice to be followed even more, because I think that the entire population will be the beneficiaries from encouraging sport more readily, and my hon. Friend will get the credit that he deserves for giving the excellent lead that he has given in this area.

2.17 pm

Mr. Pendry: With the leave of the House, I begin by saying that this has been a very good debate. I am pleased that everyone who has wished to speak has been able to do so. That means by definition that both myself and the Minister will not be able to reply as much as we would like to the many points that have been made.

I hope that I was not too destructive in my opening remarks. I did not intend to be. I really meant, of course, that there is much in the document that we embrace. I was merely making the point that I recognised some of the parts of it from yesteryear.

Will the Minister clarify the status of the document when he replies? He calls it a consultative document; the hon. Member for Stockton, South (Mr. Devlin) calls it a White Paper; the Prime Minister calls it a press conference document; and the paper calls itself a policy statement. It would be nice if we knew exactly what it was.

I must say to the hon. Member for Suffolk, Central (Mr. Lord) that I will not talk behind his back. I will not talk about what he said at all, only because of time—no discourtesy.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bassetlaw (Mr. Ashton), of course, knows a great deal about soccer, being a director of Sheffield Wednesday, but I concurred much more with my hon. Friend the Member for Hackney, North and Stoke Newington (Ms Abbott) on football shirts for youngsters. I think that the pressure is on the families and on the mothers in particular, and that should be looked at.

The hon. Member for Beckenham (Mr. Merchant) raised the question of the national stadium and many hon. Members pitched in with a good deal of passion. My hon. Friend the Member for Vauxhall (Miss Hoey) was rightly concerned about London being the rightful place for the national stadium. The hon. Member for Wyre Forest (Mr. Coombs) was concerned that it should go to Birmingham, and the Sheffield case was made by my hon. Friend the Member for Bassetlaw. The bids that I have seen are all good and I should not like to be the person to have to make the decision.

The hon. and learned Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell) always makes a thoughtful contribution to such debates and I always enjoy them because he speaks with experience. I was pleased that he raised the plight of his constituent, an athlete with disabilities. He was right to make that distinction in the definition. The hon. and learned Gentleman, the hon. Member for Falmouth and Camborne (Mr. Coe) and I have written to a number of companies in an attempt to assist the Paralympics competitors to get to Atlanta. We have received some response, but not enough. When a review is made of the lottery, it should consider the hon. and learned Gentleman's case for a trust fund for athletes, not only for those with disabilities, but for young athletes who cannot make some of the meets that they need to attend in order to progress.

My hon. Friend the Member for Vauxhall, as well as making a passionate plea for London, made a number of other interesting points, including one about football and sleaze, with which she has been very much involved. She may not receive much satisfaction from the Minister of State, but the Labour party will shortly issue its football charter, which addresses the sort of issues that she has raised.

I think that I may have lost the friendship of the hon. Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) half way through the debate. The Labour-controlled authority in which his constituency resides faces some difficult choices. It is difficult to pinpoint any particular authority—Labour or Conservative—that makes those difficult choices. I urge him to join me in making representations to the Minister of State to have circular 909 repealed—that would be a much more satisfactory way forward.

The subject of boxing has been placed in context. I declare an interest as a steward of the British Boxing Board of Control and chairman of the safety committee which, only this week, issued new safety guidelines. I am sure that hon. Members will have read them and realised that they are a step forward. I hope that I do not lose my hon. Friend the Member for Feltham and Heston (Mr. Keen) in the Lobby—I do not want to ban boxing as that would drive it underground and it would be a far more dangerous sport.

My hon. Friend the Member for Hackney, North and Stoke Newington was right to raise the issue of racism in sport. I am pleased to have been associated with the campaign, "Let's Kick Racism out of Football." The FA, the Professional Footballers Association, the premiership and football supporters are all joining together on that issue. The Labour party's document on football clearly tackles that problem.

I knew that my hon. Friend the Member for Feltham and Heston used to be a scout for Middlesbrough, and I am pleased that that team is doing so well, but I did not know of his cricketing prowess. I must talk to him more about that. I know that he is a keen sportsman. I would not rule out the possibility of his finishing up on the Front Bench—he is far too modest.

I have a great deal of affection for the Minister of State—it may not always have come through in the debate, but I think that he is a good Minister and cares about sport. He puts in effort and I wish him well in his endeavours. He will have a few battles ahead, not just with the Department for Education and Employment, but possibly with the Treasury as well. I wish him well; we all wish to see a much better deal for sport in this country. The document points the right way on many issues and when the Minister of State faces that battle he can rely on our support.

2.23 pm

Mr. Sproat: With the leave of the House, Madam Deputy Speaker, perhaps I may say a few words in reply.

I should first thank the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde (Mr. Pendry) for his kind words at the end of his speech. The hon. Member for Vauxhall (Miss Hoey) said that we tried to keep party politics out of this subject and today's debate shows that we succeed, more or less. Having made a long speech at the beginning of the debate, it is right that I have only a short time left in which to reply, and I will not be able to answer all the points raised. I have taken note of the issues relating to revenue funding and the need to support athletes.

I shall set at rest the mind of the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde about what the paper is called—not that it matters a cuss what it is called because it is the biggest revolution in sport in 50 years. It is a policy statement and my wise officials tell me that it was not published as a White Paper because a price must be put on such a document and it must be distributed through Her Majesty's Stationery Office.

We wanted to send the document free to every school in the country, which is what we did. We originally printed about 70,000 copies but had to print another 15,000. If it had been a White Paper, not a word in it would have been different—except for the price on the front cover.

The hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde was a little grudging when he said that four months had elapsed since the publication of the document. It is actually 15 working days of the House, but whether it is four months or 15 days it is now with us. I want to make it clear that we did not mention the very important needs of the disabled in the paper for the same reason that we did not concentrate specifically on individual sports or matters of gender or race. The policy statement is for people of all abilities. Those are the words that we use in, I think, paragraph 3, although I do not make my defence on that. Of course we realise the importance of supporting the disabled and shall continue to do that. I have taken on board the remarks by the hon. and learned Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell) about Miss Caroline Innes. He had the courtesy to tell me about that case and if he will write to me about it, I shall do everything that I possibly can.

I became so concerned about your predecessor in the Chair, Madam Deputy Speaker, sitting on the edge of his seat after I had been speaking for a mere one hour and seven minutes that I cut my speech and did not say what I should have said about the regional councils for sport and recreation and the important role that I see for ministerial nominees. I want such nominees to continue, but as members of the sports councils in the regions. They will be rather like, although not absolutely the same as, non-executive directors of a subsidiary company. I or whoever makes the choice will choose five of those nominees from the 10 regions to sit on the English Sports Council so that there will always be a proper relationship between what people are thinking in the regions and what they are thinking at the centre.

I want the Sports Council and the regions to play an ever more important role and to concentrate on making certain that schools are doing all that they can for sport and that the links between clubs and schools become closer and more effective. That is why I have said that the Sports Council and the regions should step back from the old regional councils for sport and recreation. Local authorities will still be free to set up their own new forums, but I do not want to have national sports policy twisted and diverted—no doubt in many cases it would be well twisted—to the needs of local authorities.

The Sports Council has the precise aims that I have set out in the policy statement and I want it to concentrate on that and not get tied up in producing yet another strategy paper for sport and leisure in the next five years or for whatever period. I see important roles for the Sports Council, the regions and the ministerial nominees.

School playing fields have been mentioned yet again. I make it clear that the freedom given to schools to dispose in certain cases of their assets, subject to guidance from the Department for Education and Employment, was a good extension of their freedom. But that freedom, which was right in principle, operated badly and resulted in the selling of too many playing fields. We are currently consulting on the matter and I hope that in future the Sports Council will become a statutory consultee on whether a school playing field or any other playing field should be sold. It will be able to say no and its advice will have to be considered when decisions are made.

As well as stopping, I hope, the gratuitous selling of school playing fields we are making national lottery money available to buy back ground—not the same ground, obviously, because if a supermarket has been built on a former playing field it cannot be bought back, but an equivalent amount elsewhere for school playing fields. That is roughly how it will work.

We have here new structures—the United Kingdom Sports Council and the English Sports Council—and the enhanced role of the Sports Council in the regions. We will have new money from the national lottery. I hope that it is not just capital and that we will find a way to give some revenue funding, pace the hon. and learned Member for Fife, North-East. The British academy of sport will be one way of helping top athletes.

We have the structure, the money and the vision, from schools right the way through to international excellence and gold medals. That is what the country has needed for a long time. I hope that the House will feel that it is getting that in this paper and I am extremely grateful—

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order.

2.30 pm

Mr. Simon Hughes (Southwark and Bermondsey): I welcome the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department to his position and am grateful for his attendance. I have had a brief conversation with him on this subject so that, I hope, his Department is not taken by surprise by the matters that I wish to raise.

In summary, this is what I might call an everyday tale of dissatisfaction with solicitors. It raises, however, important issues, of which the central one is how people should be able to have effective, efficient and speedy remedy against professional inadequacy.

I am conscious of two preliminary matters. First, I have an interest to declare—I am a barrister. I do not practise, although I am a member of chambers, but this matter is not an inter-professional dispute, and has arisen entirely since I ceased to practise regularly, and through my constituency work.

Secondly, all professionals—they include us—are at risk of not doing everything exactly as they should. The question is: where is the accountability, especially of those professionals who are paid money by clients or by the state, in this case, through the legal aid budget, to do a job, and then fail? This case is a good example of a bad case and it comes against the background of increasing dissatisfaction with the way in which complaints against solicitors are dealt with.

I have a constituent called Michael Sullivan who lives in Rotherhithe and who will be listening to this debate. He came to see me earlier this year. In summary, his case is as follows. In 1991, Mr. Sullivan employed solicitors to assist him with an application for a betting shop licence in Enfield. In the event, he did not succeed in obtaining the licence. As a result of instructing solicitors in that matter, he received a bill for £12,500, for what he was generally advised and from his experience believed to be a £2,000 job. He was also told by those solicitors that he had lost the deposit that he had put on the shop.

Mr. Sullivan was advised by those solicitors to take advice when they sued him for the £12,500, and so he went to another firm of solicitors to gain its assistance. It was instructed to represent him in defending the action from the first firm—a St. Albans firm called Brethertons—and was so employed for a couple of years on his behalf. The second firm—the relevant firm for this debate—is called Fraser MacDonald, a Sevenoaks firm.

Fraser MacDonald eventually recovered the £5,000 and costs that were the subject of the deposit. There are other matters that relate to the other solicitors' competence and therefore there is a whole web of issues, but I am concentrating on the one that is most current and relevant. Fraser MacDonald led Mr. Sullivan to believe that it would pass the £5,000 on to him, subject to appropriate deductions. The firm said that it would put £2,000 aside for those deductions and that, therefore, £3,000 was left. That was at the beginning of 1994. Later last year Mr. Sullivan was told, "No. Sorry. You won't get any of that money. It has all been used up."

So, for the second time, Mr. Sullivan changed solicitors and instructed a firm called Needleman Knowles, which has acted for him and, from my reading of the papers, appears to have done a perfectly competent job. Needleman Knowles needed the file held by the previous solicitors and wanted them also, on Mr. Sullivan's behalf, to account for the money that they had received. The evidence from the file is that it had been received—there is no dispute about that.

The story of Mr. Sullivan's complaint is the saga of the time that it has taken to make any progress in getting the file or the money and, therefore, any legal satisfaction. Of course, people can use a range of procedures in such a case and further procedures are open to Mr. Sullivan. He knows that, the Minister knows it and I know it. My complaint is not that he has exhausted his remedies and not been dealt with satisfactorily, but that we have reached this date and still have got only this far. To be honest, the case is one of justice delayed meaning justice denied.

As a Member of Parliament and from my time at the Bar, I know that one sometimes gets litigious and vexatious litigants—all my colleagues know it well, including you, Madam Deputy Speaker. Some constituents are not easy to handle and nor were some clients when I was a practising barrister. I can inform the Minister that I have no reason to believe that Mr. Sullivan is such a person. He has a good case and has sought to conduct it, and have it conducted, perfectly properly. He acted on advice as regards the solicitors he instructed and took advice that those solicitors could deal competently with the matter.

As a result of this saga, Mr. Sullivan has become ill through the mental stress and has effectively suffered a family breakdown, although that is not something that he has asked me expressly to reveal. He has also been out of work. All those problems are not unrelated. If a person becomes embroiled in a huge battle about money with lawyers, they can drain him dry and leave him in a very bad state indeed. It is to his credit that Mr. Sullivan has managed to pick himself up; he now has some work and, I hope, will be much better again if and when this matter is out of the way.

I will be selective about the chronology, but it is important. I shall quote from the letter sent by Needleman Knowles to Mr. Sullivan on 13 April. It sets out the chronology as follows:

"8-10-94 Letter from Fraser MacDonald stating that 'in the next day or so I shall be preparing my legal aid bill, whereupon I shall let you have the same, together with all of the papers . . .'

12-10-94 Legal Aid Certificate showing transfer of legal aid to ourselves

18-10-94 Letter to Fraser MacDonald requesting the delivery up of the file

20-10-94 Letter chasing up Fraser MacDonald for the file

28-10-94 Second chase up letter to Fraser MacDonald for the file

15-11-94 Third chase up letter to Fraser MacDonald for the file

28-11-94 Fourth chase up letter to Fraser MacDonald and putting them on notice that we will be writing to the Solicitors Complaints Bureau

28-11-94 Letter to Solicitors Complaints Bureau

05-12-94 Fifth chase up letter to Fraser MacDonald

05-12-94 Letter from Solicitors Complaints Bureau stating that they have written to Fraser MacDonald requesting that they deliver up the papers to us within seven days

14-12-94"—

two days past the seven days—

"Letter to Solicitors Complaints Bureau from us stating that we have not received the papers and asking them what is the next step

18-12-94 Sixth chase up letter to Fraser MacDonald

06-01-95 Letter to Legal Aid Board requesting an extension of the legal aid certificate to sue Fraser MacDonald

09-01-95 Letter from Legal Aid Board stating that our letter has been registered as a Stage One Complaint

09-01-95 Letter from Solicitors Complaints Bureau enclosing letter they sent to Fraser MacDonald stating that if he does not deliver up the papers within 7 days they shall consider referring the matter to the Conduct Unit of the Bureau

13-01-95 Letter from Legal Aid Board stating that they have written to Fraser MacDonald for a report . . .

25-01-95 Letter to Solicitors Complaints Bureau stating that no papers have been forthcoming

25-01-95 Letter to Legal Aid Board stating that nothing has been heard from Fraser MacDonald

31-01-95 Letter from Legal Aid Board stating that they have written to Fraser MacDonald again requesting that they respond to the LAB within 14 days".

I remind the House that initially a response had been asked for within seven days some two months before.

The letter continues:

"15-02-95 Letter to Legal Aid Board stating that no papers have been forthcoming

27-02-95 Letter to Legal Aid Board stating that still no papers have been forthcoming

02-03-95 Letter from Legal Aid Board stating that they are referring the matter to the Solicitors Complaints Bureau."

At this stage, I made an attempt to find out what was going on, but the Solicitors Complaints Bureau said that it could not find the file. That may have been because of a change of address; for this I am not blaming the bureau.

To its credit, the Legal Aid Board then made its attitude clear. The manager of its office in Brighton, David Keegan, wrote on 20 April to the director of the Solicitors Complaints Bureau. He said:

"I write to report to you the unsatisfactory service provided by Messrs. Fraser MacDonald in relation to the transfer of Mr. Sullivan's legal aid certificate in that,

a) They have to date failed to transfer the case file of Mr. Sullivan, delaying his defence against claim. The delay so far has been 26 weeks . . .

b) They have failed to respond to the five letters sent by the Legal Aid Board over the past three months.

c) Mr. MacDonald has declined to accept numerous telephone calls from the Board.

d) On 8th March 1995, Mr. MacDonald left a telephone message stating that 'the problem has been solved' and that he would ring the Area Manager the next day. This did not happen, neither was the problem solved.

The appalling performance of Messrs. Fraser MacDonald must be considered as unsatisfactory professional conduct and may lead to a professional negligence claim if the client is disadvantaged.

In my time as Area Manager I have not come across such a flagrant disregard for the needs of the client and the duty of a solicitor under legal aid. May I suggest that if Mr. MacDonald does not comply with the requirements promptly he should be struck off to protect clients and the legal aid fund."

The Solicitors Complaints Bureau sent a letter to Fraser MacDonald dated 13 May, asking for an explanation within eight days and setting out a series of complaints and its advice as to what he should do. Mr. Sullivan then wrote a letter to the Solicitors Complaints Bureau dated 19 June effectively making a series of allegations which I shall not repeat but which reveal his complete dissatisfaction with the system. His letter ends:

"I have been comprehensively raped by the Legal System in this country, suffering an assault spanning seven years and am asked to accept that this is a glorious establishment envied the world over by an unnamed person at your bureau.

I am outraged that I have had to fight against such a corrupt establishment alone, suffering financially, mentally and physically, as confirmed by a letter enclosed from my consultant at Guy's Hospital.

I am sending a copy of this to my M.P. . . . who is carrying my fight to the House of Commons."

The SCB's proposed remedy was the draft report by the adjudication and appeals committee stating that Mr. Fraser MacDonald should be rebuked. Indeed, the committee decided on 30 August, via its conduct committee

"To rebuke Mr. F. MacDonald . . . severely for his delay in failing to transfer Mr. Sullivan's file of papers" and stated that it expected him

"to reply to Mr. Sullivan's outstanding queries regarding monies paid within 21 days . . . of the decision".

Twenty-one days passed. Nothing had been heard within 28 days, which was the period for appeal. Then, the SCB recently said to my constituent that it would "send a reminder". That is the saga so far. It is entirely unsatisfactory.

The SCB is one of three legs of complaint, the disciplinary tribunal and the ombudsman being the other two. The SCB says in its advertising material, entitled "100 Facts at a Glance":

"This is how the profession's money is spent on a service in which both the public and the solicitors' profession may have confidence."

Well, I say to the Minister, the public do not. The Solicitors Complaints Bureau advertises, in a further leaflet headed, "What To Do If You Are Dissatisfied With Your Solicitor", that it is an organisation

"set up by the Law Society to investigate impartially complaints".

I do not think that that can be true either, given that it is run by solicitors.

As set out in the leaflet, what the bureau can do, and the maximum power that it has, is, where appropriate, to "Reduce a solicitor's bill in whole or in part.

Order compensation of up to"—

there are qualifications on that—and

"Order a solicitor to correct a mistake at his/her own expense."

You can go to the solicitors disciplinary tribunal eventually, Madam Deputy Speaker, if you believe that there has been unfitting conduct and breaches of the rules of negligence, and if, at the end of your Solicitors Complaints Bureau pursuit—which in Mr. Sullivan's case has now taken about a year so far and has got as far as a rebuke—you are dissatisfied, you can go to the ombudsman.

The ombudsman can make quite strong recommendations, but he cannot make anyone do anything. The ombudsman is—wait for it—a lawyer.

The Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (Mr. John M. Taylor) indicated dissent.

Mr. Hughes: In that case, I beg his pardon. The ombudsman is not a lawyer. Nevertheless, he cannot make anybody do anything. He can make recommendations and publicise the fact that people have not acted on them, but he cannot take action personally.

I have described a specific case. However, in the past few weeks there has been the publication of a controversial Consumers Association report dated 2 October, entitled "Solicitors—advice you can't trust". It sets out a litany of complaints about solicitors and suggests that the present complaints procedure is entirely unsatisfactory.

Then, on 10 October, there was a very effective article in the law section of The Times, headed "Shoddy firms and a cranky complaints system ruin clients, says Gary Slapper". Dr. Slapper is principal lecturer at the law school at the university of Staffordshire. He says about the 600 complaints a week that land on the desk of the Solicitors Complaints Bureau:

"This level of dissatisfaction is quite alarming, especially as complaints can go to the SCB only if the complaints procedure at the firm . . . has been exhausted."

Dr. Slapper goes on to show how our legal system still appears entirely like a system in which, in any legal quarrel, whoever loses, the lawyers always win. I commend anyone who reads Hansard to read Dr. Slapper's article, which tells another unhappy tale.

We need to tackle those issues. Given that the Government and the profession are considering a better complaints system, we need to come up with a far better system of speedy and effective complaint, and to do so soon. We need to end self-regulation and ensure that solicitors are not seen to be dealing with solicitors. We need to correct the ombudsman's lack of power to act and give him or her that power.

We need a much speedier system of complaint and redress. We must have objective criteria for showing that it works. We must ensure that we have a professional, one-step—or at most, two-step—process, which everyone can understand and which works.

If reform were a matter of funding, let us fund it. However, I believe that it is more than that. Lady Thatcher said that she was going to take on the professions. We still need to take on the solicitors profession, because it often ruins people's lives, and that is unacceptable.

2.48 pm

The Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (Mr. John M. Taylor): First, I express my sympathy to Mr. Sullivan and I commend the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on securing the debate, which gives us an opportunity to discuss the important subject of the conduct and regulation of the solicitors profession. It is an important subject, not least because it is often in times of distress and difficulty that people turn to solicitors for help and it is only right that citizens of this country should be able to expect a lawyer to provide a service worthy of his or her professional standing. I commend the hon. Gentleman for the cogency and fairness of his presentation and for the good that he had to say about the Legal Aid Board.

I am a solicitor, although I have not practised professionally since 1988—when some of my friends were unkind enough to say that I had gone straight—and I hope that it will be helpful to the House if I outline the Government's position on the regulation of solicitors. The Government look to self-regulation as the most effective way of maintaining standards in business life in general. It is especially important that citizens with disputes against other citizens, against institutions or even against the state or the Government, should be able to turn to a completely independent legal profession. That is why the Government are committed to the principle that in the first instance the maintenance of professional standards among lawyers should be one of the responsibilities of the professional body concerned.

As a result, therefore, neither my right hon. and noble Friend the Lord Chancellor nor I have the power to intervene in or comment upon individual cases, or to respond directly to criticisms about the profession's disciplinary and complaints machinery. The professional practice, conduct and discipline of solicitors are regulated by statute. I do not, therefore, intend to comment upon the details of the hon. Gentleman's constituent's case.

As the hon. Gentleman has said, the Law Society has delegated its powers to deal with complaints of misconduct and inadequate professional service to the Solicitors Complaints Bureau. Allegations of misconduct and inadequate professional service are dealt with by the bureau in different ways, and it has different sanctions in respect of each.

In cases involving inadequate professional service, the Law Society is empowered to provide redress for clients. It can order a solicitor to reduce a bill—if it has not been taxed—waive the right to recover any fee whatever, refund money already paid, correct any mistakes, or take any other necessary action. The Courts and Legal Services Act 1990 increased the sanctions available to the Law Society by allowing it to direct a solicitor to pay compensation of up to £1,000 to the client. That maximum is under review.

Allegations of misconduct—for example, breaches of the solicitors' practice rules—are dealt with separately, and if misconduct is revealed, the case may be referred to the bureau's conduct committee. That committee can rebuke the solicitor, institute disciplinary proceedings or order intervention in a solicitor's practice. However, it does not have the power to fine, although that arrangement is currently under review. It is important to recognise that the Law Society's powers, as exercised by the bureau, to deal with misconduct are disciplinary in nature. Serious breaches of the rules of professional conduct may lead to disciplinary proceedings against the solicitor concerned. Such proceedings are dealt with by the solicitors disciplinary tribunal, which is wholly independent of the Law Society and was established under the Solicitors Act 1974.

The Government responded to growing public disquiet about the effectiveness of the profession's procedures for dealing swiftly and effectively with alleged failures in professional competence by creating, in the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990, the office of the legal services ombudsman. The ombudsman provides an independent check on the complaint-handling procedures of the General Council of the Bar and the Council for Licensed Conveyancers, as well as the Law Society.

It may be helpful if I explain to the House the terms and conditions under which the legal services ombudsman operates. His office, which came into being on 1 January 1991, was established to be independent of both the legal profession and the Government. He is uniquely placed to compare systems and standards across the profession and his knowledge, experience and independence lend a strong weight to his judgment.

Once the ombudsman has completed his investigation, he can make recommendations. Here again, I restrict reference to solicitors, with the bureau exercising the powers on behalf of the Law Society. The recommendations are: that the complaint be reconsidered by the bureau; that the solicitor complained of—or the bureau—pay compensation of an amount specified by the ombudsman to the complainant for loss, inconvenience or distress caused to him as a result of the matter complained of; and that the bureau pay compensation of an amount specified by the ombudsman to the complainant for loss, inconvenience or distress caused to him as a result of the way in which the bureau handled that complaint.

It seems to me that Mr. Sullivan has suffered loss, inconvenience and distress. As the hon. Gentleman concedes, in this case the available avenues have not yet been exhausted. The hon. Gentleman's constituent is still in time to take his complaint to the ombudsman. If he seeks further redress, I can only recommend that he contact the ombudsman's office as soon as possible.

It is not open to me or to the Lord Chancellor to intervene in a decision of the ombudsman or to comment on its merits any more than it would be proper for us to do in relation to a case before a court of law. I have described the existing procedures and, as the House will appreciate, they have been strengthened considerably in recent years. I do not believe that they can fairly be described as toothless. However, it is important that the regulatory framework should adapt to changing times and secure the confidence of both public and profession.

It is true that there has been much recent criticism of the bureau by the profession, the public and bodies such as the National Consumer Council. In December 1994, the NCC published a report, "The Solicitors Complaints Bureau: a consumer view". The report proposed the abolition of the bureau and suggested that the Law Society's complaints-handling function should be transferred to an independent legal services complaints council.

At the press conference to launch his annual report in June of this year, the ombudsman commented:

"I believe it is premature to talk of abandoning self-regulation at the present time. A great deal of experience and money has been invested by the Law Society on behalf of solicitors and the public in the Solicitors Complaints Bureau. It would be foolish to throw it all out and go over to a completely different system without a good deal more information about complainant satisfaction levels, and without first seeking to strengthen the Bureau's operation by giving it a greater degree of independence."

In the nature of things, it is perhaps unlikely that a body dealing with thousands of complaints a year will get bouquets rather than brickbats, but the Law Society in general and the bureau in particular have nevertheless been considering the future direction of complaints in respect of solicitors for several months now. In July, the Law Society issued a consultation paper, "Supervision of Solicitors: The Next Decade", which proposed significant changes to the way in which complaints are handled.

The deadline for responses to the consultation paper has been extended until Tuesday next, 31 October. The responses will then be analysed and collated and a final paper suggesting the way forward will be considered by the Law Society Council in either December this year or January next year. As well as in this debate today, therefore, the issue is being actively addressed both inside and outside the profession.

At the same time as a replacement for the bureau is being considered, my officials are in discussion with the Law Society and others about a Solicitors (Amendment) Bill. While that covers the whole range of the statutory framework of solicitors, it is nevertheless expected that the Law Society will be putting forward proposals, once the future of the bureau has been settled, which will deal with those matters. I have said that the consultation period expires on Tuesday, but if the hon. Gentleman wishes to write to the president of the Law Society with his proposals I am sure that they will be given full consideration.

This is, then, an opportune moment for the hon. Gentleman to raise the issue. In any regulatory system, there is bound to be a difficult balance between championing the rights of the consumer and not overburdening the service provider. The Government see an effective and approachable complaints system as the best way to ensure that a client's grievances can be dealt with without causing the profession unnecessary burden or unnecessary interference from the public sector.

It is difficult to strike the right balance. Although we do not yet know the outcome of the Law Society proposals, the Government will consider carefully any proposals requiring legislation and will support such proposals as strike the right balance. While it is now for the Law Society to get it right, I agree with the ombudsman that proposals to abandon self-regulation are, at best, premature.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at Three o'clock.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Small Claims Cases

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to introduce measures to reduce the delays which occur at small claims courts; what research he has conducted on the cost of these delays to public funds; and if he will make a statement. [36948]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The question concerns a specific operational matter on which the chief executive of the Court Service is best placed to provide an answer and I have accordingly asked the chief executive to reply direct.

Letter from M. D. Huebner to Mr. Peter Atkinson, dated 16 October 1995:

The Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department has asked me to reply to your Question about delays in the small claims courts.

The Court Service is pursuing a range of initiatives designed to reduce delays in all types of case in the civil courts, including plans to computerise the county courts to increase both speed and efficiency in the handling of paperwork and the production of orders and notices. It is also working with the Lord Chancellor's Department on consideration of procedural reforms following Lord Woolf's interim report on access to justice.

At present, over the Court Service as a whole, 94% of administrative work is dealt with within the target of five days or less in the Charter for Court Users. New targets have been set for hearing civil cases. Cases expected to last less than 15 minutes should be heard within 30 days of the court being asked to arrange a date; for longer cases the target is 40 days. At present District Judges hear 98% of short cases and 71% of long cases within target. I am not aware of significant delays in small claims cases but would be glad to investigate any particular instances.

No research has been conducted on the cost of any delays in small claims cases to public funds.

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what research his Department has conducted into the effects that increasing the small claims limit to £3,000 will have on the small claims procedure; and if he will name the courts where pilot schemes have been conducted. [36949]

Mr. Taylor: An increase in the small claims limit would not affect the nature of the small claims procedure. No pilot schemes have been conducted. However, if the small claims limit is increased, the effects of this will be closely monitored, as recommended by Lord Woolf.

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make it his policy to introduce measures which will allow people to choose to opt out of the small claims procedure if the limit is increased to £3,000; and if he will make a statement. [36950]

Mr. Taylor: Under the rules of court, district judges have discretion to order a case to be referred out of the small claims procedure if it meets certain criteria. The judge can order this after considering the defence, either on application by a party or of his own accord.

Legal Aid

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the level of weekly disposable income below which (a) free legal aid and (b) contributory legal aid was available in (i) 1979, (ii) 1993, (iii) 1994 and (iv) 1995; what was the percentage of the adult population eligible for (a) and (b) in each of those years; and what is the present-day value in real terms of these disposable income levels. [35545]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The hon. Member will recall that I was unable to provide him with an answer to his question earlier this year. I am now in a position to do so and it is set out in the tables. It is not possible to calculate figures to show the percentage of the adult population eligible for (a) free legal aid and (b) contributory legal aid so I have shown eligible households instead. All figures are annual ones.

Table 1—Levels of annual disposable income for non-contributory and contributory civil legal aid

Year	Non-contributory	Contributory	PI
1979	7,500	3,600	—
1993	2,294	6,800	7,750
1994	2,382	7,060	7,780
1995	2,425	7,187	7,920

Table 2—What is the present day value in real terms of these disposable levels

Year	Non-contributory	Contributory	PI
1979	3,816	9,138	—
1993	2,403	7,126	7,860
1994	2,439	7,229	7,935
1995	2,425	7,187	7,920

Note:
1979 figures have been uprated from the retail prices index: "All items excluding Housing" series since 1979.

Table 3—Percentage of households eligible for non-contributory and contributory civil legal aid (figures given are combined totals)

Year	Contributory	PI
1979	77.2	-
1993	48.17	50.66 (PI)
1994	48.45	51.25 (PI)
1995	47.26	49.67 (PI)

Note:
In 1979 the percentage eligible for non-contributory legal aid was 28 per cent. It is more difficult since 1993 to accurately estimate the percentage eligible for non-contributory legal aid. We believe that the figure is in the region of 20 per cent. to 25 per cent.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department in respect of how many cases the legal aid fund has reimbursed the costs of a successful opponent in each of the past five years. [37158]

Mr. Taylor: It is not possible to identify exactly the number of cases in which the legal aid fund has reimbursed the costs of a successful unassisted party under the terms of section 18 of the Legal Aid Act 1988; the Legal Aid Board records the number of payments made but not the number of cases in which section 18 costs are reimbursed. The number of payments made each year was:

1991–92: 134
1992–93: 171
1993–94: 186
1994–95: 158

Although it is possible that more than one payment may be made in a small number of cases, costs are usually reimbursed by way of a single payment.

Mr. Marshall: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the current annual expenditure on legal aid in Britain; and what are the equivalent figures in other EU countries. [37215]

Mr. Taylor: Annual net provision for legal aid expenditure in the United Kingdom, excluding administration, for the current financial year is as follows:

	£m
England and Wales	1,457
Scotland	133
Northern Ireland	22

In the time available it has not been possible to obtain equivalent figures for other EU countries.

Personal Injury Cases

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when the Lord Chancellor plans to implement Lord Woolf's recommendation that small personal injury claims under £1,000 should be exempt from the small claims procedure; and if he will make a statement. [36951]

Mr. John M Taylor: In his interim report on access to justice Lord Woolf recommendation that all personal injury cases up to £10,000 should be dealt with in the fast track. Lord Woolf is presently developing his detailed proposals for the fast track.

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of similarities shared by road traffic accident cases and personal injury cases in the area of assessing liability and quantum, and if he will make a statement. [36944]

Mr. Taylor: Insofar as the damages claimed are for personal injuries, road traffic accident cases are treated in the same way as other personal injury claims.

Financial Penalties

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps he has taken or intends to take to monitor the delays by those found guilty of criminal actions in payment to their victims of sums ordered by the courts; and if he will make a statement concerning the efficacy of such arrangements. [37333]

Mr. John M. Taylor: My Department has set up a working group under the chairmanship of a senior official to identify and promote good practice in the enforcement of financial penalties—including compensation to victims—and recommended procedural, administrative or legislative changes which would improve the enforcement of such penalties. The group is considering what modifications and improvements may be made to management information systems in the magistrates courts to secure better monitoring of arrears. As I said in my reply to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Dr. Jones) on 19 July, Official Report, columns 1300–01—the working group is expected to continue for at least a year but it hopes to be in a position to issue guidance to the courts as and when conclusions are reached during that period.

Outsourcing Contracts

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many outsourcing contracts were granted by his Department or agencies in each year since 1990, indicating the nature and value of each contract; and if any additional work was added and of what value to (a) Hoskyns/Cap Gemini Segeti, (b) AT and T Istel, (c) EDS, (d) Sema Group, (e) Datasolve, (f) ITN Net, (g) Anderson Consulting, (h) Centre File, (i) BIS, (j) Telecom Capita, (k) ICL, (l) Digital Equipment, (m) CFM, (n) Siemens, (o) Nixdorf, (p) CMG and (q) Logica. [36995]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Chief Executives of the Land Registry and the Public Record Office will respond on behalf of their agencies. The chief executives of the Public Trust Office will also respond on behalf of this agency for expenditure from 1 July 1994.

For my Department, including the Court Service agency, two outsourcing contracts have been granted since 1990, one to Capita—the parent company of Telecom Capita—for specific research work at a value of £40,851 in the financial year 1992–93 and one to Digital Equipment for system development and implementation at a value of £429,362 in the financial year 1993–94. Additional work for the latter contract came to £16,346.

Letter from Sarah Tyacke to Mr. Kevin McNamara, dated 16 October 1995:

I have been asked by the Lord Chancellor's Parliamentary Secretary to reply to your question about outsourcing contracts.

The Public Record Office granted no outsourcing contracts to any of the companies which you list. It did, however, grant a turnkey contract for the supply of hardware, software, specially written software and services to Logica in December 1991. The value of this contact, as published in the Official Journal of the European Communities, was £1,318,265. Two further small contracts for enhancements were awarded to Logica in 1994 and 1995. The value of these is restricted on commercial grounds.

Letter from John Manthorpe to Mr. Kevin McNamara, dated 16 October 1995:

I have been asked by the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, to reply to your recent question concerning outsourcing contacts granted since 1990. HM Land Registry has granted no such contracts during the period to the 16 organisations specified.

Letter from Julia C. Lomes to Mr. Kevin McNamara, dated 16 October 1995:

The Parliamentary Secretary has asked me to reply as part of the Lord Chancellor's Department's response to your Parliamentary Question, listed on 20 July 1995, regarding outsourcing contracts awarded each year since 1990.

The Public Trust Office became an Executive Agency on 1 July 1994 and since that date no outsourcing contracts have been awarded by this office. The Public Trust Office will be covered by the Lord Chancellor's Department reply in respect of the period from 1990 to 30 June 1994.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Outsourcing Contracts

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many outsourcing contracts were granted by his Department or agencies in each year since 1990, indicating the nature and value of each contract; and if any additional work was added and of what value to (a) Hoskyns/Cap Gemini Segeti, (b) AT and T Istel, (c) EDS, (d) Sema Group, (e) Datasolve, (f) ITN Net, (g) Andersen Consulting, (h) Centre File, (i) BIS, (j) Telecom Capita, (k) ICL, (l) Digital Equipment, (m) CFM, (n) Siemens, (o) Nixdorf, (p) CMG and (q) Logica. [36967]

Mr. Newton: The Privy Council Office has granted no contracts to the companies in question in the last five years. I am not responsible for any agencies.

TREASURY

Outsourcing Contracts

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many outsourcing contracts were granted by his Department or agencies in each year since 1990, indicating the nature and value of each contract; and if any additional work was added and of what value to (a) Hoskyn/Cap Gemini Segeti, (b) AT and T Istel, (c) EDS, (d) Sema Group, (e) Datasolve, (f) ITN Net, (g) Andersen Consulting, (h) Centre File, (i) BIS, (j) Telecom Capita, (k) ICL, (l) Digital Equipment, (m) CFM, (n) Siemens, (o) Nixdorf, (p) CMG and (q) Logica. [36999]

Mrs. Angela Knight: I regret that information prior to 1991 can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

HM Treasury has not let any outsourcing contracts with the companies listed.

HM Treasury did not have any agencies in the period reported above.

Inheritance Tax

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the revenue that would be lost if principal private residences were excluded from asset valuation for the purposes of inheritance tax liability. [36440]

Mr. Jack: The full-year cost in 1996–97 of excluding principal private residences from asset valuation for the purposes of inheritance tax liability, is estimated at around £300 million. This estimate takes no account of any consequential behavioural changes.

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect on house prices of exempting principal private residences from inheritance tax liability. [36441]

Mr. Jack: It would be inappropriate to comment on tax matters at this stage in the Budget cycle.

Travel Allowances

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what rates of travel allowance may be claimed by civil servants in his Department when using their vehicles for official business. [36351]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The current rates of travel allowance that staff in the Treasury may claim when using their vehicles for official business are as follows:

Standard rate (pence per mile)

Cars with engine capacity	Up to 1500 cc	1501–2000 cc	Over 2000 cc
Up to 5,000 miles	35.7	40	43
Over 5,000 miles	17	21	27

Motorcycles with engine capacity

	Up to 125cc	Over 125cc
First, 4,000 miles at:	15.4p	24.7p
Over 4,000 miles at:	5.5p	8.1p

Public Transport Rate (pence per miles)

For use of private motor cars and motorcycles not meeting the insurance, ownership and economy and efficiency rules for payment of the standard rate of allowance

Rate per mile: 22.3

Pedal Cycle Allowance (pence per mile)

Rate per mile: 5.6

Dr. Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the total cost of travel expenses claimed by civil servants using their own vehicles for official business in each of the last five years in his Department; and what would have been the saving in the last year if the maximum rate that could be claimed was set at the lowest rate. [36352]

Mrs. Knight: The total cost of travel expenses claimed by civil servants using their own vehicles for official business in the Treasury in the last five years is as follows:

1995–96	7
1994–95	21
1993–94	23
1992–93	32

[1] To date.

The saving in the last full year can only be estimated, as the records on mileages travelled on individual trips by individual officials are currently held manually and it would involve disproportionate cost to work through those. Of the £21,000 shown for 1994–95, only £7,700 was reimbursed at our maximum rates. The saving had reimbursement been at our lower rate in that year is estimated to be approximately £2.900.

EDS

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has of the savings to the Inland Revenue over 10 years of the contract between the Inland Revenue and EDS; when the contract was (a) awarded and (b) revised. [36702]

Mr. Jack: When the Inland Revenue signed a 10-year outsourcing contract with EDS in May 1994, the estimated value based on the work load identified in the invitation to tender was £1 billion, which represented a potential saving of £225 million over the in-house costs.

The Inland Revenue is in the process of updating the original estimates to take into account the actual changes to the work load identified in the first year of the contract and revising forecasts for the remaining life of the contract.

This work is not yet complete and therefore revised figures are not yet available.

Earnings

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the distribution of earnings and of ages of households having a first child. [36971]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The table shows the breakdown of households by range of total gross weekly earnings and age of eldest dependent child as estimated from the winter 1994 labour force survey. Benefits are excluded.

	Age of eldest dependent child
	0–5	6–10	11–15	>15	Total
<£200	6	6	10	5	27
£201–£300	4	4	4	2	14
£301–£400	4	4	5	2	16
£401–£500	4	4	4	2	13
£501–£600	2	2	3	2	9
£601–£700	2	2	2	2	7
£701–£800	1	1	1	2	5
£801–£900	1	1	1	2	3
Total	26	25	31	18	100

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what estimate his Department has made of the hourly average rate of pay in manufacturing in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) in each of the members of the European Union; [30074]

(2) what estimate his Department has made of the average hourly rate of pay in food retailing. [37005]

Mrs. Knight: Estimates of manufacturing hourly earnings for manual and non-manual workers in the United Kingdom and the other member states of the European Union are published by Eurostat in "Earnings—Industry and Services 1994". This report is available in the House of Commons Library.

More recent information on hourly earnings by industry of full-time adult workers in Great Britain, is shown in tables X2.1–X2.7 of part A of the April 1995 new earnings survey report, also available in the House of Commons Library. Table X2.1 gives date for all manufacturing, and food retailing is shown in table X2.5.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his most recent estimate of the number and proportion of the work force in (a) each county and (b) the United Kingdom that are employed in the agriculture and fishing sector. [36722]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The table shows regional estimates from the spring—March to May—1995 labour force survey of the number in employment in agriculture and fishing industries and the proportion they represent of the work force. Estimates for each county are not available.

Spring 1995

	Agriculture and fishing
	All in employment Thousands	As a proportion of the work force[1] Per cent.
United Kingdom	517	1.8
Northern region	22	1.5
Yorkshire and Humberside	47	1.9

[1] Work force is defined as those who are economically active (in employment or ILO unemployed).

Small Shops (Security Equipment)

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average increase in rateable value for small shops caused by the installation of security equipment; and if he will make a statement. [36947]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Information is not available on the average increase in rateable value for small shops caused by the installation of security equipment.

The effect that security equipment may have on the rateable value of small shops will depend upon its nature and extent. This will vary but, in general, relatively minor security devices fitted in small shops are unlikely to increase the value significantly and in many cases they may not increase the value at all.

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what guidelines his Department has issued to local valuation offices regarding the rateable value of security devices in small shops. [36945]

Mrs. Knight: No specific guidelines have been issued with regard to the rateable value of security devices in small shops, but valuation officers will consider the rateability and value of such items in line with general guidelines on the rateability of plant and machinery.

Government Expenditure

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his Department's estimate of central Government expenditure per head to each English region in each of the last five years. [36726]

Mr. Waldegrave: Identifiable general government expenditure per head by region and function for 1992–93 was published in "Public Expenditure"; Cm 2821, table 7.9. An exercise to collect regional figures for general government expenditure for one financial year only is carried out annually. Figures for the central Government component are not collected separately, nor is a time series available on a consistent basis.

European Investment Bank

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what approvals have so far been made under the European Investment Fund for guarantee of loans made for projects within member states of the European Union; and if he will give for each case the purpose of the investment, the amount guaranteed and the financial agency concerned. [37007]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The full list of projects signed is:

Name	Country	Sector	Amount (mecu)	Lender guaranteed
Panafon, SA	Greece	TEN[1] telecoms	54.74	EIB
Groupe Banque Populaire (GBP)	France	SME[2]	75.91	GBP
Telecom Italia	Italy	TEN telecoms	101.38	EIB
SNAM Trans-mediterraneo	Italy	TEN energy	100.49	EIB
Aeroporto di Malpensa	Italy	TEN transport	[3]75.59	EIB
Transgas	Portugal	TEN	[4]107.22	EIB
Total			515.33

Notes:

European Investment Fund Annual Report 1994.

For 1995, the fund's business plan provides for a total volume of guarantees of between 1.2 billion ecu and 1.5 billion ecu, taking into account both business prospects and the recent enlargement of the Union by the accession of Austria, Finland and Sweden. It is expected that the proportion of guarantees on loans granted by the European investment bank will reduce to between 60 per cent. and 75 per cent. of total activity and that the mix between TEN and SME operations will be more in line with the business plan projection of 80:20.

Single Currency

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what expenditure has been incurred by the European Monetary Institute in respect of preparation for possible designs banknotes or coinage for a common currency; and on whose authority such expenditure was made. [37269]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The European Monetary Institute has the responsibility of supervising the technical preparation of single currency banknotes under the terms of article 109f(3) of the EC treaty, as amended at Maastricht, which has been ratified by all member states. The accounts published by the European Monetary Institute do not separately identify expenditure incurred in fulfilling this responsibility.

Car Boot Sales

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action is being taken to ensure taxation of trading at car boot sales. [37147]

Mr. Jack: Those who trade at car boot sales are liable to investigation by the Inland Revenue in the same way as any other trader. The Inland Revenue continuously evaluates all areas where there might be under-declaration of taxable profits.

Privatised Utilities

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from privatised utility regulators suggesting extra taxation to take account of hidden values in respect of the regulated companies. [37071]

Mr. Jack: I receive many representations on a wide variety of tax issues in the run-up to the Budget, but it is not my practice to comment on them individually.

European Union (Convergence Criteria)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which EU countries are currently achieving the convergence criteria of the Maastricht treaty. [37210]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The question of which countries meet the Maastricht criteria will be decided by the European Council on recommendations from the Commission. On the basis of the latest Commission forecast, Luxembourg, Germany and the UK are likely to have budget deficits below 3 per cent. of GDP and debt ratios below 60 per cent. of GDP by 1996.

Regulated Monopolies

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will bring forward proposals for a special one-off tax on gains made by regulated monopolies where the regulator certifies that the gains were unexpected. [37062]

Mr. Jack: It would not be appropriate for me to comment on tax measures in the run-up to the Budget.

Taxation (Foreign Nationals)

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what factors underlie immunity from United Kingdom tax arrangements in respect of the Kuwait investment office in London; and if he will list the other Kuwaiti commercial operations in the United Kingdom to which this immunity extends. [37068]

Mr. Jack: The normal rules of tax confidentiality preclude the provision of information about the affairs of named individuals or entities.

Embassy Staff (Salaries)

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what arrangements are in place for the disclosure for tax purposes of salaries and benefits in kind paid to British employees of foreign embassies in London. [37072]

Mr. Jack: Some embassies voluntarily operate the "pay as you earn" scheme on the salaries of their British staff. Where the embassy does not do this, it is approached at the end of each tax year by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office—acting on behalf of the Inland Revenue—for details of the emoluments which it has paid during the year to its staff who are liable to tax. Those staff are also under the normal obligation to declare their emoluments in the returns of income which they make to the Inland Revenue.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

India

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of United Kingdom funded projects in India in each of the past six years have been in the states of (a) Kashmir and (b) Punjab. [37105]

Mr. Hanley: One project in Kashmir—hydroelectric power—is currently being funded under the aid and trade provision at a total cost of £17 million. Apart from this, the ODA has not given any bilateral aid for projects in either Kashmir or Punjab in the past six years.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many requests for overseas aid assistance have been made by the Indian Government for projects in (a) Kashmir and (b) Punjab states in the past 10 years; and how many of these were approved. [37107]

Mr. Hanley: A hydroelectric power project on Kashmir was approved under the aid and trade provision in 1989. No other British bilateral aid projects have been approved in the past 10 years in Kashmir or Punjab. Information on requests during that time from the Indian Government for assistance for projects in Kashmir and Punjab is not readily available, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the major projects in India funded by United Kingdom overseas aid in the past six years. [37103]

Mr. Hanley: Projects over £5 million funded by UK overseas aid in India in the past six years are:

Maharashtra Water (1990) £16m
Calcutta Slum Improvement Project (1990) £13m
Orissa Health and Family Welfare 2 (1991) £20m
Vijayawada Slum Improvement Project (1991) £17m
Programme Aid Grant (1991) £30m
Coal Project Grant (1991) £11m
Andhra Pradesh School Health (1991) £6m
Programme Aid Grant (1992) £20m
Western Ghats Environmental Forestry Project (1992) £25m
High Voltage Interconnector, Chandrapur, (1993) £65m
Hirakud Hydro (1993) £20m
Heat Treated Rails (1993) £15m
Regional Engineering Colleges (1994) £7m
Eastern India Rainfed Farming Project (1994) £8m
Andhra Pradesh Energy Efficiency (1994) £43m
Maharashtra Earthquake (World Bank Programme) £15m
Gomti River Pollution Control Project (1995) £4m (initial phase)
Andhra Pradesh District Primary Education (1995) £46m

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the amount of United Kingdom bilateral aid in India in each of the past six years. [37104]

Mr. Hanley: UK bilateral aid to India was:

1989–90: £75.851 million
1990–91: £88.260 million
1991–92: £128.144 million
1992–93: £94.719 million
1993–94: £79.231 million
1994–95: £82.652 million

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy on respect of granting overseas aid assistance to India; and to what extent this takes into account geographical location of projects. [37106]

Mr. Hanley: Priorities for United Kingdom aid are discussed and agreed with the Government of India at annual talks, taking into account priorities of both Governments.

For management reasons, major new projects are increasingly being focused in a smaller number of target states, including West Bengal, Orissa, Andhra Pradesh, Karnataka and Uttar Pradesh.

Overseas Aid Expenditure

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made to fulfil the statement made by his predecessor at the Overseas Development Institute that Her Majesty's Government had plans to increase annual expenditure on overseas aid. [37363]

Mr. Hanley: In his speech to the Overseas Development Institute on 15 February 1995, the then Foreign Secretary reiterated the Government's plans for increased aid spending announced by my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Budget statement on 29 November 1994.

In common with all other areas of Government expenditure, these plans are reviewed each year during the public expenditure survey.

Twa People, Rwanda

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the fate of the Twa people of Rwanda, and those of them presently refugees in Zaire; and what plans he has to take any special action to protect these victims of the situation in Rwanda. [37286]

Mr. Hanley: We have little specific information about the fate of the Twa people, other than reports by bodies such as the Unrepresented Peoples and Nations Organisation. An UNPO mission to Rwanda in late 1994 estimated that 10,000 Twa were killed in the genocide and civil war of 1994—representing one third of that community in Rwanda—and that a further 8,000 to 10,000 Twa had fled the country.

Other reports indicate that the Twa form a particularly vulnerable group among the refugees, often living outside the established camps and meriting special attention from UN agencies and non-governmental organisations. The Red Cross and Christian Aid have organised separate food distribution and shelter provision for groups of Twa refugees. Inside Rwanda, the Twa have traditionally been a disadvantaged group, subjected to discrimination. A Christian Aid rehabilitation programme has assisted the Twa, and further programmes targeting the Twa as a group are planned. The UK has contributed to these programmes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Betts: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement about the rights of individual members of the public to make complaints to any of the appropriate ombudsmen about services or projects funded through the private finance initiative in his Department. [36836]

The Attorney-General: Although none of the Departments for which I am responsible uses the private finance initiative for the funding of any services or projects at present, use of the PFI is being considered for future projects where appropriate. It is not expected that use of the PFI would affect the rights of individuals to complain to an ombudsman.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

EU Documents (Parliamentary Scrutiny)

Ms Quin: To ask the Lord President of the Council what proposals he has for providing additional opportunities for parliamentary scrutiny of policies under (a) the second and (b) the third pillar of Maastricht.

Mr. Newton: The procedures for parliamentary scrutiny of documents emerging under the inter-governmental pillars work well and are kept under review. I await with interest the publication of a report from the Select Committee on European Legislation on the arrangements for the scrutiny of EU documents, which is planned for the autumn. The Government will consider the report carefully together with any proposals the Committee may have for improving the current arrangements.

Members' Car Allowance

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Lord President of the Council, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Cannock and Burntwood (Dr. Wright), 17 July 1995, Official Report, column 914, how many of the Members who claim only one rate of car allowance have cars in each of the three categories.

Mr. Newton: There are six Members who submit claims for one rate of vehicle but who have cars registered in all three categories.

SCOTLAND

Advertising

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those daily and Sunday newspapers used by his Department for advertising purposes in 1994–95; and what was the total expenditure in each case. [36340]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Publicity advertising undertaken by my Department for the period 1 April 1994 to 31 March 1995 was as follows:

The Scotsman	9,176
The Herald	8,770
Dundee Courier and Advertiser	6,543
Press and Journal	7,167
Daily Record	51,138

Glasgow Evening Times	296
Scotland on Sunday	9,724
Sunday Times Scotland	6,881
Sunday Mail	47,795
Sunday Post	49,761
News of the World (Scottish)	2,100

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of his Department's advertising budget has been allocated to local weekly newspapers in Scotland in each of the past 10 years. [36341]

Mr. Forsyth: The figure for 1993–94 was 5.7 per cent. and for 1994–95, 7.3 per cent. Details for previous years are not held centrally.

Forestry Commission Land

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all Forestry Commission land sold so far during 1995. [36983]

Mr. Kynoch: I have arranged for a list to be placed in the Library of the House.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the rights of individual members of the public to make complaints to any of the appropriate ombudsmen about services or projects funded through the private finance initiative in his Departments. [36827]

Mr. Kynoch: Under the private finance initiative, Departments or relevant public bodies may contract with private organisations for the supply of services to specified standards. The rights of individual members of the public to make complaints to any of the appropriate ombudsmen are not affected assuming that the responsibility to provide services lies with the public authority concerned.

Outsourcing Contracts

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many outsourcing contracts were granted by his Department or Agencies in each year since 1990, indicating the nature and value of each contract; and if any additional work was added and of what value to (a) Hoskyns/Cap Gemini Segeti, (b) AT and T Istel, (c) EDS, (d) Sema Group, (e) Datasolve, (f) ITN Net, (g) Andersen Consulting, (h) Centre File, (i) BIS, (j) Telecom Capita, (k) ICL, (l) Digital Equipment, (m) CFM, (n) Siemens, (o) Nixdorf, (p) CMG and (q) Logica. [36957]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I can confirm that no outsourcing contracts were let to any of the named suppliers during the period in question.

Population Census

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to include a question on the use of Scots in the next census in 2001 on the same basis as the existing question on Gaelic. [36987]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The General Register Office for Scotland, together with the Census Office for England and Wales, the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys, has started to consult users of census information about their needs from the next census of population, planned for 2001. A number of letters have been received expressing support for a question on the Scots language. Needs have also been expressed for information about various other languages and other topics.

The census offices and users will consider whether these requirements can be met by a set of simple questions without the census form imposing an undue burden on the public. For each topic a preliminary assessment will be made on whether the census is the most appropriate means of collecting the required information. Questions for which there is likely to be a good case will be tested to see if the public find them acceptable and can provide answers of a quality adequate to meet user's needs. Business cases for such questions and previously proven questions will then be considered. The Government's proposals will be pubished in 1998, and the final selection of questions will be approved by Parliament.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will now specify the quantity and nature of the drugs found in the debris near Lockerbie after the destruction of Pan Am flight 103. [37394]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The hon. Member is referred to the answer given on 6 March 1995, Official Report, column 87.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance the Crown Office gave to the deputy chief constable of the Dumfries and Galloway police in responding to the letter from the former Bradford police surgeon, Dr. David Fieldhouse, regarding the failure to make further inquiry of him about body DCF12, labelled by Dr. Fieldhouse at a hillside north-east of Shawhill farm, Lockerbie, on 22 December 1988. [37460]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Communications between the prosecuting and Investigating authorities are confidential.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration the Crown Office has now given to the advancing age of those witnesses whom the prosecution proposes to lead in court in relation to the Lockerbie case. [37446]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 6 March 1995, Official Report, column 90, and have nothing to add except to note that a further seven months have passed.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will now reveal on what dates Scottish police interviewed Dr. David Fieldhouse, Bradford police surgeon, in connection with his work in the Lockerbie area in December 1988; what knowledge he now has of body DCF12, male, hillside north-east of Shawhill farm, found at Lockerbie by Dr. David Fieldhouse, and if the Crown Office has endorsed the apology given in his written report by Sheriff John Mowat to Dr. David Fieldhouse for overlooking his information about Lockerbie body DCF12, male, hillside north-east of Shawhill farm, and for the undeserved criticism of his activities. [37459]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answers given on 6 March 1995, Official Report, columns 89 and 90.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has anything to add to his answer of 6 March, Official Report, column 90, regarding the likelihood of a trial of the Lockerbie suspects taking place. [37464]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No.

Adam Busby

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken to secure the extradition of Adam Busby from Dublin. [37364]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Arrangements for the backing warrants in Ireland are the responsibility of my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate and the police. There is a warrant in force for the arrest of Adam Busby and it is not the policy of my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate to discuss the steps which might be taken to enforce such a warrant.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Travel Allowances

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what rates of travel allowance may be claimed by civil servants in his Department when using their vehicles for official business. [36355]

Mr. Hanley: FCO—diplomatic wing and ODA—staff can claim the following rates when using their private vehicles for official business in the United Kingdom:

Private cars	Per mile
Public transport rate	22.3p
Standard rate (up to 4000 miles per year)	37.0p
Standard rate (over 4000 miles per year)	21.0p

Motor Cycles

Public Transport rate	Up to 125cc	Over 125cc only
(Up to 4000 miles per year)	14.1 per mile	21.8 per mile
(Over 4000 miles per year)	5.8 per mile	8.6 per mile

The standard rate for private cars is payable only when public transport is unavailable or impractical.

Overseas mileage rates are calculated by individual diplomatic missions using a formula set by the Treasury and agreed with the Inland Revenue.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the total cost of travel expenses claimed by civil servants using their own vehicles for official business in each of the last five years in his Department; and what would have been the saving in the last year if the maximum rate that could be claimed was set at the lowest rate. [36356]

Mr. Hanley: The FCO—diplomatic wing and ODA—processed over 20,000 travel and subsistence claims during the financial year 1994–95. Information on payments made to staff who use their private vehicles for official business in that year and preceding years is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Outsourcing Contracts

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many outsourcing contracts were granted by his Department or agencies in each year since 1990, indicating the nature and value of each contract; and if any additional work was added and of what value to (a) Hoskyns/Cap Gemini Segeti, (b) AT and T Istel, (c) EDS, (d) Sema Group, (e) Datasolve, (f) ITN Net, (g) Andersen Consulting, (h) Centre File, (i) BIS, (j) Telecom Capita, (k) ICL, (l) Digital Equipment, (m) CFM, (n) Siemens, (o) Nixdorf, (p) CMG and (q) Logica. [37000]

Mr. Hanley: None.

Pitcairn Island (Nuclear Tests)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of French nuclear testing on the inhabitants of Pitcairn Island; and what her Majesty's Government's obligations to the Pitcairn Islanders. [36761]

Mr. David Davis: We remain committed to the protection of United Kingdom dependent territories. We do not believe that the French nuclear tests should cause any danger to the inhabitants of Pitcairn.

Food Poisoning, South Pacific

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will commission a study of the increased incidences of the food poisoning strain called ciguatera in so far as it relates to the residents of British dependent territories in the South Pacific, in the context of nuclear weapons tests in the region. [36754]

Mr. David Davis: The incidence of ciguatera in the South Pacific is monitored locally. It depends on a variety of factors. We see no need to commission any separate study.

Middle East

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State and Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his latest assessment of progress in the middle east peace process. [36897]

Mr. Hanley: The interim agreement between Israel and the Palestinians was signed in Washington on 28 September. This represents a major achievement in the peace process, which we warmly welcome. The interim agreement paves the way for Palestinian elections in the west bank and Gaza. We will be making a substantial contribution to the EU-organised observation of the elections. Negotiations between Israel and Syria remain suspended for the time being. We hope that they will resume soon.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the source documents which comprise the scientific evidence at Her Majesty's Government's disposal on the environmental risks posed to coral atolls by nuclear tests to which the Minister of State made reference in the adjournment debate on 19 July. [36839]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The scientific evidence is drawn from a number of sources. Copies of key documents will be available in the Library of the House shortly.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the rights of individual members of the public to make complaints to any of the appropriate ombudsmen about services or projects funded through the private finance initiative in his Department. [36832]

Mr. Hanley: Members of the public have the right to make representations to the appropriate ombudsman about any service or project provided by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office—diplomatic wing or Overseas Development Administration—including those funded under the private finance initiative.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) on what date Her Majesty's Government was informed by the German Government of the decision to free Abdel Ghadanfar in November 1994; [37454]

(2) whether Her Majesty's Government was informed of and consulted about the release of, and the decision to free, Abdel Ghadanfar, by the German Authorities in November 1994; and if he will make a statement. [37453]

(2) what information he has sought since March 1995 from Juge Brugiere in France, in relation to the UTA case, with particular reference to a Libyan connection for Lockerbie. [37423]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Grantham (Mr. Hogg) on 6 March 1995, Official Report column 5.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) for what reason Her Majesty's Government supported the US decision that the Montreal convention, requiring attempts at conciliation and arbitration, should not be applied in relation to Pan Am 103 and Lockerbie; and that the preferred action was through the UN Security Council; [37435]

(2) what consideration has now been given to evidence involving officials of countries other than Libya in relation to Lockerbie; and what efforts her Majesty's Government have made to obtain such evidence concerning nationals of countries, other than Libya, as undertaken on 20 January 1992, Official Report, column 159. [37436]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: I have nothing to add to the reply given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Grantham (Mr. Hogg) on 6 March 1995. Official Report, column 6.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met Amro Musa, Foreign Minister of Egypt, to discuss the Lockerbie situation; and what contact he has had since. [37448]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs saw the Egyptian Foreign Minister on 27 September, and expects to meet him frequently in future.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs following his undertaking given in Glasgow on 3 February, to look into the claims made by the Bradford police surgeon, Dr. David Fieldhouse, what further action he has taken to verify Dr. Fieldhouse's claims about the body count at Lockerbie on 21, 22 and 23 December 1988. [37438]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: I have nothing to add to the reply given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Grantham (Mr. Hogg) on 6 March 1995. Official Report, column 5.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has anything to add to his answer of 6 March, Official Report, column 7, regarding his assertion on 3 February at the Scottish Oils Clubs Annual Dinner that a trial in relation to Lockerbie would be prejudiced by a public inquiry. [37463]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: No.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will now enter into discussions with Dr. Esmat Abdel Maguid with a view to resolving the Lockerbie case; [37442]

(2) what representations he has now had from Esmat Abdel Maguid on the issue of Libya's position in relation to the Lockerbie case. [37443]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: At his meeting with Dr. Maguid on 5 April, the then Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, the right hon. Member for Witney (Mr. Hurd) discussed a range of matters, including Lockerbie.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice has now been sought from her Majesty's Government by the German Government on the reply that they should give to the letter to Bundeskanzler Helmut Kohl, in German from a German national, Elizabeth Mosey, mother of a Lockerbie victim, of 23 January 1995; and what advice was given by her Majesty's Government. [37447]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: None

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his letter of 9 December 1993 to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, if he will now discuss with the German Government the visit to Germany of the Iranian Intelligence Minster, Mr. Fallahian, and subsequent visits by Iranian Ministers at which the destruction of Pan Am 103 was discussed. [37449]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: I have nothing to add to the reply given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Grantham (Mr. Hogg) on 6 March 1995, Official Report, column 1.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has had from Adnan Omran, assistant secretary-general for political affairs of the Arab League, following the meeting between the League and the United Nations in Vienna in July 1995 about the Lockerbie situation. [37455]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: None.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's communications with the solicitors of Pan Am, Windels, Marx, Davies and Ives, regarding aspects of the destruction of Pan Am 103 over Lockerbie, since May 1995. [37440]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: I have nothing to add to the reply given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Grantham (Mr. Hogg) on 6 March 1995, Official Report, column 8.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he was last in contact with the Government of Finland about the identity of a caller to the United States embassy in Helsinki on 5 December 1988, warning that within two weeks a bomb would be carried on to an American airliner from Frankfurt, destination New York. [37450]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: I have nothing to add to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Member for Grantham on 6 March 1995, Official Report, column 8.

European Legislation

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the judgments of the Court of the European Community which have required retrospective amendment of any United Kingdom Acts of Parliament or related instrument arising from (a) a Community directive and (b) a Community regulation stating in each case the relevant United Kingdom amended instrument and its principal effect. [37257]

Mr. David Davis: We are not aware of any judgment of the European Court of Justice which has required the United Kingdom to amend retroactively legislation arising from a community Directive or Regulation. Some judgments of the Court may have significant retrospective effects without the need for amending legislation, especially in the pensions and social security fields. We intend to address this issue at the 1996 intergovernmental conference.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his letter of 12 July, what contribution Her Majesty's Government have made to the international programme set up under the auspices of the International Atomic Energy Agency to consider the implications of past dumping operations; and what requests he has received from the Russian Government for technical help in relation to the Lepse in Murmansk harbour. [37396]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We continue to participate in the international programme established to assess the risks to human health and the environment from radioactive wastes dumped in the Kara and Barents seas, to examine possible remedial actions and to advise on whether any are necessary and justified. This project, managed by the IAEA in co-operation with the Norwegian and Russian Governments, is expected to report in 1996. No specific request to provide technical assistance for the Lepse has been received from the Russian Government. The European Union is, however, proposing to assist the relevant Russian authorities by funding a feasibility study into the options for dealing with the Lepse and the radioactive material stored on board.

Kashmir

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 3 May, Official Report, columns 313–14; what contribution he has made to the recent discussions between India and Pakistan over Kashmir. [37108]

Mr. Hanley: We continue to encourage both the Indian and Pakistani Governments to resolve their differences over Kashmir through bilateral negotiation.

Iranian Airbus

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will put in the Library a copy of the recent statements by the Government of Iran, in the possession of his Department, that the skies would rain blood on America, as a result of the shooting down of an Iranian Airbus by the USS 'Vincennes' [37444]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: I have nothing to add to the reply given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Grantham (Mr. Hogg) on 6 March 1995, Official Report, column 8.

[37437]

Mr. Hanley: We have helped Mrs. Prazak arrange a visit to her husband's grave in Libya and we are pressing the Libyan authorities to provide a crash report. We are not empowered to launch our own inquiry because the crash involved two Libyan aircraft inside Libyan air space.

PRIME MINISTER

Self-governing Schools

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Prime Minister (1) pursuant to his press statement of 24 August concerning his hopes for education, what procedures, flexibilities and diversity will potentially be available to future pupils, or parents, not already available at schools currently under local management arrangements, if they become directly funded under conditions laid down by Her Majesty's Government; and by what means in those circumstances Ministers will ensure that the options now preferred, or currently available, will be maintained under such arrangements. [37358]

(2) pursuant to his press statement of 24 August concerning education, which freedoms, flexibility, and additional diversity will potentially be available to future parents and pupils in schools now under local management arrangements in England and Wales if they became directly funded under conditions laid down by

Her Majesty's Government; and by what means Ministers will ensure that options currently available will be maintained. [37383]

The Prime Minister: Self-government is a significant and logical step beyond local management. A self-governing school controls its total budget, not just the proportion delegated by an LEA. It is also free to preserve its existing character or to propose changes without reference to the local authority.

This gives self-governing schools greater flexibility to innovate, and to respond quickly and efficiently to the needs and aspirations of the communities they serve.

I believe that the benefits of grant-maintained status should be extended to all schools. This option is currently being examined.

Sports Facilities

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Prime Minister if he will require all relevant Government Departments to maintain a register listing sporting facilities in receipt of public funds (a) closed after 1 September 1995 and (b) proposed for closure; and if he will then instruct his Minister for Sport to investigate and report to him on relevant reasons for closure. [37336]

The Prime Minister: The sports policy statements issued during the summer recognised the important role which sports facilities, including those provided by public funds, play in the development of sport. The documents detail the measures that have taken and will be taking to safeguard and improve the current level of facilities provision. We will also shortly be consulting on a proposal that the Sports Councils should be given statutory consultee status on planning proposals affecting all playing fields. Additionally, the Government will retain statutory area standards to protect school playing fields. The Government do not see a need for a register of publicly funded sports facilities of the kind that the hon. Member suggests.

Breast Cancer Campaign

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Prime Minister how many postcards he has received expressing support for the national postcard campaign for breast cancer; and how many of these have been answered. [37051]

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Prime Minister how many postcards he has received in response to the recent campaign on breast cancer. [37481]

The Prime Minister: I have received a substantial number of representations regarding this campaign.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his letter to the hon. Member for Linlithgow of 25 January, what strategy, other than demanding a trial of two junior operatives, Her Majesty's Government now have for obtaining justice for all the victims of the crime of Lockerbie. [37461]

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave the hon. Gentleman on 6 March 1995, Official Report, column 79.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will now place in the Library a copy of the memorandum from No. 10 Downing street in 1989 adducing the reasons why Her Majesty's Government would not allow a public inquiry into the Lockerbie crime; and at what level the decision on the public inquiry was taken. [37458]

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave the hon. Gentleman on 6 March 1995, Official Report, column 78.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minster what reports the United Kingdom and United States authorities in Cyprus have now received from Dr. David Lovejoy, an employee of the United States Government, directly or through other sources, on the movement of the United States hostage rescue team, including Matthew Gannon and Major Charles McKee, subsequently killed at Lockerbie, before the destruction of Pan Am 103; and if he will discuss with President Clinton the reasons why these reports were sought. [37456]

The Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to the answer that I gave the hon. Gentleman on 6 March 1995, Official Report, column 80.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister whether Her Majesty's Government were informed by the US authorities on or around 19 December 1988 of the travel plans of Major Charles McKee. [37405]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave on 6 March 1995, Official Report, column 79.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his letter of 30 August 1994 to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, what examination has recently taken place of the Toshiba and Helsinki warnings in relation to Lockerbie, since the fatal accident inquiry. [37457]

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave to the hon. Gentleman on 6 March 1995, Official Report, column 78.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Linlithgow of 26 January, Official Report, column 300, in what month of what year allegations were first made to the effect that Ali Akbar Mostashemi had paid $10 million to have the Lockerbie bombing carried out; who were the competent authorities to whom the Prime Minister refers; and how much of the alleged contradictory material came from Abdul Meged Jiacha. [37434]

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave to the hon. Gentleman on 6 March 1995, Official Report, columns 80–81.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment Her Majesty's Government have now made of the role of Khaled Jaafar, a Lebanese victim of the Lockerbie bombing. [37407]

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave the hon. Gentleman on 6 March 1995, Official Report, column 79.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will now discuss with President Clinton the implications regarding Iranian links and baggage being onloaded on Air Malta 180, destination Frankfurt airport. [37445]

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave to the hon. Gentleman on 6 March 1995, Official Report, column 78.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will now discuss with Chancellor Kohl the prima facie evidence that a German-based terrorist organisation used their knowledge of a covert US drugs operation to switch an unaccompanied bag containing drugs with an identical bag containing a bomb which destroyed Pan Am Flight 103. [37441]

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave to the hon. Gentleman on 6 March 1995, Official Report, column 78.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what information has come recently to Her Majesty's Government about approaches by members of the Jaafar family offering precise testimony about Hezbollah and Achmed Tibril and their role in using a member of the Jaafar family to get a bomb on board Pan Am flight 103. [37395]

The Prime Minister: So far as I am aware, no such approaches have been received.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will discuss with Chancellor Kohl the reasons why the Justice Department of the German Government have challenged Anglo-US explanations of the Lockerbie crime. [36747]

The Prime Minister: The German Federal Ministry of Justice has not challenged the basis on which charges have been brought against the two individuals accused of having carried out the Lockerbie bombing.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 14 February, Official Report, column 571, if he will identify the partners to whom he referred in relation to discussions about Lockerbie and UTA 772. [37452]

The Prime Minister: No.

Intergovernmental Panel on the Oceans

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his letter of 9 March to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, what recent consideration Her Majesty's Government have given to the recommendation of the Government's panel on sustainable development on the establishment of an intergovernmental panel on the oceans. [37291]

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment is organising an international workshop from 30 November to 2 December to consider the machinery by which global decisions on the oceans take place. The Government will be putting the conclusions of this workshop, with their own views, to the next meeting of the UN Commission on Sustainable Development.

East German Security Service

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what representations Her Majesty's Government have had recently, since 15 July, from the German Government about their interrogation of Edward Bollier's Stasi control, and the sale of timing devices to the Stasi. [37408]

The Prime Minister: So far as I am aware, none.

Trafficking in Fissile Materials

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his letter of 2 May to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, what progress has been made on the plan of action agreed by the European summit at Essen in December 1994 to improve co-operation between member states of the Union on how to develop programmes of assistance to third countries in relation to illegal trafficking in fissile materials; and if he will make a statement. [37288]

The Prime Minister: The Essen report on Illicit Traffic in Radioactive Substances and Nuclear Materials recommended a plan of action to improve co-operation with countries which were potential sources of illicit nuclear material. Since then, EURATOM has promoted a number of projects, the primary aim of which has been to provide assistance on improving nuclear materials accountancy and control. Three projects involving co-operation with Russia are currently under way and five are planned for 1996. The United Kingdom has been pursuing bilateral projects in Russia and Kazakhstan to assist those countries in a range of safeguards-related areas.

Libya (Extradition)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if the United Kingdom now has an extradition treaty with Libya. [37462]

The Prime Minister: No.

DEFENCE

Royal Fleet Auxiliary

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to increase the number of ships for service in the Royal Fleet Auxiliary; and if he will make a statement. [36439]

Mr. Soames: The Government will maintain the Royal Fleet Auxiliary at the level needed to meet the Royal Navy's requirements. There is at present no requirement for an increase in the number of ships in service.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many public interest immunity certificates his Department has issued in each year since 1986. [36693]

Mr. Soames: I am unable to provide any details before April 1992. Since that date public interest immunity certificates have been signed by Ministers in this Department to cover a number of individual subjects and, in the event not all the certificates have been used. Total numbers for each year are as follows:

1993: 5
1994: 2
1995: 3

Submarines (Allowances)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what extra allowances are currently paid to those employed on submarines. [36335]

Mr. Soames: Apart from submarine pay, the details of which I gave to the hon. Member in my answer of 18 July 1995, Official Report, column 1184, no extra allowances are paid to personnel because of their specific service aboard submarines. However, all service personnel who are serving in the Royal Navy and Royal Marines who are in receipt of United Kingdom rates of pay and who have served a minimum of two years at sea are eligible for longer service at sea bonus, providing they are serving in a qualifying unit, such as the submarine flotilla. Additionally, in recognition of their sea service they receive a waiver of food and accommodation charges and extra travel warrants on return to the United Kingdom.

Travel Allowances

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what rates of travel allowance may be claimed by civil servants in his Department when using their own vehicles for official business. [36365]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The rates of travel allowance currently in payment are as follows:

Type	Engine cc / Cars	Full rate p/mile £	Lower tier p/mile £	Rate effective date
Standard Rate Motor Mileage Allowance (SRMMA)	Cars
	0–1000	0.27	0.15	6 April 1995
	1001–1500	0.34	0.19
	1501–2000	0.43	0.23
	2001 and over	0.60	0.32
	Motorcycles
	0–125	0.158	0.062	6 April 1995
	126 and over	0.242	0.090
Public Transport Rate Motor Mileage Allowance (PTRMMA)	All cars	0.238		6 April 1995
	Motorcycles
	0–125	0.158		6 April 1995
	126 and over	0.238
Candidates for Employment	All cars and motorcycles	0.10		1 April 1989
Bicycle		0.062		6 April 1995

Note:
Under current regulations SRMMA may be claimed at full rate to a limit of 4000 miles (1995–96 financial year). Any additional mileage travelled is restricted to the Lower Tier rate.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the total cost of travel expenses claimed by civil servants using their own vehicles for official business in each of the last five years in his Department; and what would have been the saving in the last year if the maximum rate that could be claimed was set at the lowest rate. [36366]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The total costs of mileage allowances claimed by Ministry of Defence civilian staff using their own vehicles for official business in each of the last five year is as follows:

1991–92: £11,800,000
1992–93: £11,840,000
1993–94: £11,230,000
1994–95: £10,710,000

The estimated savings in the last year—1994–95—if the mileage rate which could be claimed was set at the lowest rate is:

£1,680,000 (= 15.7 per cent. of the actual cost).

Overseas Troops

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of British troops in the various countries where they are stationed. [36350]

Mr. Soames: The number of British Army troops stationed at permanent overseas garrisons is as follows:

	Number
Germany	26,500
Hong Kong	2,600
Brunei	680
Cyprus	2,700
Falkland Islands	300
Gibraltar	60

In addition, about 74,000 Army troops are stationed in the United Kingdom.

Officers and soldiers from these permanent garrisons are deployed on short-term operational and other tours in a further 77 countries including as defence and military attachés.

Civilian Projects

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many times each of the armed services has been (a) used and (b) requested to carry out civilian projects for private individuals in the last five years. [36974]

Mr. Soames: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. A large number of requests for military aid to the civil community are for work of a minor nature and are handled on a local basis.

Some training projects are carried out on private land in Scotland from time to time.

Ms Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish details of the guidelines and regulations by which the armed services can be used to carry out civilian projects for private individuals. [36975]

Mr. Soames: Instructions on the conduct of military aid to the civil community, whereby service personnel and equipment can be provided either in emergencies or as a routine activity, are contained in a joint service publication and are summarised in a pamphlet which is available to civil authorities and others. I am placing a copy of the pamphlet in the Library of the House. Examples of routine assistance on special projects are construction, demolition, repair and rehabilitation work. Tasks must be of social value to the community and of good training value to the services.

Separate regulations exist to cover circumstances in which Royal Engineer or other service units perform tasks of material benefit to a landowner which offer unusual or exceptional training value, the opportunity for which is not readily available on Ministry of Defence property. Such tasks may be undertaken on the basis that the landowner pays for all materials consumed, while we do not seek to recover the labour, plant and transport costs. These regulations are contained in "Army General and Administrative Instructions", which are classified documents.

Ms Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many times, by whom and what was the cost of using (a) the Army, (b) the Royal Air Force and (c) the Royal Navy to carry out civilian projects for private individuals in Scotland in the last five years. [36976]

Mr. Soames: There are 31 recorded cases of Royal Engineer units of the Army carrying out projects in Scotland in the last five years in the course of training on private land, although the costs are not kept separately from those of the cost of normal training. The Royal Navy and Royal Air Force have no records of such activities over the last five years.

Research (Radiation Tests)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the research projects his Department has undertaken since 1965 involving radiation tests on humans. [36729]

Mr. Arbuthnot: This information in the form requested is not available, but the subject has been investigated and no evidence has been found of any MOD involvement in unethical radiation experiments on humans.

Duke of Atholl

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost to the public funds of the use of armed forces personnel by the Duke of Atholl to shore up the bank at Glen Tilt. [36973]

Mr. Soames: The work carried out on the River Tilt presented an exceptional opportunity for a Territorial Army unit to undertake tasks of major training value. The work was primarily of benefit to householders living outside the Atholl estate. No significant extra costs to public funds were incurred as the Duke of Atholl paid for all materials consumed.

Hawk Weapons

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his Answer of 3 May, official Report, column 525, what studies he will conduct about long-term arrangements to support Hawk detachments at RAF St. Athan; and what is his estimate of the long-term cost of making permanent provision for them. [36963]

Mr. Soames: A number of options have been identified to meet the Hawk weapons detachment requirement at RAF St. Athan. An independent option study has been commissioned to examine these options and to determine the most cost-effective permanent arrangement. It is not our practice to publish assessments of the long-term costs of possible options within the defence forward programme.

Outsourcing Contracts

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many outsourcing contracts were granted by his Department or agencies in each year since 1990, indicating the nature and value of each contract; and if any additional work was added and of what value to (a) Hoskyn/Cap Gemini Segeti, (b) AT and T Istel, (c) EDS, (d) Sema Group, (e) Datasolve, (f) ITN Net,

(g) Andersen Consulting, (h) Centre File, (i) BIS, (j) Telecom Capita, (k) ICL, (l) Digital Equipment, (m) CFM, (n) Siemens, (o) Nixdorf, (p) CMG and (q) Logica. [37003]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The information is not held centrally in the form requested, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

However, such information as is available is detailed in the table.

We have no records of any MOD contract in this time scale with the following companies:

Datasolve
ITN Net
Centre File
Telecom Capita

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the rights of individual members of the public to make complaints to any of the appropriate ombudsmen about services or projects funded through the private finance initiative in his Department. [36837]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The parliamentary ombudsman has, subject to the conditions of the Parliamentary Commissioner Act 1967, jurisdiction to investigate complaints from members of the public about the way they have been treated by Government Departments, other public sector bodies engaged in the work of central Government, and those acting on their behalf. The ombudsman can investigate complaints about projects or services funded through the private finance initiative if they are carried out by or on behalf of a Department or public body within their jurisdiction, that is those bodies which are listed in schedule 2 of the 1967 Act.

Market Testing (Health Services)

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what personnel implications will follow from market testing health services for British forces; and if he will make a statement. [36979]

Mr. Soames: It is not possible at this time to say what the personnel implications of the market test of health services in British Forces Germany will be. The winning tender by the Health Alliance is subject to further detailed contractual discussions as well as consultation with the staff and their representatives in UK and Germany. Any proposals will, however, be in full compliance with the terms and conditions of service, and appropriate British or German legislation.

Jobs

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of jobs are defence-related in (a) all England and Welsh counties, (b) Wales and (c) Scotland. [36782]

Mr. Arbuthnot: This information is not available in the form requested."UK Defence Statistics 1995", a copy of which is in the Library of the House shows that, in 1994, the deployment of service and MOD civilian personnel, and the estimated number of jobs directly associated with my Department's expenditure on equipment, were as follows:

	England	Wales	Scotland
Service personnel	156,000	4,800	18,400
MOD civilian staff	95,000	4,900	11,200
Jobs directly dependent on MOD equipment spending	93,000	1,000	8,000
Total	344,000	10,700	37,600

The relevant tables in "UK Defence Statistics 1995" [1.9 and 2.4] break down the figures for England by standard region, but not by county. The figures for jobs in industry do not include jobs dependent on non-equipment expenditure, or on defence exports; nor do they include jobs at subcontractors and other suppliers to MOD contractors. Within the UK as a whole, such jobs are estimated to amount to an additional 280,000, but no breakdown of this UK total is available.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to protect defence-related jobs in the south west in the coming year; and if he will make a statement. [36781]

Mr. Arbuthnot: My Department's objective is to obtain the best value for money possible for the defence budget, rather than to protect employment in any particular area though, as an employer, we naturally have regard to the employment implications of our decisions. As a customer of industry, we believe that where companies locate, and where they choose to carry out work on our contracts, are matters for the companies themselves to decide. They may of course be eligible for regional assistance, but this is not the responsibility of my Department.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the total British work force is employed in defence-related jobs. [36784]

Mr Arbuthnot: The proportion of the United Kingdom workforce employed in defence-related jobs was approximately 3 per cent., based on the following figures.

	Number
Strength of Armed Forces on 1 April 1994	254,500
MOD UK-based civilian staff on 1 April 1994	121,600
Estimated UK employment dependent on defence expenditure in 1993–94 (the latest year for which an estimate is available)	395,000
Average UK workforce in employment 1993–94	25,412,000

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the number of defence-related jobs in Devon and Cornwall. [36783]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Such information as is available is compiled by region rather than by county. The "UK Defence Statistics 1995", a copy of which is in the Library of the House, shows that, in 1994, some 39,700 service personnel, and some 24,800 MOD civilian staff were deployed in the south-west region. In addition, some 18,000 jobs in the region were estimated to be directly associated with my Department's expenditure on equipment. This last figure does not include jobs dependent on non-equipment expenditure, or on defence exports; nor does it include jobs at subcontractors and other suppliers to MOD contractors. Within the United Kingdom as a whole, such jobs are estimated to amount to an additional 280,000, but no regional breakdown of this figure is available.

RAF Chivenor

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has changed his policy about the future of the runway at RAF Chivenor since 3 May; and what information about the future of the runway he communicated to a delegation from north Devon. [36985]

Mr. Soames: There has been no change in the policy about the future of the runway. I confirmed to members of the delegation from north Devon, whom I met on 26 June 1995, that the runway at Chivenor would not be broken up as a consequence of any relocation of Royal Marine units there, and that the long-term civil aviation needs for north Devon were a matter for the Department of Transport.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now commission an investigation into possible joint uses of the runway at RAF Chivenor by any elements of the armed forces, in order to maintain the runway's viability in the long term. [36986]

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 10 May, Official Report, column 526.

Health Services, Germany

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the statement of requirements for the procurement of community, primary, secondary and dental health services for British forces in Germany. [36977]

Mr. Soames: A copy of the statement of requirement is being placed in the Library of the House.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the companies that tendered for, and those that have been shortlisted for, the procurement of community, primary, secondary and dental health services for British forces in Germany indicating non-profit-making organisations. [36978]

Mr. Soames: Tenders for the provision of primary, community and secondary health care to the Army and community and secondary health care to the RAF in Germany for five years from 1 April 1996 were submitted by three potential providers:

a. The Health Alliance—an in-house bid in partnerships with a consortium headed by Guy's and St Thomas' Hospital NHS Trust and including the Soldiers, Sailors and Airmens Families Association.

b. BMI Health Care in Association with Bradford Community Health NHS Trust.

c. Synapse—a consortium including Trafford NHS Trust, Lakeview Learning and Independent British Health Care.

BMI Healthcare and Lakeview Learning were the only private sector organisations involved.

RAF Valley

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 3 May, Official Report, column 525, what progress has been made in introducing contractorising of support services at RAF Valley; and what bids have been received from the RAF itself in these contracting processes. [36962]

Mr. Soames: An invitation to tender was issued on 14 September, leading to a planned contractor award in April 1996. Following consultation with the trades unions and other interested parties, it has been decided not to proceed with an in-house bid.

Aberport Range

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the sources of income for the Aberport range under agency status. [36984]

Mr. Arbuthnot: This is s a matter for the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Nick Harvey, dated 16 October 1995:

Your Parliamentary Question (No 36984) dated 20 July asked the Secretary of State for Defence for the sources of income for the Aberporth range under agency status. Your letter has been passed to me since I am responsible for the day to day running of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency which now includes the Defence Test and Evaluation Organisation's site at Aberporth.

Under agency status, all but a small percentage of Aberporth's income will come from the MOD. The most important customers are the Armed Services (the RAF are forecast to provide about 54% of Aberporth's income and the RN about 5%) and the next most important is the MOD's Procurement Executive with about 33 per cent.

I hope that this is helpful.

Sea Dumping (Munitions)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he has taken in regard to the reply H–0293/95, by the European Commission to Christine Crawley MEP, in question No. 87 at Question Time in the European Parliament on 17 May, that it is up to European Union member state authorities to provide information on the nature and quantities of munitions disposed at sea and their location, and to investigate the prospective environmental risks arising in order to minimise them. [36763]

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 31 March 1995, Official Report, column 875. Current scientific evidence indicates that dumped munitions present no significant risk to human health or the marine environment.

Trident

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimates were made of the cost of the work to be undertaken at the Atomic Weapons Establishment Aldermaston in support of the Trident programme before the work started. [37145]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Estimates were made of the manpower and materials costs that would be involved at the Atomic Weapons Establishment in the design, development and production of the UK Trident warhead. These were reflected in the budget for the establishment. It was also recognised that, as well as utilising existing AWE facilities, the programme would in due course make use of new facilities, coming on stream, in the normal course of renewal.

Tornado

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) by squadron, air base and contracted company details of the efficiency of Tornado maintenance contracts since they were first contracted out and (b) by squadron and air base details of the efficiency of Tornado maintenance in the five year period prior to contracting out. [37039]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The level of contractor involvement in Tornado maintenance and rectification at squadron and air base level is minimal. RAF personnel undertake almost all of this work and there are no plans significantly to increase the level of contractorisation.

Royal Naval College, Dartmouth

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost of hiring from abroad diesel powered submarines for training by the Royal Naval Training College, Dartmouth. [37095]

Mr. Arbuthnot: We do not hire diesel powered submarines from abroad for training by the Royal Naval College, Dartmouth.

Defence Agreement

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a list of all papers released since 1988 by the Public Records Office that refer specifically to the 1958 US/UK mutual defence agreement. [37146]

Mr. Soames: No. The information requested can be obtained through examination of the lists at the Public Record Office, Kew.

Submarines

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many diesel powered submarines are owned and operated by the Royal Navy. [37094]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The Royal Navy owns four upholder class diesel powered submarines. These are not in operation and we are continuing to examine options for their sale, lease or long term storage.

Small Arms Ammunition

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the failure rate of small arms ammunition ordered by his Department from Portugal. [37148]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The competition to supply the 7.62mm sniper ammunition for the National Rifle Association for use at its Bisley tournaments in 1995 and 1996 was won by INDEP of Portugal. Following representations from the association about the misfire rate of the ammunition, the Defence Test and Evaluation Organisation carried out extensive tests of the ammunition on standard service issue sniper rifles. No misfires occurred in these tests. It is therefore likely that the misfires reported by the association were a result of using the ammunition in non-standard weapons.

Gurkhas

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the pension arrangements for the Gurkhas serving the Crown are the same as for other members of the armed services. [37096]

Mr. Soames: No. Pensions received by ex-British Gurkha pensioners are governed by the 1947 tripartite agreement, between the Governments of the United Kingdom, India and Nepal. Under the terms of this agreement, which requires British Gurkha personnel to be discharged in their homeland of Nepal, pension provision is governed by the rates paid to Indian Army pensioners. All British Gurkha personnel have to serve a minimum of 15 years before they are eligible to receive a service retirement pension.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans his Department has to share nuclear weapon designs or nuclear weapon technology with the French Government. [37144]

Mr. Arbuthnot: We maintain contacts with France on a range of issues relating to nuclear weapons. These contacts include some technical matters and exchanges between scientists. It is not our practice to reveal further details.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what have been his responses to the communication sent by Colonel James Sullivan of the office of the Secretary of the US Air Force on 17 November 1994, concerning the destruction of Pan Am Flight 103 over Lockerbie. [37439]

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 6 March 1995, Official Report, column 11.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Brent Spar

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if his Department received copies of the reports produced by Smit Engineering and Heeremac prior to the decision to approve the sea dumping of Brent Spar. [36447]

Mr. Eggar: The reports submitted by Shell to my Department are listed in the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 4 July 1995, Official Report, columns 152–54. They included studies by McDermott Engineering (Europe) Ltd. and Heerema Engineering Services (UK) Ltd. These studies addressed the fulls cope of work necessary for onshore disposal and showed the cost of that option to be significantly higher than the preliminary assessment by Smit Engineering. The McDermott and Heerema studies contributed to the decision that deep-sea disposal was the best practicable environmental option for the Brent Spar.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what research his Department has commissioned into the cumulative environmental impact of sea dumping 50 to 60 production facilities prior to the decision to approve the sea dumping of Brent Spar. [36448]

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill (Mrs. Fyfe) on 18 July 1995, Official Report, column 1215.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what research his or any other Government Department had commissioned and received on the environmental impact of sea dumping Brent Spar on the deep ocean ecosystems prior to approving the sea dumping of Brent Spar; [36449]

(2) what was the conclusion of the AURIS report on the proposed sea dumping of Brent Spar relating to the possibility of the Brent Spar breaking up immediately after or during the sea dumping operation; [36451]

(3) what research drew his Department to the conclusion that the contents of the Brent Spar would disperse slowly over thousands of years. [36450]

Mr. Eggar: The Brent Spar Impact Hypothesis by Rudall Blanchard Associates Ltd. dated December 1994 succeeded earlier work carried out by Aberdeen university. The later study concluded that the most likely scenario was that the structure would remain largely intact after its impact with the seabed and would corrode very slowly, probably over the next 4,000 years, in the deep waters of the north-east Atlantic. Government scientists also considered the possibility that the Spar would break up during its descent, or on impact with the seabed. They concluded that, in any of those scenarios, the consequences in terms of risk to the food chain, human health and potential environmental impact would have been insignificant.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if the samples taken from the contents of the Brent Spar were analysed before the decision to approve the sea dumping of Brent Spar was made; on what date they were analysed; and when the results were notified to his Department; [36455]

(2) what samples were taken from the contents of the Brent Spar by his Department, the Ministry of Fisheries and Food or Aberdeen university prior to the decision to approve the sea dumping of Brent Spar. [36454]

Mr. Eggar: Independent surveys were carried out which enabled Shell to assess the contents of the Spar and to satisfy Government that deep-sea disposal was the best practicable environmental option. The Norwegian certifying authority, Det Norske Veritas, has been commissioned to undertake a further independent assessment of the structure and contents of the Spar. I understand that the results of that study will be available on 18 October.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if his Department was aware of a memorandum dated 6 December 1993 from W. McMinn, an official of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, on the toxicity of the waste water in Brent Spar and recommending the prohibition of discharge prior to the decision to approve sea dumping of Brent Spar. [36452]

Mr. Eggar: My Department was not aware of the internal MAFF memorandum prior to the decision. Comments made in that memorandum about the discharge of the contents of the storage tanks were made in the context of removing the oily sludge and ballast water as part of an onshore dismantling option and dumping them in shallow coastal waters. That was totally different to the disposal of the entire structure in over 2,200 m of water in the north-east Atlantic. MAFF issued a statement on 20 June 1995 which it made clear that the concerns expressed in the leaked paper did not apply to deep-sea disposal of the Brent Spar.

Research Council Funding

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the number of grants and their value for responsive mode funding for chemistry and materials by the Engineering and Physical Sciences Research Council for the current funding year and comparable figures for the Science and Engineering Research Council in the previous three years. [36408]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The number of grants and their value for repsonsive mode funding in the chemistry and materials programme of the EPSRC, and figures for SERC in the previous three years, are given in the following table:

	Chemistry		Materials
Year	Number	Value £ Million	Number	Value £ Million
SERC (September–August)
1991–92	110	6.1	205	20.6
1992–93	180	12.5	330	44.2
1993–94	309	25.2	256	29.9
EPSRC[1] (April–July)
1995	115	9.1	100	10.1

[1] The EPSRC came into effect on 1 April 1994 and introduced new procedures for awarding grants from April 1995. The period from September 1994 to April 1995 was an interregnum period in which no significant awards were made.

Non-fossil Fuel Option

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 4 April, Official Report, column 1011, when he now expects to make an initial announcement about the timetable for NFFO-4 bids. [37277]

Mr. Page: I hope to be able to make an initial announcement shortly on arrangements for the fourth round of bidding for electricity from renewable sources of energy, known as NFF0-4. My expectation is that further details will be given in Renewable Energy Bulletin No. 6, REB-6, to be published soon after the initial announcement.

British Catalogue Exhibition, Yemen

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to the letter of 4 April from the Minister of State, the right hon. Member for Wiltshire, North (Mr. Needham), if he will make a statement on his Department's efforts to stage a British catalogue exhibition in Yemen [37290]

Mr. Nelson: My Department is planning to run four catalogue exhibitions in the Republic of Yemen during the first six months of 1996. The exhibitions will be held in the capital, Sana'a and in Taiz, Hodaidah and Aden. Possible dates and venues are being discussed with the local chambers of commerce.

Trade Promotion (Uzbekistan)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on his Department's efforts to promote trade between Britain and Uzbekistan. [36555]

Mr. Nelson: Promotion of trade between the United Kingdom and Uzbekistan is spearheaded by a separate section in my Department dedicated to the southern republics of the former Soviet Union. Set up in 1993, following the break-up of the Soviet Union the previous year, the DTI's central Asia and Transcaucasia section is supported by an export promoter for central Asia seconded from the private sector. Its work is complemented by more specialist parts of the DTI such as the oil and gas projects and supplies office, which advises British companies on opportunities in the energy sector, and the projects export promotion division, which assists UK companies in their pursuit of capital projects overseas.

My Department's trade promotion effort for Uzbekistan is assisted by the Uzbek-British Trade and Industry Council, UBTIC, a high-level forum of senior business men and trade promotion officials from both sides, whose role is to facilitate bilateral trade and investment by British companies in Uzbekistan. The DTI provides two permanent members of UBTIC and also acts as the UK secretariat. UBTIC is chaired on the Uzbekistan side at deputy prime ministerial level while the UK chairman is Geoffrey Bray, a retired senior British business man and former chairman of the BSCC, previously the British Soviet Chamber of Commerce.

In addition to its day-to-day work advising British companies on business opportunities in Uzbekistan the DTI is actively involved in high profile events such as overseas trade missions, VIP inward visits and seminars and conferences. My right hon. Friend the Minister for Industry and Energy led a trade mission of 25 leading business men to Uzbekistan in May 1994. In March this year, my Department provided financial support to the BSCC's trade mission to Uzbekistan and Kazakhstan. Last month, the Viscount Goschen, Minister for Aviation and Shipping, led a trade mission of British companies in the transport sector to Uzbekistan and elsewhere in central Asia; the DTI, in conjunction with the British embassies in Tashkent and Almaty, provided the administrative and briefing support for this mission.

Here in the UK, the DTI supported the "Doing Business in Uzbekistan" conference in London organised by IBC Financial Focus and will provide support for a similar conference, also organised by IBC, next month. With a number of senior Uzbek Ministers and officials coming to the UK for the conference, the DTI hopes to organise the next meeting of the Uzbek-British Trade and Industry Council around that time. The DTI also supported seminars on central Asia at the Government office in Nottingham in June and at the London chamber of commerce and industry in July. The export promoter for central Asia spoke at both these events.

Officials in my Department are conscious that, while the overall level of UK trade with, and investment in, Uzbekistan is satisfactory, our commercial success there is largely attributable to the activities of just a few major companies. The DTI is accordingly reviewing its strategy for central Asia and Transcaucasia with a view to increasing the awareness among UK companies of the opportunities which exits both in Uzbekistan and elsewhere in the region.

Radiation Experiments

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 18 July column 1221, what are the ethical guidelines relating to radiation experiments on humans. [36755]

Mr. Ian Taylor: As early as 1953, the MRC defined an explicit requirement that informed consent should be obtained by clinical investigators from participants in research. This was complemented in 1963 by a comprehensive statement, "Responsibility in Investigations on Human Subjects", which outlined the standards relating to the use of volunteers in medical research. These guidelines are kept continually under review, and in 1991 strict MRC guidance was drawn up relating specifically to the conduct of research on the mentally incapacitated.

The MRC does not carry out experiments on human volunteers without obtaining their written permission, and without providing them with detailed information about the purpose of the study and nature of their involvement. Furthermore, such volunteers can withdraw at any time.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultations the Medical Research Council had with the parents of children whose body parts were used for radioactivity-related studies from 1965 to 1970. [36445]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Under the Human Tissue Act 1961, consultation with the parents of the children involved would have been the responsibility of the person in lawful possession of the body. This would have been a member of the hospital staff where the post mortem took place, not the Medical Research Council researchers. As far as can be ascertained, it is believed that appropriate consultation took place and that body parts were removed in compliance with the Act.

Mr. Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what research the Medical Research Council undertook involving the removal of bones from the corpses of children in Clwyd between 1965 and 1970. [36446]

Mr. Taylor: Nationwide studies looking into the concentration of strontium-90 in human bones were carried out between 1955 and 1970 under the joint auspices of the Medical Research Council and the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority. For the purpose of this research, pathologists in various parts of the UK supplied samples of fresh bones obtained at autopsy from the bodies of subjects of different age groups, including infants and children.

From 1959 onwards, results of this study incorporated regional breakdowns by domicile of the people whose bones were used. Information is available for the former county of Denbighshire which roughly corresponds to the present county of Clwyd. This shows that between 1965 and 1970 samples were taken from 18 children who had died aged three months to 17 years.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Medical Research Council on radioactivity experiments conducted on civilians under the direction of the Medical Research Council without the knowledge of the subjects concerned. [36760]

Mr. Taylor: The Medical Research Council does not carry out experiments on human volunteers without obtaining their written permission, and without providing them with detailed information about the purpose of the study and the nature of their involvement. Volunteers are given the opportunity to withdraw at any point. There are strict MRC guidelines relating specifically to the conduct of research on children and the mentally incapacitated.

Public Interest Immunity Certificate

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, how many public interest certificates his Department has issued in each year since 1986. [36688]

Mr. Lang: My Department's records show that, since April 1992, 21 public interest immunity certificates have been signed by Ministers of this Department, five of which did not need to be deployed. No central record is kept of certificates signed before that date.

Jaguar X200 Project

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he examined the costings before agreeing to subsidise the building of the new Jaguar in the United Kingdom; what considerations led him to decide that the subsidy was necessary; and if he will publish the detailed evidence leading him to his conclusion. [36215]

Mr. Eggar: DTI Ministers and officials had long and detailed discussions with Ford and Jaguar to evaluate the X200 project.

The conclusions reached was that there was a strong and genuine commercial case for supporting the project. Moreover, the project will create a significant number of jobs at Jaguar and in the components supply base. The X200 project will also help secure the long-term future of Jaguar's manufacturing operations in the UK.

The information provided by Jaguar to enable the valuation to be carried out was commercially and market sensitive and given in confidence to the Department.

Outstanding Contracts

Mr. McNamara: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many outstanding contracts were granted by his Department or agencies in each year since 1990, indicating the nature and value of each contract; and if any additional work was added and of what value to (a) Hoskyns/Cap Gemini Segeti, (b) AT and T Istel, (c) EDS, (d) Sema Group, (e) Datasolve, (f) ITN Net, (g) Andersen Consulting, (h) Centre File, (i) BIS, (j) Telecom Capita, (k) ICL, (l) Digital Equipment, (m) CFM, (n) Siemens, (o) Nixdorf, (p) CMG and (q) Logica. [36997]

Mr. Lang: Such information is not readily available for the whole Department and could be assembled only at disproportionate cost. However, major contracts let through the DTI's central IT purchasing section relating to the companies listed are as follows:

Company	Period of contract	Value	Comment
1. Hoskyns	November 1994—November 1997	Dependent on volume of work but estimated to be in the region of £15 million–£25 million	Contracting out of IT Service provision.
2. ICL	April 1994–April 1997	£25 million approximately	Project OSPREY—to introduce office automation facilities throughout DTI Headquarters and Regional Offices.
3. SEMA	1994–97	£612k	In each case, the figure quoted reflects the aggregate value of a number of contracts let during the first year of a framework agreement.
CMG	1994–97	£1,469k
LOGICA	1994–97	£95k

Economic Policy

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what effect the Government's monetary and exchange rate policies have had on the demand for British-produced cars at home and abroad. [36205]

Mr. Eggar: The Government's monetary policy is to deliver low inflation and this has been around 3 per cent. for two years. This gives businesses the confidence to invest in the UK. Along with a competitive pound, increases in productivity over the years have allowed British-based manufacturers to operate much more effectively.

Continuing healthy demand for British cars was reflected in 1994 total car production figures of 1,466,800, of which 618,700—42 per cent.—were for the export market. This represents a 6.3 per cent. increase in production and 38.7 per cent. in exports over 1993.

Company Mergers

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received urging referral of the bids for Southern Electricity, Midlands Electricity and NORWEB by National Power, PowerGen and North West Water to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. [37482]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The Department has received a number of letters concerning these proposed mergers. In line with standard practice, all correspondence has been forwarded to the Director General of Fair Trading, who will, in due course, advise my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on whether he should refer the proposed mergers to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Plutonium Exports

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the French authorities have informed his Department or the British nuclear authorities of the research use for which the plutonium exported to France from the United Kingdom was put, to which reference is made at footnote 3*(a)* of his departmental press release P/95/455 of 13 July on plutonium figures. [36762]

Mr. Page: The plutonium exported to France was material for fast reactor research purposes and is subject to Euratom safegards.

International Atomic Energy Agency General Conference

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals were put by the United Kingdom to the 39th session of the International Atomic Energy Agency general conference in Vienna in September; how were they received; how the United Kingdom responded to or voted on proposals put by other member states of the IAEA; and if he will place in the Library a copy of the United Kingdom submission and final decisions and declarations from the conferences. [37255]

Mr. Page: The UK delegation to the 39th general conference of the IAEA played a full part in the drafting and submission by the European Union of resolutions covering the strengthening of IAEA safeguards, illicit trafficking in nuclear materials, the Convention on Nuclear Safety and the implementation of UN Security Council resolutions relating to Iraq. These draft resolutions were in some cases amended slightly in negotiation with other delegations, but all were eventually adopted by consensus. The UK delegation also participated fully in discussions concerning other resolutions and decisions of the conference.

A copy of the document produced by the IAEA containing resolutions and other decisions of the general conference will be placed in the Library of the House when it becomes available.

Minors (Credit Facilities)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will investigate the extent to which banks, and other commercial institutions may, within current statutory provisions, make direct approaches to juveniles under the age of 18 years offering immediate credit; and if he will make a statement. [37357]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Lenders tend not to provide credit to minors because generally their debts cannot be legally enforced.

Under the Consumer Credit Act 1974 it is an offence knowingly to invite a minor to borrow money, or to take credit.

The Government have no plans to investigate.

Mobile Fresh Water Tanks

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what statutory or other requirements have been made by Her Majesty's Government to require water companies to have available a given number of mobile fresh water tanks, wheeled or otherwise, related to the numbers of population served; and what national arrangements it has made for supply of such equipment in emergencies. [37304]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to this question by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment today at column 162.

Nuclear Industry (Privatisation)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what public consultation process he intends to undertake in connection with the proposal to transfer the licenses for nuclear sites to private operators; [36336]

(2) what public consultation he intends to undertake in connection with the proposal to split ownership and licensing of certain nuclear sites between private and public ownership. [36337]

Mr. Eggar: Responsibility for licensing of nuclear sites rests with the independent Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate. I understand that the HSE has used its discretionary powers under the Nuclear Installations Act 1965, as amended, to direct licence applicants to carry out a public body consultation which will last for a period of three months.

BMARC

Mr. Wilson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he has anything to add to his answers of 28 April, Official Report, column 725, and 20 June, Official Report, column 175, or to the answers of the Secretary of State for Defence of 25 April, Official Report, column 488, 20 June, Official Report, column 237, 27 June, Official Report, column 601 and 18 July, Official Report, columns 1188–89, on BMARC. [37318]

Mr. Nelson: I can only comment on the two answers which were given by my Department. I have nothing to add to those answers.

Industrial and Provident Societies

Mr. Keen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if action is being taken to bring the scale of fees for industrial and provident societies into line with those now established for limited companies; what efforts his Department is making to ensure that the deregulation initiative guarantees a level playing field between industrial and provident societies and private companies; and if he will make a statement. [32424]

Mrs. Angela Knight: I have been asked to reply.

As part of the Government's deregulation initiative, we intend to bring audit requirements for industrial and provident societies broadly into line with those for companies. This will involve a relaxation of the requirement to prepare and submit accounts and an increase in the audit thresholds. A consultation exercise on these and other deregulatory changes to the Industrial and Provident Societies Acts was carried out earlier this year. The measures will be implemented through an Order under section 1 of the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994. The draft order will be laid early in the next session.

The Government have no plans to bring the fees for industrial and provident societies into line with those for limited companies. The higher fees in part reflect the more detailed registration procedure for societies, which is needed to ensure that they are either bona fide co-operatives of that they operate for the benefit of the community and so do not need to be registered as companies. However, the Government keep societies' fees under annual review.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Market Testing

38. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what discussions he has had with civil service trade unions concerning market testing. [35893]

Mr. Horam: Market testing has been a regular subject for discussion at meetings between Ministers and the civil service trade unions.

Ministerial Responsibilities

39. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on how he has exercised his new responsibilities. [35894]

The Deputy Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the oral answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Neath (Mr. Hain).

Competitiveness

40. Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what role the Cabinet Office will play in enhancing the competitiveness of United Kingdom industry during the next 12 months. [35895]

Mr. Freeman: The Cabinet Office takes forward the competitiveness agenda within Government and with industry. The Deputy Prime Minister regularly discusses competitiveness issues with Cabinet colleagues in the ED(C) Committee, and maintains a close dialogue with business. We will produce a third report on national competitiveness next year.

Civil Service Morale

42. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on morale in the civil service since 5 July. [35897]

Mr. Horam: Morale in the civil service is best maintained at a high level by allowing staff to perform to the best of their abilities in their chosen career. This Government's civil service reforms enable staff to focus their attention on delivering high quality public services efficiency and effectively.

Travel Allowances

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what rates of travel allowance may be claimed by civil servants in his Department when using their vehicles for official business. [36357]

Mr. Horam: The current rates of travel allowance which may be claimed by civil servants in the Cabinet Office, the Office of Public Service and its agencies, Her Majesty's Stationery Office and the Central Office of Information, are listed. The rates payable in the Cabinet Office, including the Office of Public Service, are being reviewed.

Mr. Horam: This information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Betts: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement about the rights of individual members of the public to make complaints to any of the appropriate ombudsmen about services or projects funded through the private finance initiative in his Department. [36835]

The Deputy Prime Minister: Members of the public would have the same rights to make complaints of alleged maladministration to the relevant ombudsman concerning a project funded through the private finance initiative on behalf of my Departments as they would if the project were publicly financed.

Civil Service Pensions

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the average and median civil service pension in payment, indicating the highest and lowest figures; and if he will provide the same information in respect of dependants' pensions. [37138]

Mr. Horam: The average annual rate of civil service pension in payment to retired officers is £4,325; the median is £3,015. The amounts of individual pensions range from £62,460 to £2.87.

The average annual rate of pension in payment to dependants of former pension scheme members is £1,820; the median is £1,202. The amounts of individual dependants' pensions range from £26,334 to £2.21.

Outsourcing Contracts

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many outsourcing contracts were granted by his Department or agencies in each year since 1990, indicating the nature and value of each contract; and if any additional work was added and of what value to (a) Hoskyns/Cap Gemini Segeti, (b) AT and T Istel, (c) EDS, (d) Sema Group, (e) Datasolve, (f) ITN Net,

Mr. Horam: The nature of current outsourcing contracts let by my Department and agencies since 1990 with the firms listed is set out in the table. Individual contract values, representing the total anticipated cost of the contracts, have been aggregated to preserve commercial confidentiality. The estimated total value of the contracts is £5,239,149. Further information is available only at disproportionate cost.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Outsourcing Contracts

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many outsourcing contracts were granted by his Department or agencies in each year since 1990, indicating the nature and value of each contract; and if any additional work was added and of what value to (a) Hoskyns/CAP Gemini Segeti, (b) AT and T Istel, (c) EDS, (d) SEMA Group, (e) Datasolve, (f) ITN Net, (g) Andersen Consulting, (h) Centre file, (i) BIS, (j) Telecom Capita, (k) ICL, (l) Digital Equipment, (m) CFM, (n) Siemens, (o) Nixdorf, (p) CMG and (q) Logica. [36998]

Mr. Howard: Since 1990 my Department has let one outsourcing contract to SEMA Group for the provision of IT support. The contract was let on 1 November 1994 and was worth approximately £50 million over five years, excluding VAT. There has been no additional work added to the contract.

Convicted Prisoners Inquiry

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on action he has taken since the receipt of new evidence on 8 June 1993 in the case of convicted prisoners Michael Hickey, Jim Robinson and Vincent Hickey. [37476]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The Merseyside police were asked to make inquiries into some of the matters raised in the petition of 8 June 1993. These inquiries were subsequently widened to take into account further representations submitted during 1994. A report from the police was submitted to us in May 1995 and we are considering it along with all other information about the case in order to decide whether there are grounds for any action.

Immigration Detainees

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) males and (b) females whose identity is in doubt are currently being detained; and what is the longest current period of detention. [37479]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Information on the total number of persons detained under the Immigration Act 1971 whose identity is in doubt is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate costs. The longest current period of detention for such a person is nearly 16 months.

National Lottery

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will show for each month since money started to flow from the national lottery how much has been (a) disbursed to charities and voluntary organisations, (b) spent on the establishment, administration and running costs of the National Lottery Charities Board and (c) spent, disbursed or deducted for any other purpose. [37485]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The information is not immediately available in the form requested; I will write to the hon. Member. To date, £493 million has been awarded to good causes by 10 of the 11 distributing bodies. Over 70 per cent. of those organisations which have been awarded funds are charities or voluntary organisations working in the fields of national heritage, sports and the arts. I understand that the National Lottery Charities Board will be announcing its first grant awards on 23 October.

By then, the board will have spent some £6.5 million—less than 3 per cent. of the money currently available to it—on one-off start-up costs and on administration. This compares favourably with other major grant-giving operations. The board expects to have some £300 million to distribute to the voluntary sector next year and subsequent years.

The National Lottery etc. Act 1993 provides for expenses incurred by the Secretary of State for National Heritage, the Home Secretary, the Office of the National Lottery and the distributing bodies to be recouped from the National lottery distribution fund. To date these have amounted to £18.9 million out of the £1 billion income from the lottery.

Firearms

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the incidence of the use of firearms in the pursuit of crime in each of the last 20 years. [36442]

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is published annually in table 3.1 of chapter 3 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", copies of which can be found in the Library.

Information for 1994 will be published during November.

Travel Allowances

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what rates of travel allowance may be claimed by civil servants in his Department when using their own vehicles for official business. [36363]

Mr. Howard: There are two classes of reimbursement of cost for staff who use their own vehicles for official business.

"Public Transport Rate" is currently 23.8p per mile for motor cars, 12.9p per mile for motor cycles with an engine capacity of up to 125cc and 23.8p for cycles over 125cc.

Standard rate of motor car allowance

cc engine capacity	Up to 5,000 miles per annum (pence per mile)	Over 5,000 miles per annum (pence per mile)
Up to 1500	35.7	19
1501–2000	43	23
Over 2000	46	31

Standard rate of motor cycle allowance

cc engine capacity	Up to 4,000 miles per annum (pence per mile)	Over 4,000 miles per annum (pence per mile)
Up to 125	16.2	6.2

Pedal Cycle allowance may also be claimed, at 6.2 per mile.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the total cost of travel expenses claimed by civil servants using their own vehicles for official business in each of the last five years in his Department; and what would have been the saving in the least year if the maximum rate that could be claimed was set at the lowest rate. [36364]

Mr. Howard: The Department's computerised travel claims payment systems do not separately record travel expenses claimed by staff for using their own vehicles. To provide the information requested would entail disproportionate cost.

Liquor Licensing

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he is taking to remove unnecessary liquor licensing regulations. [36557]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The Licensing (Sunday Hours) Act 1995, which extends the times at which public houses, clubs and off-licensed premises may sell alcohol on Sundays, came into force on 6 August 1995.

The draft Licensing (Sunday Dancing) Order, which is currently subject to Parliamentary consideration under the order making procedures in part 1 of the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994 includes relaxations of the provisions of the Licensing Act 1964 relating to extended hours orders and special hours certificates. These relaxations will permit the sale of alcohol after the normal licensing hours at dances taking place on a Sunday.

We have also recently completed public consultation on other reforms to rationalise certain procedural aspects of the special hours certificate system, which allows the sale of alcohol beyond the normal permitted hours at places licensed for music and dancing.

In addition we plan to repeal section 165 of the Licensing Act 1964, which makes it an offence for a licensee to serve more intoxicating liquor than a customer asks for.

We are also considering the scope for deregulating other aspects of the liquor licensing system.

Somali Exceptional Leave Holders

Mr. Tony Lloyd : To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, how many Somali exceptional leave holders who had not completed four years of status were allowed to be joined by their spouse and children in each year since 1990. [36693]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Information on the number of Somlis who have been joined by their spouse and children within four years of being granted exceptional leave to remain is not available.

Information on the number of Somalis granted exceptional leave to remain in each year since 1986 is given in table 3.2 of the Home Office Statistical Bulletin "Asylum Statistics United Kingdom 1994", issue 15/95, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Violent Crime (Compensation)

Mr. Khabra: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about changes in compensation to victims of violent crime. [36588]

Mr. Maclean: The Criminal Injuries Compensation Bill currently before Parliament provides the framework for an enhanced tariff scheme under which the compensation payable annually to victims should rise from £175 million to £260 million over the next five years. The scheme will continue to be the most generous in the world.

Police Statistics

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers are currently serving in each British constabulary. [36733]

Mr. Maclean: The information is set out in the table.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many crimes against property and crimes against people were (a) reported to each constabulary and (b) successfully prosecuted by each constabulary in the last three years. [36734]

Mr. Maclean: The available information is given in the tables. Table A gives the number of notifiable offences recorded by the police and table B gives the number of offenders found guilty at all courts. These tables are not directly comparable as it is not possible to match the number of offences committed against offenders convicted: court proceedings can occur in a different year from the crime; one crime could involve more than one defendant being found guilty; and some offenders convicted of one crime may have also committed other crimes for which they have not been caught or successfully prosecuted. A wider measure would also include cautions and informal action taken by the police, both of which do not result in a court appearance.

Crime Prevention

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to combat crime in the south west in the coming year. [36735]

Mr. Maclean: There are four policy objectives which underpin our efforts to combat crime. They are:

to do all we can to prevent crime;

to do all we can to help the police catch criminals;

to ensure that when suspects are caught they are tried fairly and speedily; and to make sure that when courts convict criminals they have the powers they need to deal with them appropriately and effectively.

These objectives apply as much to the south west as to any other part of the country. The latest Home Office crime figures, revealed by my right hon. and learned Friend on 27 September, show a record-breaking fall in recorded crime. They demonstrate the largest ever fall in recorded crime over a two year period; the longest uninterrupted fall in recorded crime since quarterly figures were first recorded and published; the first fall in recorded violent crime for almost 50 years; and falls in burglary of 5 per cent. vehicle crime of 9 per cent., and sexual offences of 9 per cent. In the south west of England recorded crime has fallen by nearly 6 per cent. In the Devon and Cornwall police area, it has fallen by over 8.5 per cent.

Prisons Ombudsman

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many prisoners' complaints have been referred to the Prisons Ombudsman in each prison service area; in how many cases he has found in the prisoner's favour; and how many and what proportion of his recommendations have been accepted by the prison service; [36893]

(2) if he will list by category the prisoners' complaints referred to the Prisons Ombudsman, the number and proportion where the ombudsman has found in the prisoner's favour and the number and proportion of these recommendations which have been accepted by the prison service. [36894]

Miss Widdecombe: The Prisons Ombudsman had received 1,664 letters of complaint by 3 October 1995 of which 448 were eligible for investigation by his office; the eligibility of a further 117 was being considered. Two hundred and ninety three investigations had been completed. Of these, the prisoner's complaint was upheld on 128 occasions. A total of 154 recommendations had been made to the prison service, of which 121—78 per cent.—had been accepted. Twelve—8 per cent.—were not accepted. Four partially accepted and a further 17 were under consideration.

There are 15 prison service areas in England and Wales and as at 3 October 1995 the Prisons Ombudsman had received the following number of complaints about establishments in each area:

Area	Number of complaints
Central	99
Chilterns	62
East Anglia	112
East Midlands	144
Kent	131
London North	187
London South	157
Mercia	42
North East	134
North West	80
South Coast	79
Trans Pennine	143
Wales and West	101
Wessex	90
Yorkshire	72

The remaining complaints concerned matters which were the responsibility of prison service headquarters.

The number of complaints received by category were:

Category	Number of complaints
Adjudications	159
Assaults	54
Security categorisation	123
Food	26
General conditions	172
Regime activities	55

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the number of (a) men and (b) women from the Ivory Coast who are being held in prisons in England and Wales while they are awaiting decisions on their application for political asylum, as of 17 July; [36113]

(2) what was the number of (a) men and (b) women being held in prisons in England and Wales while their application for political asylum was being considered as of 17 July; [36115]

(3) what has been the longest time (a) a man and (b) a woman has been held in a prison in England and Wales while awaiting a decision on their application for political asylum as of 17 July. [36117]

Miss Widdecombe: Information as at 17 July 1995 is not available. However, as at 19 July 1995, 53 men and one woman were awaiting initial decisions on their applications for asylum whilst being detained in prison service establishments. Of these, the longest time a male and female have ben held in detention is 348 days and 114 days respectively.

No nationals of the Ivory Coast were detained in prison service establishments as at 19 July 1995.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures his Department has taken to ensure that failed asylum seekers cannot be identified on their return home. [35826]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Asylum applications are treated as confidential. Where a failed asylum applicant is returned to his country of origin, the fact that he claimed asylum is not disclosed to the authorities of that country.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy regarding access of foreign embassy personnel to visit asylum seekers held in detention centres and prison establishments. [35825]

Mr. Baker: Foreign embassy and high commission personnel are allowed to visit an asylum applicant in detention only if he or she specifically requests or consents to a visit.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in what circumstances his Department gives the names of the asylum seekers in detention, awaiting removal orders, to their embassies. [35827]

Mr. Baker: An embassy or high commission will not be notified of the detention of an asylum applicant without the consent of the person concerned. When it is necessary to provide an embassy or high commission with a person's details in order to obtain a travel document, the fact that asylum has been sought is not disclosed.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice is given to asylum applicants from Sri Lanka. [35960]

Mr. Baker: All asylum applicants are given details of organisations to which they may turn for legal advice in pursuing their asylum claims.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, what recent assessment he has made of the political situation in Sri Lanka in determining his policy on asylum; and to what extent this has changed in the last six months. [35962]

Mr. Baker: We keep the situation under continuing review in the light of information from a variety of sources, including the United Kingdom's high commission in Colombo and reports by independent organisations such as the United Nations High Commission for Refugees.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Sri Lankan asylum applicants have been sent back to Sri Lanka in the last six months. [35961]

Mr. Baker: During the period 1 January to 30 June 1995, 13 Sri Lankans refused asylum and exceptional leave to remain after full consideration have been returned to Sri Lanka.

Young Offenders

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of places available for 12 to 14-year-olds awaiting trial or sentence in each of the last three years. [36260]

Mr. Maclean: This information is not collected centrally by my Department.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number and proportion of cautioned juvenile offenders who had been cautioned on (a) a previous occasion, (b) two previous occasions and (c) more than two previous occasions for (i) 1993 and (ii) 1994. [36254]

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend. the Member for Batley and Spen (Mrs. Peacock) on 13 June, Official Report, column 480.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of persistent juvenile offenders identified by his Department in 1993 and 1994, respectively. [36253]

Mr. Maclean: There is no agreed definition of persistent offender. A special study of court appearances resulting in convictions in three weeks of 1993 gave the following estimates for 10 to 17-year-olds:

Estimated number of juveniles[1] convicted in 1993 who have conviction[2] on two or more previous occasions

England and Wales

Number of previous court appearances	Estimated number of juveniles convicted in 1993 (to nearest 50)
5–9	3,650
10 or more	550

[1] A few juveniles have more than one appearance in 1993, and will be counted more than once in these figures.

[2] Convictions for a standard list offence, which includes all indictable and triable either way offences plus some of the more serious summary offences.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average length of time elapsed from offence to charge or summons for juveniles in 1993 and 1994; and what was the number and percentage of cases dealt with at first appearance at juvenile court and subsequently at youth court for 1993 and 1994. [36251]

Mr. John M. Taylor: I have been asked to reply. The average length of time elapsed from offence to charge or summons for juveniles in a sample week in June 1994 was 37 days, the corresponding figure for June 1993 was 36 days. This information comes from the magistrates' courts time intervals survey. In June 1994 it collected information on 1,478 juveniles; the cases of 292—or 19.8 per cent. of these were dealt with at first appearance. The corresponding number of juveniles about which information was collected in the June 1993 sample week was 1331, of which 312—or 23.4 per cent.—were dealt with at first appearance.

Financial Penalties

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 22 June, Official Report, columns 398–400, when he expects the study commissioned by the Home Office on the enforcement of financial penalties to be completed; and if it will be made available to hon. Members. [36208]

Mr. Maclean: The research on financial penalties commissioned by the Home Office research and planning unit is due to be completed by the end of the year. The findings will be published in due course, and will be available in the Library.

Deportees

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what has been the average period of time that a person has been held in prison in England and Wales awaiting deportation after they had completed the prison sentence they had been serving; and if he will make a statement; [36110]

(2) what has been the number of foreign nationals who have been deported immediately from prisons in England and Wales after the completion of their prison sentence in each of the last three years. [36116]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The available information is given in the table. Information on the delay, if any, between completion of the prison sentence and removal from United Kingdom is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Probation Service, Wales

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were employed in the probation service in Wales in (a) 1980 and (b) 1994. [36134]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The earliest available comparable information covers 1987 and 1994 and is as follows:

Staff employed by probation services in Wales, in post at 31 December, whole-time equivalent[1]
31 December 1987: 633[2]
31 December 1994: 842

Notes
[1] Whole-time staff plus whole-time equivalent of part time staff. Figures rounded to the nearest whole number.
[2] Figure excludes non-probation grade staff employed in hostels. The 1994 total includes 36 such staff.

Murder Convictions

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the names, length of sentence served, and number of appeals of each person whose murder conviction was overturned or who was given a free pardon or life sentence remission from 1976. [31730]

Mr. Maclean: The available information is for those originally sentenced to life for murder and where sentences were subsequently reduced, or lifted on appeal or who were given a free pardon or remission whilst serving their sentences in prison service establishments in England and Wales.

To protect individual privacy, a list of names is not provided but the numbers and average time served under a life sentence are tabulated. Information on the number of appeals of each person is not available.

TRANSPORT

Gateshead Western Bypass

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if a variable-trip matrix model has been used to assess his Department's preferred route for the Gateshead western bypass. [36233]

Mr. Watts: No, the cross-Tyne study traffic model, updated by additional data from interview surveys carried out at the Metro centre and Town Valley trading estate in 1991, was used.

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about progress on the environmental assessment for the Gateshead western bypass proposal in accordance with European Council directive 855/337. [36231]

Mr. Watts: The work, which commenced when the scheme was placed in the trunk road programme, will continue to be progressed concurrently with the detailed design of the scheme and the result will be published at the same time as the publication of the orders for the scheme under the Highways Act 1980 in accordance with the statutory requirements.

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department's proposals in respect of the Gateshead western bypass have been revised to take into account the Standing Advisory Committee on Trunk Road Assessment report and associated Government guidance. [36232]

Mr. Watts: Work is currently in progress to consider the implications for the scheme of the most recent SACTRA report.

Birmingham Northern Relief Road

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what account the Highways Agency took of the cost to Dr. Whitelegg of supplying copies of all reference documents referred to in his submission to the inquiry into the Birmingham northern relief road; and if he will make a statement. [36155]

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency.

The chief executive has written to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Mike O'Brien dated 13 October 1995:

Just before the House rose for the Summer recess you asked the Secretary of State what account the Highways Agency took of the cost to Dr. Whitelegg of supplying copies of all reference documents referred to in his submission to the inquiry into the Birmingham Northern Relief Road. I am sorry it has not been possible to let you have an earlier reply.

All objectors will incur some costs in presenting their case at inquiry. We do what we can to reduce these costs by providing access to a range of official documents and reasonable copying facilities free of charge.

The onus is on an objector to substantiate his own evidence. If he is relying on material contained in other publications to support his case, the Inspector and other parties at the inquiry, including the Highways Agency, will wish to satisfy themselves that the references are accurate and relevant. In practice the only satisfactory way of doing that is to provide the document, or the relevant part of it, to the inquiry. Copies will be made by the Agency where possible.

In the particular case of Dr. Whitelegg, the Agency asked him to provide copies of documents on which he was depending in his proofs of evidence on behalf of a number of residents' groups and societies. In response to representations from two of the groups the Agency did obtain copies of most of the documents. But there were about 14 that we could not readily obtain. Since Dr. Whitelegg was depending on these publications in his evidence we assumed he would have access to them. We offered to make copies for the inquiry. I understand this arrangement has proved acceptable to the groups concerned.

You also wrote to John Watts enclosing a copy of your letter dated 18 July to David Shepperd, the Agency's Project Manager for the scheme. I can assure you that the Agency is not trying to obstruct those opposed to its proposals. It is quite usual for the Agency to ask objectors to supply copies of reference material and the new Highways Inquiries Procedures Rules do enable the Secretary of State to require objectors to submit a Statement of Case and copies of documents referred to. Prior to the opening of the inquiry the Agency placed on deposit a number of documents to which it intended to refer in evidence. More have been placed in the library as the inquiry has progressed.

I hope this is helpful. Ultimately, the decision on whether or not a supporting document should be provided rests with the Inspector.

Deregulation

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the measures his Department currently proposes to deregulate under the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994. [36682]

Mr. Watts: There are currently six measures which the Department proposes to deregulate under the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994. The first five were published in 1994 in the DTI publication "Cutting Red Tape".

1. Approval requirement for parking equipment (Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984): Abolition of the current arrangements whereby local authorities who control parking by means of a traffic order have to use parking equipment of a type approved by the Secretary of State.

2. Vehicle inspection of HGVs (Road Traffic Act 1988): Allows Vehicle Inspectors more discretion about when to undertake a physical inspection of heavy goods vehicles.

3. Advance receipt of MOT certificates (Road Traffic Act 1988): Allows a motorist to obtain their first MOT certificate a month in advance, which will be valid for 13 months.

4. Driving licence renewal (Road Traffic Act 1988): To excuse drivers who held a full driving licence before 1976 (but failed to renew it), from having to retake their driving test, and to introduce greater flexibility governing the issue of British licences in exchange for those issued in other countries.

5. Tuition of the Theory element of the Driving Test (Road Traffic Act 1988): Allows classroom teaching of the new theory elements of the driving test, without the need for teachers to be registered driving instructors.

6. Tolled undertakings: To amend existing legislation for the approval of local authority and privately owned tolled undertakings.

Driving Standards Agency

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he was informed of the proposals by the Driving Standards Agency to abandon its market testing proposals; if a Minister in his Department made the decision to abandon the market test; and if he will place in the Library copies of all correspondence between the agency management and the Department relating to the decision to abandon the market test. [36679]

Mr. Norris: I received advise from the chief executive of the Driving Standards Agency in June that the implementation of the market test should be modified so as to achieve a better integration of the driving test booking services with those of examiner deployment and residual functions. My decision was based on that advice; I have decided that the disclosure of that advice, which was provided in confidence to assist internal discussion, would be inappropriate.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the number of staff likely to be made compulsory redundant as a result of the reversal of the DSA market test, the estimated cost of severance payments and the estimated savings he expects to make by the newly proposed office rationalisation programme. [36680]

Mr. Norris: Under the modified arrangements, which have been the subject of widespread consultation with DSA staff and the relevant trade unions, it was assumed that there would be around 70 redundancies, at an estimated cost of £1.4 million. In practice, the final number of redundancies and consequential cost will be significantly smaller. It is hoped that most of these will be on a voluntary basis. The modified arrangements gave additional savings in the region of £20,000 over 10 years.

Coastguard Stations

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the occasions when a coastguard station has been understaffed by date and station for the last five years. [36695]

Mr. Norris: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

National Air Traffic Services

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to privatise the national air traffic services; and what is the timetable for the proposed sale. [36681]

Mr. Norris: The Secretary of State for Transport announced in November 1994 that the Government continued to favour privatisation of the national air traffic services in principle but that further work was needed on a number of important issues. We are currently considering the further work that has been done. I hope that we shall be in a position to make an announcement about the direction of NATS later in the year.

Vehicle Defects

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list, by mechanical defect found, the number of heavy goods vehicles found to have a defect during the last 12 months at spot checks undertaken by his Department; [36706]

(2) if he will list, by mechanical defect found, the number of public service vehicles found to have a defect during the last 12 months at spot checks undertaken by his Department. [36707]

Mr. Norris: These are operational matters for the Vehicle Inspectorate Executive Agency.

The chief executive has written to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ron Oliver to Ms Joan Walley, dated 15 August 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions concerning mechanical defects on heavy goods vehicles and public service vehicles found at spot checks undertaken by the Inspectorate during the last 12 months.

I regret we do not have the information in the form you requested. Mechanical defects described on roadworthiness prohibitions are categorised and stored on the Inspectorate's Roadworthiness Enforcement Database using the relevant Inspection Manual reference number.

The attached 2 annexes give, for the financial year 1994/95, the number of occurrences of mechanical defects resulting in issue of prohibitions. This information is shown separately for heavy goods vehicles and public service vehicles, but it includes inspections done in connection with operator licensing work as well as spot checks. Spot check information alone could not be provided at a reasonable cost. Any Inspection Manual reference number missing from the first column of the annex has not yet been allocated.

Please bear in mind that the total number of occurrences of mechanical defects cannot be related to the number of prohibitions issued over the same period since a single prohibition notice will, in many cases, have been issued for more than one defect.

Fish Factory Ships

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman) of 27 February, Official Report, column 461, when he expects the consultation document on fish factory ships to be published. [36822]

Mr. Norris: We hope to be able to publish our consultation paper examining the problem of substandard and uninsured shipping in United Kingdom waters next month. The paper will include proposals to deal with the particular problems found with fish factory ships—klondykers. Copies will be made available in the Library.

Railway Services

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what changes have been made in respect of the choice of route and permitted break in rail journeys following the privatisation of railway services. [37387]

Mr. Watts: The British Railways Board is currently developing draft proposals for a routing guide which will set out unambiguously the routes over which passengers may travel when holding any particular ticket. The intention is to document and safeguard existing practice. Where a route is currently widely accepted and used it will be included in the routing guide. There has been no change in respect of the right to break a rail journey at an intermediate station.

When ready, the guide will be issued to all operators so it will be clear which route or routes passengers may use for their journey. This will eliminate the uncertainty which can arise currently from different interpretations of ticket validity, and will provide a safeguard against piecemeal erosion of the facility to use alternative routes. The BRB is consulting the Central Rail Users' Consultative Committee on the proposals and guide which will be subject to final approval by the franchising director and the rail regulator.

Driving Licences

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out the powers under which he proposed to make changes to the driving licence design; and if he will make a statement on the timetable for introduction. [37109]

Mr. Norris: Section 98 of the Road Traffic Act 1988 provides that a driving licence shall be in such form as the Secretary of State may determine.

A proposed EU directive allowing the introduction of plastic photocard driving licences is at present under discussion; I will make a further statement on the introduction of photocards when these discussions are more advanced.

Bus Service Companies, London

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the approximate additional sum that will be paid by each of the principal bus service companies in London in respect of the cost of non-rebateable fuel duty to be paid in 1995–96 [37340]

Mr. Norris: It would not be appropriate for the Government to disclose such information about the London bus companies, all of whom are in the private sector.

Utility Street Works

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what obligations are placed on water, gas, electric, electricity or other cable or pipe service providers whose equipment is located beneath public bus stops and pavements, other than in emergencies, to (a) inform the police and highway authorities of their intention to excavate road or pedestrian routes and (b) to obtain their permission to do so. [37267]

Mr. Norris: Utility street works are governed by the New Roads and Street Works Act 1991, under which undertakers with a statutory right to execute street works must give advance notice to the street authority of their planned works, other than minor works; in the street, including the footway; the length of notice is prescribed in regulations and varies according to the circumstances. There is no requirement for undertakers to give advance notice of their works to the police but a code of practice issued under the Act sets out circumstances in which the street authority or traffic authority should inform police of planned works.

Undertakers do not have to seek permission of either the street authority or the police, but before executing works in a protected street, the consent of the street authority must be obtained. The Act also empowers the street authority to direct the timing of undertakers' works in certain circumstances. The procedure is set out in regulations.

Bus Fares

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he expects to take to ensure that fares in public stage carriage bus services are no higher than providing a just return on invested capital (a) on all routes and (b) where competition has been eliminated by an initial period of free travel or heavily subsidised fares. [37329]

Mr. Norris: The setting of fares on bus services is a commercial decision for bus operators. We have no plans to interfere with this process.

Airline Subsidies

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which EU Governments subsidise their airlines; and which subsidies have been ended since January.

Mr. Norris: The Governments of France, Greece, Ireland, Portugal and Spain currently give state aid to their national airlines in accordance with approvals granted under article 93 of the treaty of Rome. There is no example of a subsidy which has ended since January 1995.

Driving Tests (Accidents)

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish statistics maintained under health and safety at work regulations of the number of accidents involving vehicles during the driving test; and if he will include statistics in respect of (a) vehicles written off, (b) injuries to examiners and (c) absence from work of examiners as a result of injury while carrying out the driving test. [37116]

Mr. Norris: Between 1 April 1995 and 30 June 1995, there were 72 accidents involving vehicles during the driving test which resulted in injury to driving examiners. These were:

	Number
Whiplash—medically diagnosed	19
Whiplash—self diagnosed	16
Cuts/bruises	1
Pulled muscles	6
Back pain	1
Neck pain	18
Headache	2
Shock	4
Multiple	3
Other	72

20 per cent. of these required medical treatment; broken down into:

35 per cent. Hospital treatment

56 per cent. GP treatment

6 per cent. First aider treatment

3 per cent. Physiotherapist treatment

DSA has no details of vehicles written off during the driving test.

As a result of the above accidents driving examiners were absent for a total of 1,320 days during this period.

Aircraft Inspections

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what inspections are undertaken by his Department or the Civil Aviation Authority on the mechanical fitness of aircraft; how many aircraft have been inspected in each of the last five years; and if he will list by airline operator the number of defects found for each of the last five years. [36709]

Mr. Norris: I refer to the Viscount Goschen's letter of 30 August explaining the CAA's policy on aircraft surveys, a copy of which has been placed in the Library. The numbers of surveys carried out on aircraft above 5,700 kg maximum total weight authorised—which include all large passenger aircraft—in each of the last five years were as follows:

1990: 1,120
1991: 1,096
1992: 1,056
1993: 835
1994: 732

Information on numbers of defects found during surveys could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by defect found the number of aircraft found to have defects during the last 12 months at inspections undertaken by his Department or the Civil Aviation Authority. [36710]

Mr. Norris: The Department does not undertake aircraft inspections. The information in relation to inspections undertaken by the Civil Aviation Authority can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Road Schemes

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each of the last five years all the road schemes that have been completed, their projected costs and the actual cost on completion. [31835]

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. The chief executive has written to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Ms Joan Walley, dated 30 October 1995:

As you know, the Minister for Railways and Road, Mr. John Watts, has asked me to reply to you recent Parliamentary Question concerning road schemes completed in the last 5 years.

You asked for details of projected costs for each of these schemes together with the actual cost on completion. I enclose a list of all schemes completed in the last 5 years together with details of tender costs (works only) and actual cost on completion, where that information is readily available.

It has not been possible to supply the actual cost on completion for many of the schemes concerned because final accounts have not yet been agreed with the contractors concerned. To publish estimates of the final outturn in such cases would undermine the position of the consulting engineers appointed by the Agency to administer those contracts in dealing with claims for extra payment submitted by the contractors and therefore place public funds at risk. Also on some schemes records are not immediately to hand and I will write to you again when further information is available.

Runway Incursion Incidents

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) runway incursion incidents and (b) incidents of runway overshoots there have been at Heathrow and Gatwick airports in each year since 1985. [36685]

Mr. Norris: The number of runway incursion incidents which occurred at Heathrow and Gatwick airports in the years since 1985 are as follows:

Year	Heathrow	Gatwick
1985	6	3
1988	8	2

Statistics for runway overshoots for the whole of the period requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, figures are available for 1994 when there were 406 runway overshoots at Heathrow airport and 332 at Gatwick.

Specialist Vessels (Marine Pollution)

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the EC countries which have dedicated and purpose-built surface vessels available for at-sea recovery or dispersal of pollution; and if he will list the vessels. [35743]

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Coastguard Agency. The chief executive has written to the hon. Member.

Letter from C. J. Harris to Mr. Calum Macdonald, dated 20 July 1995:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question as the question deals with an operational matter, for which I have responsibility as Chief Executive.

Information from the EC Community Information System 1994 is in the table attached. The EC System does not distinguish between vessels which are purpose-built and solely dedicated for at-sea recovery or dispersal of pollution, and those vessels which are equipped and available for such duties but which may have other roles.

Seat Belts

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those areas of EC legislation that prevent the British Government introducing the compulsory fitting of seat belts aboard existing coaches and buses. [36684]

Mr. Norris: The Commission has competence to regulate in the area of vehicle standards and, in the case of seat belts in buses and coaches, has introduced standards covering both the seating positions which should be provided with belts and the standards the installations should meet. These requirements are contained in directives 76/115/EEC and 77/541/EEC, both as amended, which cover anchorages and seat belts respectively. Member states may not impose construction standards which go beyond the provisions of those directives.

Aircraft Noise

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if his proposed scheme for the control of noise of night flights at London's airports incorporates (a) the period of 2300 hours to 0700 hours currently defined as "the night period" and (b) the period of 2330 hours to 0600 hours currently defined as "the night quota period". [36703]

Mr. Norris: Yes. The hours of "the night period" and "the night quota period" were confirmed in my announcement on 16 August 1995 stating that the night flying restrictions at Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted from winter 1995–96 to end of summer 1998 would remain as previously announced on 6 May 1994.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what account his proposed scheme for the control of aircraft noise at night in and around London's airports takes of the proposed reductions in the length of the night quota period; and if he will make a statement. [36704]

Mr. Norris: The current hours of night quota period were announced on 6 May 1994 and confirmed by my announcement of 16 August 1995. Both the current movements limits and noise quotas apply to the 2330 to 0600 period but there are also restrictions on the noisiest types of aircraft from 2300 to 2330 and from 0600 to 0700. There are also fewer types of aircraft exempt from the current night restrictions than under the 1988–93 restrictions.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by airline company the number of noise limitation breaches committed over the last 12 months at Heathrow airport. [36711]

Mr. Norris: Penalties for infringements of the noise limits set by my right hon. Friend are imposed by Heathrow airport Ltd. The airport company provides information on the infringements and on the fines collected to the Heathrow Airport Consultative Committee. I have asked the company to send the reports for the last 12 months to the hon. Lady.

Accident and Disaster Reports (Implementation of Recommendations)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which recommendations from the report of the Herald of Free Enterprise disaster have not yet been implemented; for what reasons; and what is the target implementation date. [36660]

Mr. Norris: All the recommendations of the court of inquiry into the loss of the Herald of Free Enterprise have been taken forward. After consultation and consideration, one recommendation was not supported at the time and some others were not developed further in the light of subsequent technical appraisal, or were taken forward in ways different to those recommended by the inquiry for reasons of technical practicality or because of international developments.

Two long-term recommendations of the court of inquiry were not implemented. These were the recommendation that roll-on roll-off passenger ferries should have dedicated pumps capable of stripping at a rate of at least 600 tonnes an hour and that there should be drain valves which must be controlled remotely and operable from the bridge.

Both recommendations were considered, but after consultation were felt to be unnecessary because, in practice, existing drainage arrangements could already cope with amounts of water approaching these levels. Moreover, pumps of the size recommended could not cope with the significantly larger volume of water involved in catastrophic flooding as occurred on the Herald of Free Enterprise and, indeed, on the Estonia. There may also be difficulties in guaranteeing power supplies in situations of catastrophic flooding. Automatic drain valves are now fitted as a matter of course, so there is no need for their remote control.

Two long-term recommendations were implemented in alternative ways. These were the recommendations that the freeboard from the margin line to the vehicle deck should be increased to a minimum of perhaps 1 m, and that attention should be given to recommendations were addressed through an extensive research programme and the subsequent adoption of the SOLAS 90 survivability standard for existing ships.

The Government believe that there are no recommendations left to be implemented. All have been considered and action taken where appropriate.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the recommendations from the report of the Manchester airport disaster in 1986 that have not been implemented, the reasons why and the target date for implementation. [36667]

Mr. Norris: The air accidents investigation branch made 31 safety recommendations in the report into the Manchester airport accident. All of the recommendations were addressed to the Civil Aviation Authority. The CAA reports that only recommendation 4.31, which concerns fire hardening of the aircraft hull, has yet to be brought to conclusion. The research in this area is being carried out jointly by the joint aviation authorities and the US federal aviation administration. It is not possible to predict when action on this recommendation will be complete. The status of AAIB recommendations made to the CAA is contained in "Civil Aviation Publication 652: Progress Report 1995".

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the recommendations from the report of the Kegworth aircrash that have not been implemented, the reasons why and the target date for implementation. [36666]

Mr. Norris: The air accidents investigation branch made 31 safety recommendations in the report into the Kegworth aircrash, all of which were addressed to the Civil Aviation Authority. Recommendation 4.09, to fit indicator warning devices alerting pilots of maximum engine vibration levels, was initially accepted but later rejected following extensive consideration. The CAA reports that only recommendations 4.23 and 4.31 have yet to be brought to conclusion. These relate to passenger seating and overhead storage lockers. Both need to be agreed at an international level before action can be taken. The CAA expects agreement to be reached on these issues by the end of 1995. The status of AAIB recommendations made to the CAA is contained in "Civil Aviation Publication 652: Progress Report 1995".

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the recommendations from the report of the Lockerbie bombing that have not yet been implemented, the reasons why and the target implementation date. [36662]

Mr. Norris: Two relevant reports have been published in the UK into the Lockerbie disaster. These follow the investigation by the air accidents investigation branch and the fatal accident inquiry.

The AAIB made five safety recommendations in its report on the disaster: four related to the CAA and one to my Department. All of these recommendations have been implemented and related research projects are underway.

The sheriff principal made 20 findings in his report on the FAI. Of these, one related to my Department and criticised airline baggage reconciliation procedures. New legal requirements were placed on airlines last year to account for, and to authorise, the carriage of all hold baggage.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the recommendations of the Donaldson report that have not yet been implemented, the reasons why and the target date for implementation. [36664]

Mr. Norris: I have placed in the Library of the House a note showing the current position on each of the recommendations of the Donaldson report.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the recommendations from the report of the Marchioness disaster that have not yet been implemented, the reasons why and the target implementation date. [36661]

Mr. Norris: All the recommendations in the marine accident investigation branch's report into the collision between the Marchioness and the Bowbelle have been implemented.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the recommendations from the report of the King's Cross fire that have not yet been implemented, the reasons why and the target date for implementation. [36665]

Mr. Norris: Of the 127 Fennell recommendations aimed at London Transport/London Underground, 112 have been implemented in full. Work is in hand on the remainder, which are of a more long-term nature. Progress is regularly monitored by Her Majesty's railway inspectorate. The expected dates of implementation, where appropriate, are shown in the following table.

Fennel recommendation number	Recommendation	Completion date
2	Escalator replacement programme	Ongoing
6	Non-inflammable escalator lubricant	Ongoing

142	Subway link at Kings Cross	Under consideration in light of CTRL proposals.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the recommendations from the report of the Clapham rail disaster that have not yet been implemented, the reasons why and the target implementation date. [36663]

Mr. Watts: Sir Anthony Hidden's report into the Clapham accident made 93 recommendations, 78 of which related to British Rail and the British Transport Police. Action has been taken on all the recommendations addressed to BR and the BTP. Many of the recommendations are on-going, and BR and Railtrack are monitoring compliance. The position on outstanding recommendations is as follows.

Recommendation 13 related to BR's departmental instructions. BR took immediate steps to ensure understanding of departmental instructions. This did not extend to requiring all staff subject to annual appraisal to sign a statement every two years to the effect that such instructions had been read, because alternative systems for briefing staff on the issue and amendment of departmental instructions were put in place.

Recommendation 23, that the annual appraisal system, albeit in a simplified form, should be extended to senior technician level was included in restructuring proposals for signalling and telecommunications staff, but was not agreed by trade unions. However, the recommendation has been overtaken by a competence-based approach, as required by the Railways (Safety Critical Work) Regulations 1994.

Recommendation 27 on the non-statutory reporting of wrong side failures of signalling was implemented on 1 January 1990. Legislation making such reporting a statutory requirement will become effective in April 1996, when revised industry-wide incident reporting requirements are planned to come into effect—recommendation 28.

As regards on-train data recorders—recommendation 40—this equipment is specified for new rolling stock.

The major part of the programme to install the national radio network system of communication between driver and the signal man—recommendation 43—was completed by the target date of 1992. Complete fitment of this system is expected by early 1996. A review of this programme led to a decision by BR to install the cab secure radio system in south-east England, which is more appropriate to driver-only operated routes. This system will be completed by 1997. Technical difficulties and higher priority safety projects have extended completion of this programme beyond BR's original target date of 1995.

Recommendation 46 related to automatic train protection. On 30 March, my right hon. Friend the Member for Peterborough (Dr. Mawhinney) endorsed the view of the Health and Safety Commission that, following extensive work by BR and Railtrack, ATP measures may be justified in parts of the rail network but that the fitment of ATP as developed by BR could not be justified throughout the network. A programme of alternative train protection measures is being developed. Railtrack and BR continue to examine the implementation of these measures.

Recommendation 55 concerned the structural integrity of rolling stock. BR completed its programme of research—recommendation 54—by the target date of April 1991. BR then discussed this with the Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate. HSC endorsed BR's conclusion that very few of those vehicles in classes 411, 413, 415, and 416 were projected to remain in service for eight years or over and that it would not be reasonably practicable to carry out structural changes to these or to the remainder of mark I vehicles.

Cowden Rail Accident

Mr Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State when he received, and when he expects to publish, the report of Her Majesty's inspectorate into the Cowden rail accident. [37266]

Mr. Watts: Part I of the inspector's report was published on 9 June by the Health and Safety Executive, and copies were placed in the House of Commons Library. The first report explains how the accident happened and addresses the adequacy of the safety mechanisms and procedures on the line. It was called for in advance of the coroner's inquest in order to avoid delaying publication of the conclusions that were not dependent on the outcome of the inquest. The report concluded that the line was adequately and safely signalled and that the signalling equipment was working as it should be.

Part II of the report will address who was driving the train at the time of the accident, taking into account the additional forensic evidence given at the recent inquest. The inspector's final report will be published by the HSE as soon as possible.

Departmental Role

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a copy of the report produced recently within his Department on the future role of his Department and its perception in Whitehall. [36673]

Sir George Young: The Department has not produced a report on its future role and its perception in Whitehall.

River Thames (Injuries and Fatalities)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each of the last five years the number of serious injuries and fatalities sustained on the River Thames. [36683]

Mr. Norris: Figures for the central area of the Thames, between Staines and Dartford creek are as follows[1]:

	1990	1991	1992	1993	1994
Bodies recovered	43	44	51	46	43
Accidents where ambulance called	14	17	11	13	12
Persons rescued from the river	568	855	119	120	175
Attempted suicides	44	60	64	102	111

[1] Figures provided by Thames division, Metropolitan police.

Vessel Inspections

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list, by defect found, the number of vessels found to have a defect during the last 12 months at inspections undertaken by the Marine Safety Agency. [36708]

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Marine Safety Agency. The hon. Member has already received a reply from the chief executive and I attach a copy.

Letter from R. M. Bradley to Ms Joan Walley

Thank you for your letter of 1 August requesting details of inspections carried out on ro-ro passenger ferries on Dover and on merchant ships in the UK in general.

With regard to your first query, relating to inspections carried out on ro-ro passenger ferries in Dover, I would refer you to the answer given by Mr Norris to PQ 1479 and 1467, which can be found in Hansard volume 258 columns 614 to 615.

Moving on to your second query, relating to inspections carried out by the Marine Safety Agency throughout the country over the last 12 months, a list showing the result of all such inspections by deficiency cannot be provided except at disproportionate cost. However, the United Kingdom carries out its port state control inspections in co-operation with members of the Paris Memorandum of Understanding (Paris MOU). The results of each inspection carried out in the MOU are recorded on a central database and statistical information is published annually by the Secretariat of the Paris MOU. The number of ships, by deficiency, inspected in the region covered by the Paris MOU can be found in The Memorandum of Understanding on Port State Control Annual Report 1994, a copy of which has been placed in the House of Commons' library.

Air Traffic Controllers

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each of the last five years the average amount of overtime worked by air traffic controllers and the number of staff in post. [36712]

Mr. Norris: The vast majority of the United Kingdom's air traffic controllers are employed by the Civil Aviation Authority. Data for other air traffic controllers could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

No overtime has been worked by the CAA's air traffic controllers in the last five years.

The following figures give the number of air traffic controllers employed by the CAA since 1992.

The figures requested for 1991 can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Vehicle Emissions

Mr. Tony Lloyd:: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates he has as to the contribution of the worst (a) 10 per cent. and (b) 20 per cent. of vehicles to noxious and harmful vehicle emissions. [36640]

Mr. Norris: Vehicle emissions are strongly influenced by operating conditions and driver behaviour. However, in an analysis of exhaust emission measurements, carried out by the Transport Research Laboratory on a sample of 200 cars selected to be typical of the in-service fleet, 10 per cent. were found to contribute 22 per cent. of total carbon monoxide and 27 per cent. of total hydrocarbon emissions under urban driving conditions; similarly, 20 per cent. of cars tested contributed 39 per cent. of CO and 40 per cent. of HC emissions.

Large Vehicle Brake Efficiency

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it a requirement that all heavy goods vehicles and public service vehicles be driven on a rolling road test installation immediately after work is done on brakes. [36741]

Mr. Norris: Heavy goods vehicle and public service vehicle brake efficiency is checked on a rolling road as part of the annual roadworthiness test.

Operators are encouraged through the guide to maintaining roadworthiness to have access to appropriate brake testing equipment as part of their routine safety inspections. I have no plans to make this a legal requirement.

Permitted Vehicle Sizes

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the (a) longest and (b) largest vehicle allowed to travel on the roads in the United Kingdom. [36737]

Mr. Norris: Regulations specify a maximum permitted length of 18.35 m for drawbar vehicle combinations and a maximum permitted gross vehicle weight of 44 tonnes for both articulated and drawbar vehicle combinations engaged in combined transport.

Vehicles exceeding these weights and dimensions can operate under provisions contained within the Motor Vehicles (Authorisation of Special Types) General Order 1979. However, for vehicles carrying very large and heavy abnormal indivisible loads the Department authorises each movement by issuing an individual special order to the haulier. Such orders are made under section 44 of the Road Traffic Act 1988.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the future for heavy vehicles using roads in the United Kingdom indicating suggested weight and size. [36738]

Mr. Norris: The present general weight limit in the UK for the largest lorries is 38 tonnes, with 44 tonnes allowed for certain vehicles used for combined road/rail transport. We will be reviewing the effectiveness of the latter at the end of the year. From 1 January 1999, the UK will have to accept the European Union weight limit of 40 tonnes for international traffic.

European Union Transport Ministers recently agreed, subject to approval by the European Parliament, to amend the directive on vehicle weights and dimensions so that national rules on dimensions of goods vehicles will be harmonised. This will result in an increase in (i) the maximum length of drawbar-trailer combinations from 18.35 m to 18.75 m and (ii) the maximum width of non-insulated vehicles to 2.55 m.

In the case of buses, there is no harmonisation of dimensions for vehicles used on national journeys. The maximum length of non-articulated buses remains at 12 with 18 m for articulated vehicles. Some member states allow longer non-articulated buses and we will keep our national dimensions under review.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what restrictions apply to 44 tonne vehicles using the roads in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Norris: Vehicles operating between 38 tonnes and 44 tonnes may do so only when taking a container or swap-body to or from a rail terminal on the road leg of a combined road/rail journey. These vehicles must have six axles and road-friendly suspensions, and must carry documentary evidence to show either that the loading unit had travelled by rail terminal or that it was destined to do so.

Bus Companies (Complaints)

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in how many cases the traffic commissioner has taken action since 1986 as a result of complaint against bus companies failing to fulfil their advertised timetables; which companies have been involved; in what areas of the country; and what level of fines has been charged. [36764]

Mr. Norris: Data are not available in the form requested.

Air Safety Regulatory Authority

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions are currently being held within the joint aviation authority about the establishment of a single regulatory authority for air safety across the joint aviation authority countries; what is the status of the draft convention adopted by the joint aviation authority board in March concerning a single regulatory authority; what form of consultation will take place on any moves to establish a new body to regulate aviation safety; what steps he will take to ensure accountability and enforcement with steps he will take to ensure accountability and enforcement within any new structure; and if he will make a statement. [36892]

Mr. Norris: No discussions are being held with the joint aviation authorities about the establishment of a single regulatory authority. We are considering a draft convention which would enable national aviation authorities of JAA member states to act through the JAA as a de facto single aviation authority, but expressly does not establish such an authority on a de jure basis. The Civil Aviation Authority would remain the aviation safety regulator in the UK. The JAA is, and will continue to be, accountable through the JAA board, on which the UK is represented.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the rights of individual members of the public to make complaints to any of the appropriate ombudsmen about services or projects funded through the private finance initiative in his Department. [36824]

Mr. Watts: Members of the public have the same rights to make complaints to the relevant ombudsman about alleged maladministration in relation to a project funded through the private finance initiative as they would if the project had been publicly financed.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many public interest immunity certificates his Department has issued in each year since 1986. [36687]

Sir George Young: I am unable to provide details for 1987–89. Central records were not kept and information before 1989 could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Since that date, the position is as follows. As is already a matter of public record, in 1990 the then Secretary of Sate signed four certificates in connection with the fatal accident inquiry into the Lockerbie disaster but, in the event, none was produced at the inquiry. It is also a matter of public record that in 1992, the then Secretary of State signed two certificates relating to the Lockerbie disaster concerning the taking of evidence for proceedings in the United States. In the event, the taking of that evidence did not proceed and the certificates were not produced in that regard.

Driving Tests

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent assessment he has made of the risks to the health and safety of driving test examiners while undertaking driving tests. [37115]

Mr. Norris: An assessment of the risks to health and safety of driving test examiners while undertaking driving tests was prepared in early 1994 and circulated to all driving examiners on 17 May 1995. This assessment is introduced to all new driving examiners at a very early stage in their training and is included in a Driving Standards Agency health and safety manual held at every DSA location.

An assessment of risks resulted in the issue of a DSA policy for assaults to all DSA staff on 10 February 1995. This is introduced to trainees as above, and is held in DSA health and safety manuals.

An assessment of the risks to motorcycle driving examiners resulting from the wearing of radio equipment has recently been completed.

Railway Safety Centre, Derby

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport pursuant to his proposed sale of the railway safety centre of the British Railways Board at Derby, who will determine the minimum price at which it will be sold; on what criteria such a decision will be reached; and on what basis a privatised unit will charge when asked for information, advice, or services, (a) urgently and (b) otherwise, by those responsible for (i) operations, (ii) other parts of the national railtrack, train services and stations and (iii) other activity relevant to the safety of staff or public. [37356]

Mr. Watts: BR is selling quality and safety services by means of competitive tender and in pursuance of the Secretary of State's objectives set out in section 113 of the Railways Act 1993. Charging arrangements after sale completion will, as now, be a commercial matter for the business and its customers.

Atlantic Conveyor (Hull Cracks)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list each occasion that his Department's surveyors have visited the former Cunard Line vessel Atlantic Conveyor to investigate the appearance of cracks in her hull; what course of action was ordered to be taken; and what was recorded as being the cause of such cracks; [36670]

(2) if he will list each occasion that a Lloyd's surveyor has visited the former Cunard Line vessel Atlantic Conveyor to investigate the appearance of cracks in her hull and to oversee or examine any repairs. [36668]

(3) on how many occasions the former Cunard Line vessel Atlantic Conveyor has had to have cracks in her hull welded. [36669]

Mr. Norris: These are operational matters for the Marine Safety Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from R. M. Bradley to Ms Joan Walley, 16 October 1995:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your three Questions about ATLANTIC CONVEYOR.

During the period in which ATLANTIC CONVEYOR was registered in the United Kingdom, surveyors from Lloyd's Register made 42 visits, beginning in 1985, in connection with the investigation of cracks in the hull structure. The cracks were repaired immediately either by welding or part renewal of the structure, or conditions of class were imposed on the vessel until permanent repairs could be effected within a defined period. The survey of the hull structure is a matter in which classification societies may act under delegated powers and surveyors from the Department of Transport have not visited ATLANTIC CONVEYOR to investigate the appearance of cracks.

It is not unusual for some vessels to suffer fracturing of this nature from time to time, particularly if they are exposed to heavy weather, as this vessel has been in North Atlantic trade. Provided that proper maintenance and repairs are carried out by the owners, and repairs to the ship are surveyed by the classification society in accordance with classification procedures, the safety of the vessel is not compromised. At the time of ATLANTIC CONVEYOR's transfer to the Bahamian flag in July 1995, there are no extant conditions of class relating to cracks and I understand there are none at present.

Newbury Bypass

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the cost to public funds of the construction of the A34 Newbury bypass. [36674]

Mr. Watts: This is a operational matter for the Highways Agency.

I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Ms Joan Walley, dated 16 October 1995:

As you know, the Minister for Railways and Roads, Mr. John Watts, has asked me to write in reply to your Parliamentary Question about the cost of constructing the A34 Newbury Bypass.

The current estimate for the cost of the works and the land is £70 million.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will outline the public consultation he has undertaken in respect of the Newbury bypass. [36676]

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Ms Joan Walley, dated 16 October 1995:

As you know, the Minister for Railways and Road, Mr. John Watts has asked me to write in reply to your Parliamentary Question about the public consultation undertaken in respect of the Newbury Bypass.

The public were consulted about route options in 1982; as well as the public we also sought the views of statutory bodies and other interested parties. Exhibitions were held at the same time.

Following consideration of the comments received at Public Consultation, the preferred route for the bypass was announced in June 1984.

In 1988, following the publication of draft Orders, a Public Inquiry was held by an independent Inspector to enable objections to the published line to be fully aired.

In 1990, the Inspector's Report was published along with the decision letter. This followed detailed consideration not only of the report, but of representations received following the public Inquiry and revised National Road Traffic Forecasts. The decision letter also announced modifications to some of the draft Orders, which required further consultation with people likely to be affected by the proposed changes.

Road Building (Recycled Material)

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action his Department is taking to encourage the use of recycled materials in road building. [37044]

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter for Lawrie Haynes to Mr. John Spellar, dated 16 October 1995:

The Minister of Railways and Roads, Mr John Watts, has asked me to write to you in reply to your recent Parliamentary Question concerning action being taken to encourage use of recycled materials in road building.

Wherever practical, the Highways Agency seeks to provide the opportunity in trunk road contracts for including recycled materials. There is already considerable scope for recycling and extension of this is being investigated as part of the Agency's research programme. A recent change has increased the permitted proportion of many reclaimed bituminous materials from 10 to 30 per cent. In June, the Agency published new advice on the conservation and use of reclaimed materials in road construction and maintenance which highlights the scope for reuse and recycling and is aimed at encouraging a greater awareness of the opportunities available.

Roadworks Planning

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy in respect of road surface renewal or repair contracts if highway authorities are empowered to include in such contracts provision in respect of minimum potential vehicle flow at given periods in the day and week. [37384]

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Nigel Spearing, dated 16 October 1995:

As you know, the Minister for Railways and Roads, Mr John Watts, has asked me to write in reply to your Parliamentary Question asking what is the policy in respect of road surface renewal or repair contracts if highway authorities are empowered to include in such contracts provision in respect of minimum potential vehicle flow at given periods in the day and week.

Roadworks planning is a matter for the highway authority. On local roads this will be the local authority, but on trunk roads including motorways the Highways Agency manages works in accordance with requirements set out in our Business Plan.

The aim is to minimise economic costs through careful planning and specification of lane availability needs.

Costs minimised through an economic evaluation of maintenance schemes, taking account of works cost and the increased costs to road users and others from the presence of the works. These increased costs are calculated by a computer program which takes into account the extra costs incurred due to delays, vehicle running costs, and accidents. The cost is different for each site and is dependent, amongst other things, on the type of road, traffic flows, percentage of heavy goods vehicles in the flow, the length of the works, and the number and configuration of lanes closed off.

In order to further reduce traffic disruption and delay at roadworks more schemes are being let using the Lane Rental form of contract. The contractor is given the incentive to expedite the works by earning a bonus for early completion, but incurring a charge for late completion.

Work is increasingly carried out at night, starting after the evening peak traffic flow has subsided, and finishing prior to the build-up the following morning. The closures take place when traffic volumes are low, and all lanes are available to traffic during the day.

Rail Electrification

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what consideration he has given to the electrification of the railway between Acton main line station and Acton Wells junction in order to give future direct access for fast electrified train services from Heathrow airport stations on the North London line, and the east and west coast main lines; [37264]

(2) what is the current estimated completion date for the re-electrification of the railway between Kew Bridge and Willesden Junction high level; and if he will now request Railtrack and the relevant railway operator companies to initiate, in part or in whole, a frequent electrified train service from North Woolwich to South London via Willesden and Clapham Junction; [37261]

(3) what consideration he has given to the electrification of the railway between South Acton at Kew Junctions and the Kew Bridge chord in order to give direct access from the south-western electrified networks to the North London line, the east and west coast main lines, and an alternative route for channel tunnel passenger stock to and from its North Pole depot and Waterloo International; [37263]

(4) what considerations he has given to electrification of railway between Action Wells Junction and Cricklewood in order to give direct access for electric trains from the Midland main line to electrified route to the Channel tunnel and the electrified lines of the former Southern Railways. [37262]

Mr. Watts: Work is currently under way on the North London line to prepare for the introduction of EPS/Eurostar services beyond London during 1996. This is being accomplished, in part, by the introduction of modern AC electrification between Acton Central and Camden Road which should be accomplished by spring 1996.

Significant investment is taking place on this route which will improve delivery of existing train services as well as allow international services to be established beyond London.

The changes will allow Railtrack and the train operating companies to explore other opportunities for the introduction of services to meet markets they may identify. It will be up to them to prepare investment and service changes as they see fit.

Trains (Carriage of Cycles)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will initiate studies, as part of his policy to minimise the increase in the person miles travelled in motor cars, into the means whereby the effects of the disadvantageous actions taken by British Railways in respect of passenger-accompanied pedal cycles, taken subsequent to the announcement made by it and the Cyclist Touring Club be eliminated, or minimised. [37328]

Mr. Watts: No. The carriage of cycles on trains is an operational matter for train operators, balancing cyclists' needs with those of ordinary passengers.

The franchising director intends to include a requirement in each franchise agreement that franchise operators shall, so far as reasonably practicable and subject to the availability of appropriate space on their rolling stock, ensure that facilities are made available for bicycles on trains at a reasonable, if any, charge to passengers.

The Cyclists' Public Affairs Group, with the assistance of the Department has produced a guidance document for rail operators "Bikes and Trains—Opportunities for the new operators"—foreword by John Watts) explaining how they can make their services more attractive to cyclists. The document includes advice on the carriage of cycle on trains and the provision of cycle facilities at stations.

Central Rail Users' Consultative Committee

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what criteria or job description he published with his advertisement for the new chair of the rail passengers advisory committee; and what consultation he had and what reports he had received relating to the work of the committee, and the position of its chairperson, from the Select Committee on Transport; [37404]

(2) how many applications, suggestions, or recommendation he received in respect of persons to be appointed chair of the rail passengers advisory committee; how many he shortlisted; and if he will make a statement concerning his method of filling this further vacancy. [37273]

Mr. Watts: Advertisements for the post of chairman of the Central Rail Users' Consultative Committee made clear to applicants the criteria needed for the post. An example of the advertisements has been placed in the House Library.

Advertisements for the post were published in March, eliciting 147 applications, and 17 candidates were shortlisted for initial interview. Further advertisements were placed in September to broaden the field of candidates. An additional 235 applications have been received and are under consideration.

The Select Committee on Transport has not reported on the work or chairmanship of the Central Rail Users' Consultative Committee.

Railtrack (Contracting Out)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what requirement is made on Railtrack to contract out its functions; what is the number of such arrangements extant and how many of these were made when its activities were the responsibility of the British Railways Board; and if he will list those functions newly contracted out since its creation which are related to operational safety. [37359]

Mr. Watts: Under the objectives set by the Government for the Railtrack board for 1995–96, the company is expected to procure services from the private sector where appropriate.

Full data on the number of functions contracted out and the number of these made when Railtrack's activities were the responsibility of the British Railways Board are not held centrally, but in 1994–95, Railtrack contracted out approximately £1.8 billion of work.

Almost all of Railtrack's functions, including those newly contracted out since Railtrack's creation, relate in some way to operational safety, and are subject to the rigorous safety regime which applies to all Railtrack's activities.

Outsourcing Contracts

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many outsourcing contracts were granted by his Department or agencies in each year since 1990, indicating the nature and value of each contract; and if any additional work was added and of what value to (a) Hoskyns/Cap Gemini Segeti, (b) AT and T Istel, (c) EDS, (d) Sema Group, (e) Datasolve, (f) ITN Net, (g) Andersen Consulting, (h) Centre File, (i) BIS, (j) Telecom Capita, (k) ICL, (l) Digital Equipment, (m) CFM, (n) Siemens, (o) Nixdort, (p) CMG and (q) Logica. West Coast Main Line (Modernisation)

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement regarding delays in modernisation of the west coast main line. [37114]

Mr. Watts: The modernisation is progressing well and the evaluation of tenders for developing the train control system will begin shortly with a contract to be let early next year. Work is also at an advanced stage on the strategy for the main implementation contract and this will be let in 1996.

Coastguard Staff and Operations

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what is the ratio of managers to regular staff at each coastguard station; [36694]

(2) if he will list the required number of staff in a coastguards operations room and the level of training required for the staff; [36698]

(3) how many coastguard stations including auxiliary and part-time stations closed in each of the last five years; [36672]

(4) if there is a limit on the amount of overtime a coastguard watch officer can undertake; [36696]

(5) how many MRII/SCS complexes are equipped with sleeping accommodation, restrooms and comprehensively equipped galleys; and what assessment he has made as to whether the equipment provided is enough to sustain a shift for a 24-hour period of duty; [36699]

(6) if he will list the average amount of overtime a coastguard watch officer did per week for each of the last five years. [36697]

Mr. Norris: These are operational matters for the Coastguard Agency. The chief executive has written to the hon. Member.

Letter from C. J. Harris to Ms Joan Walley, dated 28 September 1995:

Thank you for your letter of 23 August requesting information on various aspects of Coastguard Operations.

1. The number of managers to regular watch keeping staff (Watch Officers and Senior Watch Officers) at each Coastguard Rescue Centre is as follows:

Rescue Centre	Senior Watch Officers and Watch Officers	Regional or District Management Team
Shetland	12	3
Pentland	12	3
Aberdeen	19	5
Forth	12	3
Tyne Tees	13	3
Humber	14	3
Yarmouth	15	5
Thames	13	3
Dover	25	5
Solent	18	3
Portland	14	3
Brixham	14	3
Falmouth	16	6
Swansea	18	5
Milford Haven	13	3
Holyhead	12	3
Liverpool	14	3
Clyde	14	5
Oban	12	3
Stornoway	12	3
Belfast	13	3

District and Regional Management Teams (DMT/RMT) comprising Station Officers, District Controllers, Regional and Deputy Regional Controllers as well as Coastguard Officers (Senior Watch Officers and Watch Officers) are all "regular staff"; i.e., uniformed, professional Coastguards. DMT and RMT members have an active Operations Room role in major emergencies and at any time if required.

The above figures do not include the 92 regular Sector Officers, nor the Auxiliary Coastguards who keep watch in rescue centres.

2. The required number of staff in operations rooms are as follows:

In each MRCC except Dover	1	3
In each MRSC	1	2
Dover	[1]1+1	3

[1] At MRCC Dover, each watch is headed by a Station Officer, in addition to the Senior Watch Officer.

All New Entrant Coastguards undertake an initial training lasting approximately one year. After a short familiarisation period (usually six to eight weeks) at their parent station, they undertake six weeks intensive training at the Training Centre. They then return to their parent station for about nine months, during which time, under the guidance of the District Management Team, they work through a taskbook compiled by the Training Centre. They return to the Training Centre for a two week revision and examination period at the end of the year. Subject to successful completion of the taskbook, the exams, an interview board and management reports, they are appointed Coastguard Watch Officers.

About two years later they could be ready to take Senior Watch Officer and Sector Officer Qualifying Courses. Passing the examinations on these courses, together with management reports indicating their fitness, qualifies them for selection to these posts.

Auxiliary Coastguard Operations Room Assistants receive 80 hours initial training locally culminating in examinations. They receive 20 hours refresher training per annum thereafter.

3. No rescue centres have closed in the last five years. The following sector bases and lookouts have closed in the last five years:

1991:	Three	(Seaton Sluice, Tyne Tees District) (Maryport and Aberdon lookouts)
1992:	Five	(Sizewell and Orford, Thames District) (Bass Point, Portland Bill and Whitehaven lookouts)
1993:	One	(Polrvan lookout)
1994:	Six	(Sea Palling, Yarmouth District) (Ives, Gwennap Head, Phyl, Cemaes and Aberdovey lookouts)
1995:	Three	(Prawle, Peveril Point, Fleetwood lookouts)

The above does not include the relocation of rescue centres or sector bases in new buildings or the amalgamation of sector bases (there have been two of these).

4. There is no specific limit on overtime other than that applied by the Regional and District Controllers to ensure that individual performance is not compromised.

5. There have been no occasions when a Coastguard station has been under the control of an unqualified Watch Officer. Staff are selected for the post of Senior Watch Officer (SWO) and allocated to rescue centres one per watch. In their absence they are either replaced by another SWO or a deputising Watch Officer. A deputising Watch Officer is a Watch Officer who is qualified by his or her initial establishment as Coastguard Officer having successfully completed the new entrants' process and who has been approved as deputy by the Regional Management. In order to be selected as SWO on a permanent basis Watch Officers are required to complete a SWO (Qualifier) course run by the Coastguard Training Centre. It is not a requirement that a deputy should have passed this course.

6. All rescue centres are equipped with rest rooms and comprehensively equipped kitchens. There is no requirement for officers to sustain a 24 hour shift or to need sleeping accommodation.

7. The table below shows the average amounts of overtime (in hours per week) for each Region in each of the last five years. The averages include all regular watchkeeping staff, ie Senior Watch Officers as well as Watch Officers.

	1991	1992	1993	1994	1995
North and East Scotland	5.4	5.3	5.5	4.2	6.8
Eastern	4.4	4.6	3.9	3.5	3.4
South Eastern	2.6	2.8	2.4	1.5	1.9
South Western	5.7	5.8	4.9	4.4	5.1
Western	4.5	4.6	4.0	3.8	3.9
West of Scotland and Northern Ireland	8.7	7.4	6.7	3.8	3.6

8. The basic watch level at a rescue centre is the watch level required to meet the normal day-to-day operational commitments at that centre.

Road Projects, London

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list those projects in the road programme in Greater London approved in principle, which add no route mileage to the road system but are designed principally to improve traffic flow or safety on existing routes indicating for each its cost, current state of planning and statutory processes, and likely commencement and completion dates; [37372]

(2) if he will list the constraints on increasing the traffic lanes on the Iron bridge spanning the River Lea at Canning Town from six lanes to eight; [37272]

(3) what is the current number of traffic lanes on trunk roads crossing the River Lea at or adjacent to Canning Town; what is their total maximum predicted traffic flow in each direction; what plans he has to increase the number of such lanes; and what is the increase in traffic flow estimated to result. [37271]

Mr. Norris: These are operational matters for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Nigel Spearing, dated 16 October 1995

I am writing in response to your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Transport, in which you sought information about the A13 Ironbridge to Canning Town Improvement scheme and other schemes in Greater London.

I wrote to you on 17 October 1994, as did Mr. Norris on 3 March 1995, about the constraints on the use of the existing Iron Bridge. The overriding constraint is that the existing bridge is not wide enough to carry four lanes in each direction and there is no satisfactory way of modifying the structure to do so. There is nothing that I can usefully add.

I enclose at Appendix A a list of schemes which are in the trunk road programme for Greater London. It shows their cost (as quoted in last year's Review of Trunk Roads in England) and the last stage reached in their preparation. Further progress will depend on the satisfactory completion of the remaining statutory procedures and the continuing availability of funds. All of the schemes are designed to improve existing routes rather than to extend the trunk road network.

There are currently three trunk road traffic lanes crossing the River Lea in each direction at or near Canning Town. Only two lanes in each direction cater for through traffic: the others serve the slip roads to and from the Canning Town Roundabout. Maximum predicted traffic flows are governed by the capacity of adjacent junctions, link roads and traffic signal installations. The maximum predicted traffic flows quoted at the recent public inquiry for the existing trunk road were as follows:

Westbound: 2,200 vehicles per hour through traffic with an additional 1,000 vehicles joining from the slip road.

Eastbound: 4,400 vehicles per hour. (This figure includes about 900 vehicles which peel off at the slip road.)

The improvement scheme would provide three lanes in each direction for through traffic and two lanes in each direction for slip roads, but one of the latter would be a dedicated bus lane. There would also be a cycle lane on the slip roads.

At the inquiry, the maximum predicted flows of through traffic on the improved trunk road were quoted as follows:

Westbound: 4,800 vehicles per hour.

Eastbound: 4,800 vehicles per hour.

(There would be no junction constraints in the new configuration.)

In addition up to 700 vehicles per hour would use each of the slip roads, the peak being in the morning.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Housing Benefit

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what saving will result from reducing the period of absence during which housing benefit is payable from 52 weeks to 13 weeks; and how many claimants will be affected; [36744]

(2) how many housing benefit claimants in each of the last three years were convicted prisoners serving sentences of (a) less than 13 weeks, (b) between 13 and 52 weeks and (c) more than 52 weeks. [36746]

Mr. Roger Evans: We estimate that up to 10,000 claimants a year may be affected by reducing the period of temporary absence for which housing benefit is payable and that this will save up to £10 million. No information is collected on the number of convicted prisoners of housing benefit during the last three years.

Benefit Payment Card

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out the powers under which he proposes to change the social security order payments book for plastic smart card; and if he will make a statement on the proposed timetable of the change. [37093]

Mr. Heald: Section 5(1)(i) of the Social Security Administration Act 1992 provides that the Secretary of State may make regulations which "provide for the . . . manner in which a benefit . . . is to be paid and for the information and evidence to be furnished in connection with the payment . . ."

Regulation 20A of the Social Security (Claims and Payments) Regulations 1987, inserted by Regulation 4 of SI 1994/3196 was made under the above power and provides, in effect, for benefit payments to be made on production of a card. We anticipate that the first benefit payment cards will be issued in 1996 with completion of the changeover in two to three years.

Attendance Allowance

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will state the number of claimants who have been refused attendance allowance; and to what extent the criteria to award attendance allowance takes account of people with restricted mobility being able to attend to their solid fuel heating systems. [37196]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: In 1994–95, the last full year for which figures are available, the Benefits Agency cleared 486,506 claims for attendance allowance, of which 146,924 were refused.

Entitlement to attendance allowance depends on the extent to which a severely disabled person needs attention in connection with their bodily functions and/or supervision to avoid substantial danger to themselves or others. The criteria do not relate specifically to a claimants' home heating arrangements.

Outsourcing Contracts

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many outsourcing contracts were granted by his Department or agencies in each year since 1990, indicating the nature and value of each contract; and if any additional work was added and of what value to (a) Hoskyns/Cap Gemini Segeti, (b) AT and T Istel, (c) EDS, (d) Sema Group, (e) Datasolve, (f) ITN Net, (g) Andersen Consulting, (h) Centre File, (i) BIS, (j) Telecom Capita, (k) ICL, (l) Digital Equipment, (m) CFM,(n) Siemens, (o) Nixdorf, (p) CMG and (q) Logica. [36958]

Mr. Burt: Details of the nature and value of contracts awarded to external suppliers following a competitive tender of work previously performed in-house by civil servants are in the table. No additional work has been awarded on these contracts to the companies in question. In-house teams who have retained work following a market test obtain a range of services through contracts with external suppliers. Information on those contracts is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Housing Benefit and Family Credit

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will bring forward proposals to take account of the value of capital assets by way of property other than the main residence, in applications for family credit. [37089]

(2) if he will introduce proposals to take account of the value of capital assets by way of property other than the main residence, in applications for housing benefit. [37092]

Mr. Roger Evans: In the income-related benefit schemes, taking capital assets, such as property other than the home, into account is the norm. With effect from 2 October 1995, regulations have been amended to restore the policy intention that, in general, tenanted properties should also be taken into account as a capital asset.

War Pensions

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the latest annual expenditure of the treatment section of the War Pensions Agency; and what cash limits apply to this expenditure, [37088]

(2) how many war pensioners are currently receiving financial help from the Pensions Agency treatment section in respect of (a) travel costs for treatment and (b) private treatment not available on the NHS. [37084]

Mr. Heald: The information is not available in the format requested.

However, in the year ended 31 March 1995, 4,925 payments were made to meet the travel costs of war pensioners attending hospital for treatment for disablement in respect of which war pension is payable. In the same year 8,389 payments were made for treatment not available under the national health service—including remedial treatment, dental treatment, chiropody and other private treatment such as osteopathy and physiotherapy.

Total expenditure in the year ended 31 March 1995 was £8,337,770.

Housing Benefit Subsidy

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the payments of housing benefit subsidy by his Department to each London borough and metropolitan district in the latest year for which figures are available; and if he will list those financial penalties imposed as a result of non-compliance with regulations. [37111]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is set out in the tables.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the designated amount for water charges included in the calculation of income support levels. [37480]

Mr. Roger Evans: Income support does not designate separate amounts for particular items in the household budget.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Outsourcing Contracts

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many outsourcing contracts were granted by her Department or agencies in each year since 1990, indicating the nature and value of each contract; and if any additional work was added and of what value to (a) Hoskyns/Cap Gemini Segeti, (b) AT and T Istel, (c) EDS, (d) Sema Group, (e) Datasolve, (f) ITN Net, (g) Andersen Consulting, (h) Centre File, *(i)*BIS, (j) Telecom Capita, (k) ICL, (l) Digital Equipment, (m) CFM, (n) Siemens, (o) Nixdorf, (p) CMG and (q) Logica. [37002]

Mr. Robin Squire: Departmental records show that no outsourcing contracts have been awarded to any of the companies listed.

Quality Assurance Document

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment by what date responses are required to the paper entitled "Quality Assurance Regime for Institutions"; and if she will place copies of the responses in the Library.

Mr. Robin Squire: Responses to the quality assurance consultation document are to be sent to the Department by 13 October 1995. There are no plans to place any of these responses in the Library.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if she will list for each grant-maintained school the number of pupils permanently excluded during each year since the school became grant-maintained; [36645]

(2) if she will list for each grant-maintained school the number of pupils excluded during each year since the school became grant-maintained. [36167]

Mr. Robin Squire: This information is not available centrally.

Education and Training Report

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what response has been made by Her Majesty's Government to the OECD survey of education and training in the United Kingdom; and if she will provide a refutation of its claim that departure from principles extant in public education since 1870 until 1992 are inappropriate. [37381]

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend the Minister of State issued the Department's comments on the OECD report in a Departmental press notice on 27 July 1995—Ref: 167/95. My right hon. Friend has no plans to comment further on the report.

Teacher Training

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the proportion of school leavers from (a) the independent sector and (b) the maintained sector entering degree or teacher training courses in higher education institutions at the latest date for which figures are available. [37478]

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is not available centrally.

Unemployment

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will give a breakdown in percentage terms of the numbers of unemployed people for each quarter since 1990 to the present who have been unemployed for (a) up to and including six months, (b) six months up to and including a year, (c) from between a year up to and including two years and (d) over two years who have (i) academic qualifications, (ii) vocational qualifications and (iii) no qualifications. [32367]

Mrs. Angela Knight: I have been asked to reply.

This information is available from the "Labour Force Survey" for Great Britain, annually until 1991 and quarterly from spring 1992 onwards, and can be obtained via the Quantime LFS service available in the Library.

Earnings

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the average weekly earnings are of (a) full-time female workers, (b) part-time female workers, (c) all female workers and (d) all male workers. [31998]

Mrs. Angela Knight: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is given in the following table:

Employees on all rates whose earnings were not affected by absence: April 1994

Part-time females	98.0	5.06
Full-time females	259.2	6.83
All females	197.7	6.43

Note:
The weekly earnings of all female employees relative to all male employees is distorted by a greater proportion of female part-time workers.

Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of employees in each G7 country are earning at or below the equivalent of £2.50 per hour. [23313]

Mrs. Knight: I have been asked to reply.

Information on proportions of employees earning less than £2.50 in each G7 country is not available.

Second Jobs

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his Department's latest estimate of the number of people with a second job. [32818]

Mrs. Angela Knight: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is published in table 2 of the "Labour Force Survey" quarterly bulletin, No. 12, June 1995. A copy of the publication is available in the Library.

WALES

Farm Data

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number of farms of the size (a) 1–25 hectares, (b) 26–50 hectares, (c) 51–75 hectares, (d) 76–100 hectares, (e) 101–150 hectares, (f) 151–200 hectares and (g) 201 or more hectares for (i) the last available year and (ii) 1985. [36432]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is given in the following table:

Farm sizes in Wales

Holding size	1985	1994
0.1 to less than 1.0 hectares	238	342
1.0 to less than 26.0 hectares	13,395	14,145
26.0 to less than 51.0 hectares	6,958	6,216
51.0 to less than 76.0 hectares	3,784	3,574

Farm sizes in Wales

Holding size	1985	1994
76.0 to less than 101.0 hectares	2,033	2,037
101.0 to less than 151.0 hectares	1,821	1,924
151.0 to less than 201.0 hectares	679	749
201.0 hectares and over	900	923
All main holdings	29,808	29,910

Note:
These figures exclude minor holdings.

Outsourcing Contracts

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many outsourcing contracts were granted by his Department or agencies in each year since 1990, indicating the nature and value of each contract; and if any additional work was added and of what value to (a) Hoskyns/Cap Gemini Segeti, (b) AT and T Istel, (c) EDS, (d) Sema Group, (e) Datasolve, (f) ITN Net, (g) Andersen Consulting, (h) Centre File, (i) BIS, (j) Telecom Capita, (k) ICL, (l) Digital Equipment, (m) CFM, (n) Siemens, (o) Nixdorf, (p) CMG and (q) Logica. [36954]

Mr. Hague: My Department has granted no outsourcing contracts to any of the listed companies since 1990. Information on all agencies could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Ely Hospital

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he received the full resettlement plan for Ely hospital residents; and when he expects to make his decision on the plan. [37201]

Mr. Hague: I have yet to receive a full resettlement plan for Ely hospital residents.

In-patient Activity

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 11 July, Official Report, column 514, if he will make a statement on the comparative benefits of the use of finished consultant episodes relative to deaths and discharges as the basis for remuneration of hospitals by (a) general practitioner fund holders and (b) health authorities, for in-patient activity. [37385]

Mr. Hague: As a basis for purchasing treatment and care from hospitals, whether by GP fundholders or health authorities, both measures have strengths and weaknesses.

Finished consultant episodes have the advantage over deaths and discharges of allowing the cost of treatment to be associated with the consultant responsible for providing it. The major drawback of finished consultant episodes is that definitions can vary both within and between hospitals, making comparisons difficult whether in terms of activity or cost. By contrast, the definition of an entire episode of treatment or care is more straightforward in the case of deaths and discharges.

Public Appointments

Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people in Wales have been approached in the last two years with regard to service on quangos; how they were selected; how many indicated they were members of (a) the Labour party and (b) the Conservative party; and how many (i) Labour party members and (ii) Conservative party members who expressed a willingness to serve were subsequently appointed. [37211]

Mr. Hague: I and my predecessor have made 597 appointments to non-departmental public bodies since 1 September 1993. Details of all appointments by Welsh Office Ministers are held in the Library of the House and updated quarterly. Appointments are made on merit. Candidates are drawn largely from the Welsh Office register of candidates. In addition to self-nominations, names of people willing to serve on a public body are regularly canvassed through advertisements in Welsh newspapers and by letters to professional, public sector and community organisations. I welcome candidates from all sources. Candidates are not currently required to declare any political affiliation: information is not therefore available in the form requested.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, what proposals he has to reinstate levels of Government grant in aid to the Welsh Development Agency to remove conditionality on receipts from the European regional development fund for 1996–97. [37203]

Mr. Hague: None. As I confirmed to Commissioner Wulf-Mathies on 4 October, European funding is not a factor in determining the level of grant in aid to the WDA.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the European Union Commissioner responsible for the European regional development fund; concerning the suspension of ERDF funds to the Welsh Development Agency; and when he expects to reach agreement on the balance between ERDF grant and United Kingdom Government grant-in-aid to the Welsh Development Agency. [37207]

Mr. Hague: I met Commissioner Wulf-Mathies on 4 October. I confirmed that European funding was not a factor in determining the level of the Welsh Development Agency's grant in aid. We agreed that officials should consider ways of improving the transparency of these arrangements. I also volunteered to provide an account of my Department's general procedures for the management and monitoring of European programmes. We agreed to complete this work within two weeks to enable early clearance of outstanding applications.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to compensate the Welsh Development Agency for loss of receipts from the European regional development fund, following a suspension of ERDF payments to the Welsh Development Agency; and if he will make a statement. [37202]

Mr. Hague: None. I expect early agreement with the European Commission to allow clearance of outstanding applications.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what subsidies were paid out for environmentally sensitive areas in Wales for (a) 1992–93, (b) 1993–94.

(c) 1994–95, (d) 1995–96; and how many individuals were recipients of these payments in these years. [37127]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The amount of subsidies paid out for environmentally sensitive areas in Wales was:

1992–93: £1,503,000

1994–95: £1,536,000

Provision for 1995–96 is £6,971,000 as shown in the 1995–96 Main Supply Estimates, Class XV, Vote 1 (CM 271-XV).

Information on the number of recipients receiving payments by financial year is not held.

The number of live management agreements at the end of each financial year was:

31 March 1993: 857

31 March 1994: 794

31 March 1995: 883

The number of current management agreements as at 31 August 1995 was 1,111.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what area, in hectares and percentage terms, of environmentally sensitive areas in Wales is made up of productive, or potentially productive, agricultural land. [37126]

Mr. Jones: The following is the information:

	Hectares productive land	Percentage of total area
Cambrian Mountains	118,780	77.3
Lleyn Peninsula	41,304	90.9
Radnor	91,769	91.6
Ynys Mon	66,063	92.5
Preseli	113,878	94.2
Clwydian Range	25,725	92.3
	457,519	88.1

The figures quoted exclude urban areas, mineral workings, open water and rivers, unvegetated land and coniferous forests which are within the respective environmentally sensitive areas.

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the latest out-turn estimate for expenditure on regional selective assistance in Wales for the year 1994–95. [37200]

Mr. Hague: £56.95 million.

Cardiff Bay Opera House Trust

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of the most recent allocation of grant in aid to the Cardiff Bay development corporation to cover the administrative running costs of the Cardiff Bay Opera House trust; if he will specify how it relates to previous estimates of the trust's running costs for 1995–96 and previous allocations of grant in aid; and if he will make a statement. [37494]

Mr. Hague: There is no grant-in-aid allocation given to the Cardiff Bay development corporation specifically to cover the administrative running costs of the Cardiff Bay Opera House trust. The question of specific payments to the trust is an operational matter for the corporation and I have therefore asked the chief executive to give those details.

18th Birthday Greeting Letters

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales;

(1) how many responses have been received to 18th birthday greeting letters sent out by Welsh Office Ministers in their ministerial capacity; [37466]

(2) what has been the cost to public funds of the practice of Welsh Office Ministers sending 18th birthday greetings in their ministerial capacity to members of the public in each of the last three years and in the current year to date; [37468]

(3) when the policy of Welsh Office Ministers sending 18th birthday greetings to 18-year-olds outside their own constituencies and in their ministerial capacities was initiated; [37467]

(4) how many letters of birthday greetings to young people reaching the age of 18 have been sent out by himself and his Ministers in 1994 and 1995 in their Welsh ministerial capacity. [37469]

Mr. Hague: There have been no such communications issued from my Department and hence no costs to public funds.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the rights of individual members of the public to make complaints to any of the appropriate ombudsmen about services or projects funded through the private finance initiative in his department. [36780]

Mr. Hague: Members of the public have the same rights to make complaints to the ombudsman concerning a project funded through the private finance initiative in my Department as they would have had if the project had been publicly funded.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many applications are awaiting departmental approval in principle under the private finance initiative in (a) the health sector, (b) transport sector and (c) other sectors; if he will list each one and its estimated capital value; if he will give his current estimate of the number likely to be approved for actual commencement in this financial year; and if he will make a statement. [37493]

Mr. Hague: The Welsh Office examines all of its capital expenditure programmes to identify projects that might be taken forward under the initiative. Some projects, such as an energy management scheme at Llandough hospital and a combined heat and power scheme at Withybush hospital, are already in place. Twenty-five projects, with a combined capital value of about £750 million are being examined at the moment with a view to taking them forward under the initiative. There projects in health, transport, Welsh Office administration and other sectors. I hope to make announcements on some of these in the next few months.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Central Science Laboratory

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list by grade the current establishment at his Ministry's site at Sand Hutton, north Yorkshire; what is the current funding; what percentage of the funding is for salaries; and what were the equivalent figures 12 months ago; [32996]

(2) if he will list the types of work currently being carried out at his Ministry's site at Sand Hutton, north Yorkshire; and if he will make a statement. [32997]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have asked the chief executive of the Central Science Laboratory to reply direct.

Letter from P. I. Stanley to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 16 October 1995:

THE STAFFING, FUNDING AND WORK OF THE CENTRAL SCIENCE LABORATORY, SAND HUTTON, N. YORKSHIRE

You asked two questions about the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (MAFF) laboratory at Sand Hutton and it may be helpful if I first of all explain the present situation. [32996 & 32997]

The Central Science Laboratory (CSL) was first launched as an executive agency of MAFF in April 1992 and was re-launched as an enlarged agency two years later following its merger with the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (MAFF) Food Science Laboratories.

CSL provides a wide range of scientific services to its major customer, MAFF including policy advice, technical support and training, underpinned by research and development (R&D) in the areas of plant health, the authenticity, safety and nutritional value of the food supply; pesticide safety: veterinary residues; the control of pests and diseases of growing and stored foodstuffs; wildlife management and the impact of food production on the environment and the consumer. In addition CSL offers R&D and advice to other Government Departments and public and private sector organisations on a commercial basis.

CSL is currently located at five major sites in Berkshire, Hertfordshire, Surrey, Norfolk and Grampian and at several smaller sites throughout the Country. It is planned to relocate the major part of the Agency in summer 1996 to Sand Hutton, N Yorkshire, where a new purpose-built laboratory is at present under construction. The types of work carried out at existing CSL sites and described above will also be carried out at the new site. Precise information about grades and salaries at Sand Hutton are not yet available but I expect that in total about 450 staff will be employed at the new laboratory.

CSL income in the 1994/95 financial year was £26.267K and staff costs amounted to £14.414K (55%). In the previous financial year respective figures were £16.908K and £9.427K (56%). The increase in income and costs in 1994/95 was the direct result of the enlargement of the Agency following its merger with the MAFF Food Science Laboratories at Norwich and Aberdeen. CSL's published Annual Reports and Accounts give full details and copies should be available in the House Library.

Consultants

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many contracts and for what total sum were let out by his Department and agencies for which it is responsible to (a) Coopers and Lybrand and its subsidiaries, (b) Peat Marwick and its subsidiaries, (c) Ernst and Young and its subsidiaries, (d) Arthur Andersen and its subsidiaries, (e) Price Waterhouse and its subsidiaries, (f) Grant Thornton and its subsidiaries, (g) Stoy Hayward and its subsidiaries, (h) Robson Rhodes and its subsidiaries, and (i) Pannell Kerr Forster and its subsidiaries, for privatisation, market testing, management advice, accounting, audit, consultancy and other services in 1993–94 and 1994–95. [33921]

Mr. Boswell: Centralised records are not kept of individual contracts between the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and consultants. It is not, therefore, possible to provide the information requested in the required form. However, the total amounts paid to the consultants named in the question in the relevant years were as follows:

Year	Consultant	Spend
1993–94	Cooper and Lybrand	175,000
	Peat Marwick	372,718
	Ernst and Young	212,258
	Arthur Andersen	nil
	Price Waterhouse	190,531
	Grant Thornton	nil
	Stoy Hayward	22,326
	Robson Rhodes	nil
	Pannell Kerr Forster	nil
1994–95	Cooper and Lybrand	5,571
	Peat Marwick	319,357
	Ernst and Young	123,140

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the achievements of (a) his policies and (b) his Department in helping small businesses over the last 12 months as against the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitor those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring. [34708]

Mr. Boswell: The Government recognise the crucial role played by small firms in the UK economy. The Government continue to help smaller companies by keeping inflation and interest rates low and by reducing legislative and administrative and taxation burdens. They also provide direct assistance where appropriate.

The competitiveness White Paper, published in May 1995, outlines a programme of measures to assist the growth and competitiveness of the small firms sector.

Public Immunity Certificates

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many public interest immunity certificates he has signed in respect of documents on listeria in the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [34406]

Mrs. Browning: So far as I am aware, only one public interest immunity certificate in respect of documents on listeria has been signed by any agriculture Minister.

The one certificate signed, in December 1993, followed the issue of a writ against the Ministry. As the law then stood, the Minister was under a duty to draw to the attention of the court any documents which, because of their nature, would normally be withheld from disclosure in the public interest. It was then for the court to decide whether, on the facts of the particular case, the overall public interest would best be served by disclosure of the documents.

The High Court recognised that the Minister had followed correct procedures. It also decided that disclosure would be appropriate in this case, and all documents have been made available to the plaintiff in this case.

It was not until July 1994 that the House of Lords—in the case of "Wiley"—ruled that Ministers can make voluntary disclosure of such documents where they are satisfied that this is in the public interest. Where the issues involved are difficult, and Ministers decide that they cannot judge where the balance lies, the certificate is made and it remains the function of the courts to decide whether the grater public interest favours disclosure.

Potato Prices

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the reasons for recent fluctuations in potato prices. [34994]

Mr. Boswell: Supplies, and thus the prices, of all vegetables including potatoes are very much affected by weather conditions. A cold wet spring in 1994, then summer drought followed by a wet harvest resulted in a reduced potato crop throughout Europe. The quality of potatoes also suffered. These factors led to a substantial increase in the price of potatoes of an acceptable quality to consumers.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the cost to United Kingdom public funds of administration of the CAP; and if he will make a statement. [35131]

Mr. Baldry: Information on the cost of administration of the CAP within the UK is contained in the departmental reports of the Ministry and Intervention Board, Cm 2803, and those of the Scottish Office, Welsh Office and Northern Ireland Office, copies of which are available in the House. An overall position for the Ministry and the Intervention Board can be obtained from annexes 1 and 5 of the report.

In addition, the report details the expenditure, including administration costs, for the 80 programmes which describe the Ministry's activities. Twenty-two of these programmes are directly related to the operation of agricultural schemes, including agri-environment schemes, formulated under the CAP.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the latest estimate of the cost to the average United Kingdom household of the common agricultural policy. [37117]

Mr. Boswell: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave) to the hon. Member for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson) on 9 March 1995, Official Report, column 328.

Surplus Food Scheme

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many applications have been received under the EC surplus food scheme in each of the last five years by region; how many were (a) accepted and (b) rejected by the Intervention Board; and if he will make a statement; [34733]

(2) how many applications have been received by his Ministry under the European Community surplus food scheme; what was the number, by category for each of the last five years; how many applications for each category were turned down; and if he will make a statement. [34734]

Mr. Baldry: The number of applications received by the Intervention Board, acting on behalf of the four agricultural Departments which are responsible for the designation process, in each of the last three financial years, is as follows:

	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95
England	1,050	816	899
Northern Ireland	86	66	50
Scotland	272	235	168
Wales	95	78	86

The number of organisations designated by the Agriculture Departments was as follows:

	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95
England	948	713	669
Northern Ireland	82	62	36
Scotland	256	213	151
Wales	81	64	80

The number of unsuccessful applications was as follows:

	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95
England	102	103	230
Northern Ireland	4	4	14
Scotland	16	22	17
Wales	14	14	6

These figures include applications received after the closing date or withdrawn, and those rejected because the applicant did not fulfil the conditions of the scheme or planned to operate in an area covered by a more suitable organisation.

A list of organisations designated in England in 1994, by region, has been placed in the Library.

Information on applications prior to 1992–93 and further breakdown by geographical regions or type of organisation could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

National Botanic Gardens

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has for establishing national botanic gardens in each of the four home countries; and if he will make a statement. [34888]

Mr. Boswell: We have no plans to establish new botanic gardens anywhere in the United Kingdom.

Countryside Access Scheme

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of the countryside access scheme costs will be incurred in Wales in 1995–96; and if he will make a statement. [34986]

Mr. Boswell: Approximately 3 per cent. of the total payments to farmers for the countryside access scheme—which operates in England and Wales only—will be incurred in Wales in 1995–96.

Postgraduate Studentship Awards

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many of the postgraduate studentships supplied by his Department were granted to people studying at Welsh institutions in 1994–95; and if he will make a statement. [34890]

Mr. Boswell: Four studentship awards were allocated to Welsh institutions in 1994–95.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Hain: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many officials of his Department have in the past been seconded to work with DGIII; what part such secondees played in drafting the European Commission discussion document on nutritional supplements produced in December 1991; if they have now (a) returned to placement with his Department, (b) remain with DGIII or (c) obtained employment with pharmaceutical companies; and if he will make a statement. [35097]

Mr. Boswell [pursuant to his reply, 18 July 1995, c. 1058]: I can now inform the hon. Member that the member of staff who returned to the Department in 1992 resigned from the Department in 1994 to take up a post in a pharmaceutical company. I understand that this company is not involved in producing dietary supplements.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures his Department has taken to encourage the promotion of women into senior positions within his Department and its executive agencies. [35628]

Mr. Boswell: The Ministry, including its executive agencies, has in place a comprehensive programme aimed at improving the recruitment, retention and development of women staff particularly in the middle and senior management grades and in those specialist scientific, professional and technical areas where the proportion of women is relatively low.

Priorities under this programme include the provision of assistance with child care and the encouragement of the wider use of alternative working patterns. The Ministry also runs a career break scheme which provides for periods of unpaid leave of up to five years to enable staff to cope with domestic responsibilities such as caring for children or elderly relatives.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list (a) the number of (i) male and (ii) female employees, (b) the number of officials employed at each of the principal grades and the numbers and percentages of women employed at these grades and (c) the number of staff employed at administrative grades and the number and percentage of these staff that are women, in his Department and for each of its executive agencies for each year since 1985. [35690]

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 19 July 1995]: The information requested for permanent non-industrial staff in my Department including executive agencies on 1 April 1995 is as follows:

(a) Total male staff 6,028; Total female staff 4,651

(b) Grade	Total officials	Women employed	Percentage women
2	6	1	17

The information is provisional. It is not separately available for executive agencies. Casual and seasonal staff are excluded. For earlier years, the information is not available in the form requested but details by grade and gender for the Department as a whole, including executive agencies, can be found in civil service statistics for each year from 1985 to 1994—copies available in the Library. Details for 1995 will be published later this year.

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list for each civil service grade in his Department the number of (a) male and (b) female and (i) full-time and (ii) part-time employees. [35469]

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 19 July 1995]: The numbers of permanent non-industrial staff on 1 April 1995 in my Department were as follows:

Notes:
1. Executive agencies are included, for which figures are not kept separately.
2. Casual and seasonal staff are not included.
3. Information is provisional.

Poisons Unit

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the answer of 4 April, Official Report, column 1037–38, which herbal products or remedies have been placed under surveillance by the poisons unit at Guy's and St. Thomas's Hospital Trust, in the project funded by his Department. [36322]

Mrs. Browning: No specific products or remedies are under surveillance. The purpose of the project is to investigate any reported cases of suspected adverse effects from exposure to traditional remedies and food supplements.

Fishing Vessels (Decommissioning)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the number of United Kingdom fishing vessels that has been decommissioned in each of the last three years; and what has been the cost of this exercise. [36114]

Mr. Baldry: There was no UK decommissioning scheme in 1992–93. Some 135 vessels were decommissioned under the 1993–94 scheme at a cost of £7.8 million, and 162 were decommissioned under the 1994–95 scheme at a cost of £8.8 million.

Crop Planting

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will announce the acreages to be planted in respect of cereals, rape or other specified crops; and if he will give urgent consideration to the time scale for planting rape. [36246]

Mr. Baldry: Plantings of oilseed rape may take place in the autumn or spring. Exact timing will depend on individual circumstances but plantings of winter rape are expected to begin in August.

Claims for 1995 are currently being verified and input into the computer system. It is not possible to determine provisional figures earlier than mid-September when details are notified to the European Commission and published.

Set-aside (Appeals System)

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce a system of appeals for farmers aggrieved by decisions made within his Department with particular reference to cases where there may be disagreement about what is or not good agricultural practice in regard to set-aside decisions. [36236]

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. and learned Friend is considering the possible need for a more formal system for hearing appeals against the loss of CAP support scheme entitlement arising from alleged breaches of scheme conditions; he is always prepared to ask his officials to look again at the cases where farmers are genuinely aggrieved at decisions taken by his Department.

Food Advisory Committee

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish those non-personal interests of the Food Advisory Committee listed in the committee's register of members' interests. [36428]

Mrs. Browning: Details of the non-personal interests of members of the Food Advisory Committee are contained in the Committee's annual report, which is published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office. Copies of the report have been deposited in the Libraries of both Houses.

Codex Alimentarius Commission

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the policy of his Ministry regarding an increase in consumer representation on the Codex Committee. [36427]

Mrs. Browning: Only member nations and associate members of the Food and Agriculture Organisation and/or the World Health Organisation may nominate delegates to the Codex Alimentarius Commission. Some intergovernmental and international non-governmental organisations are invited to attend as observers. We have always indicated to UK interests, both industry and consumers, that, if they wished to nominate individuals to attend meetings, we would be happy to include them in UK delegations. Consumers International—formerly the International Organisation of Consumer Unions—has observer status at Codex meetings and does send representatives.

The UK Codex Consultative Committee which meets to discuss items on the agenda of Codex meetings, has in membership the National Consumer Council, the Consumers' Association, the Consumers in the European Community Group, the National Federation of Consumer Groups, the Food and Drink Federation, the British Retail Consortium and the Local Authorities Co-ordinating Body on Food and Trading Standards, which represents a cross section of interests in the matters under discussion. A number of other organisations have expressed interest in membership. It is, however, difficult to adjust the membership without upsetting the balance of interests or making the committees too large to operate satisfactorily. I thus have no plans for change; particular interests are co-opted to particular meetings as the need arises.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Betts: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the rights of individual members of the public to make complaints to any of the appropriate ombudsmen about services or projects funded through the private finance initiative in his Department. [36838]

Mr. Boswell: At present there are no services or projects funded through the private finance initiative in the Department. However, the rights of individual members of the public to make complaints to the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration, who has jurisdiction in these matters, subject to the conditions of the Parliamentary Commissioner Act 1967, will be maintained for services or projects funded through the private finance initiative.

Medicines Licensing

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the cases where information has been withheld by his Department under section 118 of the Medicines Act 1968. [36756]

Mrs. Browning: Section 118 protects information furnished for the purposes of the Medicines Act, and thus may affect all activities concerning medicines licensing. I am committed to making as much information available as possible within this constraint, but examples of information which would be withheld would include details of manufacturing processes or the addresses of sites at which companies are trialing products under development.

Insecticides

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the national, European Economic Community or international agreement that imposes conditions concerning use of insecticides, or other potentially harmful substances, in the cultivation of fruits and vegetables imported into the United Kingdom for human consumption. [37265]

Mrs. Browning: All imported fruit and vegetables must meet the general provisions of the Food Safety Act 1990 and other specific legislation concerning the use of insecticides and other substances. This includes:

The Pesticides (Maximum Residue Levels in Crops, Food and Feeding Stuffs) Regulations 1994 (SI 1994/1985), as amended, which set maximum residue levels for pesticides which may be used on certain commodities, including some fruit and vegetables;

The Antioxidants in Food Regulations 1978 (SI 1978/105), as amended, which set maximum residue levels for certain substances which may be used on apples and pears;

The Preservatives in Food Regulations 1989 (SI 1989/533), as amended, which set maximum residue levels for certain substances which may be used on citrus fruit and bananas;

Directive 86/2783, which controls the use of sludge for agricultural purposes implemented in the UK by the Sludge (Use in Agriculture) Regulations 1989 (SI 1989/1263), as amended.

In addition, the use of products on home produced fruit and vegetables is controlled by the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 and the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986.

Set-aside Scheme

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what factors underlie the non-publication of payments of public money to companies in the farming industry for not growing crops. [37119]

Mr. Boswell: Under the set-aside schemes to which the hon. Gentleman refers, we have given an undertaking to claimants that all information regarding their claim is held in confidence. Therefore, no information is published which would enable individual claimants to be identified.

Overproduction

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the tonnage and value of fruit and vegetables destroyed due to overproduction in the United Kingdom and each EU member state in the latest year for which figures are available. [37118]

Mr. Baldry: Information on the tonnages and value of produce destroyed in each member state for which EU compensation was paid in 1992–93, the last year for which figures are available is as follows:

Table 1: Tonnage of destroyed produce for which EU withdrawal compensation was paid (t)

Environmentally Sensitive Farming

Mr. Hinchcliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps are being taken towards encouraging farming methods which support conservation measures and promote habitats for breeding birds. [35147]

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 18 July 1995]: We are expanding the range of schemes to encourage environmentally sensitive farming and plan to spend over £100 million on such schemes in the UK in 1996–97. The environmentally sensitive areas, countryside stewardship, habitat and moorland schemes in particular will benefit a wide range of habitats and species, including birds.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many calves from herds known to have had BSE have been exported over the last five years; and to which countries they have been exported. [34863]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 19 July 1995]: The information requested is not available. In any case, it is not an EC requirement that calves exported from the UK have to originate from herds in which no case of BSE has been diagnosed.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, what proportion of calves exported from the United Kingdom are checked by his Department's vets at the time they are given an export certificate to ensure they are not from herds with a history of either BSE or EBL. [34865]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 19 July 1995]: It is not an EC requirement that calves exported from the UK have to originate from herds in which no case of BSE has been diagnosed. However, before signing an export health certificate for any consignment the certifying local veterinary inspector must obtain documentary evidence from owners/exporters/auctioneers and MAFF that none of the calves is the progeny of a BSE-infected dam or originates from a herd in which EBL has occurred within a specified time.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many calves from herds known to have had EBL have been exported over the last five years; and to which countries they have been exported. [34867]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 19 July 1995]: We are aware from audit procedures that one animal exported to Belgium in 1994 originated from a herd in which EBL had occurred during the previous three years. Under EC rules, the animal will have been slaughtered by six months of age.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what safeguards he has put in place to ensure that animals exported from the United Kingdom with further fattening certificates are not immediately slaughtered on arrival at destination. [35479]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 19 July 1995]: EC animal health and welfare rules do not preclude the slaughter of animals exported for further fattening and accompanied by further fattening health certification. It is the responsibility of the veterinary authorities of the importing country to ensure that appropriate controls are imposed once exported animals arrive at their place of destination.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many animals were exported from the United Kingdom in 1994 and 1995 to date with a further fattening export certificate; and how many animals during the same period were exported with a for slaughter certificate. [35478]

Mrs. Browing [holding answer 19 July 1995]: Information in respect of exports to other member states is as follows:

	1994	[1]1995
Cattle for further fattening	301,009	104,400
Cattle for slaughter	1,623	760
Sheep for further fattening	1,038,572	202,327
Sheep for slaughter	79,901	4,126
Pigs for further fattening	10,718	358
Pigs for slaughter	9,471	296
Goats for further fattening	0	0
Goats for slaughter	2	0

[1] To end of May.

Note:

These figures are collated from the ANIMO system and show the number of animals certified for export from the United Kingdom to other member states. The figures remain provisional and subject to change.

Arable Area Payments Scheme

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list by county the number of landowners receiving payments under the arable area payments scheme of (a) less than £25,000, (b) between £25,000 and £50,000, (c) between £50,000 and £1 million and (d) above £1 million, for the latest year for which figures are available. [35364]

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 19 July 1995]: It is not possible from information held to differentiate between landowners and tenants receiving payments under the arable area payments scheme and such information could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Sickness Absence

Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, how many days were lost in sickness in the last 12 months by employees in his Department.(a) in total and (b) as a proportion of the number of days worked; and what was the cost of this absence. [34585]

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 14 July 1995]: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

However, selected aggregated data are provided by the Civil Service Occupational Health and Safety Agency on an annual basis. Provisional data for the 1994 calendar year show that in the core-Department—including the Pesticides Safety Directorate and Veterinary Medicines Directorate Agencies—59,572 working days, 3.28 per cent. of the total, were lost through sickness. The OHSA is not able to provide the cost of such absences except at disproportionate cost.

Responsibility for such matters within ADAS, Central Science Laboratory, Central Veterinary Laboratory and Meat Hygiene Service Agencies has been delegated to the agency chief executives and—with the exception of the Meat Hygiene Service Agency, which was formed only on 1 April 1995—I have asked them to reply to the hon. Member direct.

Letter from Phillip Needham to Mr. Ian McCartney, dated 16 October 1995:

The Minister of Agriculture has asked me to reply direct to your Parliamentary Question number 1679 in which you sought details of how many days were lost in sickness in the last twelve months by employees in his Department (a) in total and (b) as a proportion of the number of days worked; and what was the cost of this absence. (34585)

ADAS was formed as an Executive Agency of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Welsh Office in April 1992.

During the period 1/7/94 to 30/6/95 the total sick leave taken by all ADAS staff (permanent, casuals etc.) was 11,012 days. This equates to 1.9% of the number of days worked. We are not able to put an exact value on the cost of these absences, but estimate that it was approximately £650,000 (based on average salary costs).

You may wish to note that these figures have not been adjusted for weekends and bank holidays where sick leave extended beyond the normal working week.

Letter from P. I. Stanley to Mr. Ian McCartney, dated 16 October 1995:

NUMBER OF DAYS LOST IN SICKNESS AND THE RELATED COST

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has asked me to reply to your question about the number of days lost in sickness in the last twelve months and the cost of this absence, as this is a matter within my operational responsibility. (34585)

The most recent data I am able to provide relates to the 1994 calendar year. The figures are provisional and have been adjusted to take account of weekends and Bank Holidays. The number of days lost in sickness by Central Science Laboratory employees was 4077. As a proportion of the number of days worked this amounts to 2.48%.

I am unable to tell you the cost of this absence as a grade/salary breakdown is not readily available and such information could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Letter from T. W. A. Little to Mr. Ian McCartney, dated 16 October 1995:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your question about sickness absence during the last twelve months at CVL. (34585)

For the calendar year 1994, 6,546 days were lost through sickness. This represented 4.34% of the days worked. I am afraid I am unable to provide you with the cost of absence since the records do not readily show this information. It could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. The figures are still provisional for 1994 and are adjusted by bank holidays and weekends. The source was the Occupational Health Safety Agency sickness/absence database.

HEALTH

Osteoporosis

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what guidelines he has issued in respect of preventive and treatment strategies for patients in high-risk groups of osteoporosis; [36332]

(2) what action has been taken to consider the role of diet in the prevention of osteoporosis; and if he will make a statement. [36333]

Mr. Sackville: It is the responsibility of professional bodies to develop clinical guidelines where a need has been identified. Discussions have begun between the Department and the relevant medical royal colleges with a view to their developing clinical guidelines for osteoporosis. In addition, a new expert advisory group has been set up and will be considering the dietary aspects of osteoporosis prevention. Details of the group will be announced shortly.

Prescriptions

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to remove the statutory requirement for a prescription charge to be paid for each drug contained in hormone replacement therapy preparations. [36334]

Mr. Malone: None. Where two, or more, prescribed drugs are dispensed, a prescription charge is payable for each one even though, for patient convenience or through manufacturers' packaging arrangements, they may be supplied together in a single combination pack or duo pack.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will conduct a review of the principal factors underlying the non-redemption rate of prescriptions issued by general practitioners; and if he will make a statement; [37047]

(2) if he will undertake a comprehensive review of the prescription system; and if he will include in such a review the option of altering pharmacists' regulations to allow individual pharmacists to offer patients the option of paying the cost price where this is less than the standard per item prescription charge. [37049]

Mr. Malone: Extensive charge exemption and remission arrangements, among the most generous in Europe, ensure that only those able to afford the national health service prescription charge are asked to pay. The scheme was last reviewed in 1993 as part of the fundamental review of health expenditure. There are no current plans for a further review, either of the scheme itself or of the reasons why patients may choose not to present prescriptions for dispensing.

Where a medicine is available only on prescription, doctors may already issue private prescriptions free of charge to NHS patients, although they are not obliged to do so. Pharmacists then set and charge patients a price for the medicine and a private dispensing fee.

Temazepam

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what action his Department is taking to reduce the illegal use of Temazepam; [36624]

(2) what representations he has received concerning the illegal use of Temazepam. [36625]

Mr. Bowis: On 10 May, Official Report, columns 747–59, my right hon. Friend the Lord President of the Council announced a range of measures to help combat its misuse. This included a public consultation exercise on a proposal to ban national health service prescribing of the soft gelatin gel filled capsule formulation of the drug under schedule 10 to the NHS (General Medical Service) Regulations 1992. The Department of Health received 168 responses to the consultation exercise and these are being carefully considered. An announcement will be made shortly.

On 12 September my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department also announced that the drug was to be moved from schedule 4 to schedule 3 to the Misuse of Drugs Regulations 1985, which would make unlawful possession an offence, require pharmacies to store the drug more securely, and impose import and export licensing controls. Manufacturers and wholesalers will also be required to store the drug securely.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence he has that the administrative costs of GP fundholding are less than budget savings. [36634]

Mr. Malone: Information about fundholder savings and management allowances expenditure is shown in the table, which does not include start-up costs.

	Total fundholders budgets	General Practitioner Fundholding (retained) Savings		Management allowances
	£ million	£ million	As a percentage of budgets set	£ million	As a percentage of budgets set
1991–92	400	14.5	3.7	10	2.5
1992–93	800	28.3	3.5	19	2.4
1993–94	1,800	64.2	3.5	38	2.1

Final figures for 1994–1995 are not yet available.

Mr. Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what evaluation his Department has made of general practitioner multi-funds as purchasers of secondary health care services; [36614]

(2) what is the number of general practitioner multi-funds in the NHS by regional and nationally. [36613]

Mr. Malone: Information about multi-funds is not collected centrally. Multi-funds are administrative arrangements whereby one or more fundholders work together to share administration or purchasing expertise which can provide improved services for patients. How general practitioners choose to manage their fund, whether singly or in groups, is a matter for individual fundholders.

Market Testing

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which sites within the NHS have been subject to market testing; and which services on those sites have been market tested. [36642]

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice his Department or the NHS executive has issued to health authorities or trusts about the market testing of physiotherapy services. [36646]

Mr. Sackville: None that is specific to physiotherapy.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the value of NHS contracts by district and region placed with independent sector providers for (a) catering (b) cleaning and (c) other ancillary services for (i) 1992–93, (ii) 1993–94 and (iii) 1994–95. [36795]

Mr. Sackville: From information recorded on the national health service executive market testing database, the aggregate value of contracts awarded by NHS trusts to another contractor, including other NHS trusts, for the baseline year 1992–93 is shown in the table by region for each service grouping requested. For later years the records are incomplete. Information is not maintained by district.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the value of NHS clinical contracts by district and region placed with independent sector providers for (a) radiology, (b) pathology, (c) imaging and (d) other clinical services for (i) 1992–93, (ii) 1993–94 and (iii) 1994–95. [36794]

Mr. Sackville: The table shows the information recorded on the national health service executive's market testing database, and covers market testing of the specified services by NHS trusts, where the contract was awarded to a non-NHS contractor. The analysis is by region, but not by district, for 1992–93. Information for 1993–94 and 1994–95 is still incomplete.

Sheep Dipping

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment his Department has made of the health risk associated with long-term exposure to chemicals used for dipping sheep. [36612]

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health's staff continually assess evidence relating to the health risks associated with long term exposure to chemicals used for dipping sheep. In particular officials provided expert input into the two meetings held by the Veterinary Products Committee in 1992 and 1993 to discuss the future licensing of organophosphorus sheep dips. The Department continues to provide expert input to the medical and scientific panel which the VPC set up to investigate the long-term health effects of exposure to these products. The panel has yet to report its final conclusions.

Cancer

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list by region the proportion of NHS cancer patients receiving modern anti-emetics, HT3 antagonists, while on chemotherapy; [36628]

(2) what is the proportion of NHS cancer patients receiving modern anti-emetics, HT3 antagonists, whilst on chemotherapy in (a) England and (b) other OECD nations. [36627]

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to implement in full the recommendations of the Calman report on the commissioning of cancer services in the NHS. [36626]

Mr. Sackville: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has accepted the report's recommendations and welcomed the aim of delivering a uniformly high level of cancer care based on a network of expertise covering primary as well as secondary care. We support the development of designated specialist cancer units and centres and look to the national health service to make systematic progress in implementing this strategy.

Mr. Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many new patients are seen per year by NHS oncologists; and what are the comparable figures in other OECD states; [36635]

(2) if he will publish figures, by region and nationally, for the proportion of NHS cancer patients referred to a cancer specialist. [36637]

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Travel Allowances

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what rates of travel allowance may be claimed by civil servants in his Department when using their own vehicles for official business. [36369]

Mr. Sackville: The Department, with the exception of the Medicines Control Agency, has adopted a single motor mileage rate of 30p per mile for all motor cars and 15p per mile for all motor cycles. The Medicines Control Agency rates are as follows:

	Engine cc:
	Up to 1500 cc	1501–2000 cc	Over 2000 cc
Up to 5000 miles	35.7p	42p	46p
Over 5000 miles	23p	27p	35p

The Agency pays 23p per mile when a car is used in preference to public transport.

Consultant Oncologists

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to meet the recommendation of the Royal College of Radiologists that there be a minimum of 470 NHS consultant oncologists by 2000; and what progress is being made towards this target. [36638]

Mr. Malone: The Government seek to ensure an adequate supply of appropriately trained doctors in each specialty, including both medical and clinical oncology. This involves planning the number of doctors in higher specialist training on a specialty basis and including all relevant parties in the process. However, employment of consultants is a matter for local employing bodies, who make medical staffing decisions in the light of competing priorities and the health care needs of the local population.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him today for the number of consultant oncologists up to and including September 1994.

Mr. Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish figures for the number of (a) consultant medical oncologists, (b) consultant clinical oncologists and (c) palliative care specialists working in the NHS for each of the last five years for which figures are available. [36636]

Mr. Malone: The information is shown in the table.

Hospital Medical Consultants at 30 September each year England—whole-time equivalents

	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993	1994
Palliative Medicine	12.1	13.4	14.1	19.5	22.1	31.8

Clinical Oncology	190.2	185.6	202.5	200.1	198.8	221.2

Mr. Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of consultant oncologists per head of population in (a) England and (b) other OECD countries. [36615]

Mr. Malone: There were 282.7 hospital medical and clinical consultant oncologists—whole-time equivalents—in England as at 30 September 1994, 0.6 per 100,000 population. Data on the number of oncologists per head of population in OECD countries are not available centrally.

Intensive Care Unit Beds

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to set up a central telephone and computer system to provide accurate information for clinicians on the availability of ICU beds across the country. [36622]

Mr. Sackville: This is one of the points being considered by a working group of experts looking into admission to intensive care.

Bloomsbury and Islington College of Nursing and Midwifery

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the numbers and grades of those who will be made redundant because of the closure of the Bloomsbury and Islington college of nursing and midwifery; [36632]

(2) what representations he has received concerning the proposed closure of the Bloomsbury and Islington college of nursing and midwifery; and if he will make a statement. [36633]

Mr. Sackville: The closure of the Bloomsbury and Islington college of nursing and midwifery is a matter for the North Thames regional health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir William Staveley, chairman of the authority, for details.

Dental Services

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the recommendations of the committee convened to review the provision of NHS dental services and the date on which he expects to publish the recommendations. [36443]

Mr. Malone: The Government have not convened such a committee. We have, however, been working closely with the General Dental Services Committee on the detailed development of the reform proposals that I announced to the House on 5 April, Official Report, columns 1214-15.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many salaried dental practitioner posts have been (a) approved and (b) filled since 1 January 1994. [36809]

Mr. Malone: The number of salaried dentist posts approved from 7 January 1994 to 22 September 1995 is 36. Over the same period the net increase in the number of salaried dentists was 26.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many referrals were received by the community dental service in (a) 1992–93, (b) 1994–95 and (c) in respect of patients unable to obtain treatment within the general dental service. [36819]

Mr. Malone: Family health services authorities in England report that between 1 August 1994 and 22 September 1995 that they suggested to 1,399 patients that treatment might be available through the community dental service. Information is not available in this form before 1 August 1994.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to initiate pilot studies on purchaser-provider arrangements for the dentist service; and if he will make a statement. [36815]

Mr. Malone: The package of reforms I announced on 5 April reaffirmed the Government's aim to introduce a system of local contracts between health authorities and dental practices similar to that which operates elsewhere in the health service. Such a system will need careful piloting and evaluation before a decision is taken on nationwide introduction. To run pilot projects would require primary legislation. The Government will seek to introduce the necessary legislation when parliamentary time allows. Bids for pilot projects will then be invited.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average waiting time by region for orthodontic treatment at hospitals. [36813]

Mr. Malone: At 31 March 1995 there were 275 patients waiting for in-patient or day case orthodontic treatment. No patient had waited more than 15 months and information by region is shown in the table. Waiting times for patients being treated on an out-patient basis are not collected centrally.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total number of children by region waiting for orthodontic treatment on the NHS for each month since January 1994. [36811]

Mr. Malone: Children are not identified separately in information collected on numbers of patients waiting for in-patient or day case treatment.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he is taking to improve dental care for elderly people in residential and nursing homes; and if he will make a statement. [36821]

Mr. Bowis: Last April the Government announced a range of reforms of national health service dentistry, including its intention to strengthen the community dental service's role in ensuring continued access to NHS dental services for all who wish to use them. This development should benefit those patients in residential and nursing homes unable to use the mainstream general dental service.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dental practices in the United Kingdom are accepting children for orthodontic treatment on only a private contract basis. [36810]

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total budget for the community dental service in (a) 1992–93, (b) 1994–95 and (c) 1995–96; and what is the projected budget for (i) 1995–96 and (ii) 1996–97. [36820]

Mr. Malone: Expenditure on the community dental services in 1992–93 was £75,770,000. Figures are not available for later years. The level of future expenditure on the community dental service is a matter for health authorities, as the local purchasers of health care, to decide.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total amount allocated by his Department to dental schools for capital improvements in (a) 1993–94, (b) 1994–95 and (c) 1995–96; and what proportion of this amount in each year was passed on to dental schools by hospital trusts. [36816]

Mr. Sackville: The Department does not allocate capital funds direct to dental schools for capital improvements. Up to and including 1994–95 a central allocation for the re-equipment of dental hospitals was made to each regional health authority for the schools in its area. The total allocated was £4,608,000 in 1993–94 and £4,788,000 in 1994–95 which was split equally between the schools to produce £384,000 and £399,000 a year respectively. These amounts were allocated by the RHAs to the appropriate health authorities and national health service trusts. Records are not kept centrally of any additional capital allocated to dental schools by the health authority or trust.

From 1995–96 there is no central allocation. Dental schools are required to put bids in for capital funds from the trust's capital programme. Records are not kept centrally of the capital allocated.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total number of trained orthodontists for each year since 1991; and what was the estimated requirement for orthodontists in each of those years. [36812]

Mr. Malone: Any dentist who has the necessary facilities, experience of expertise may provide orthodontic treatment.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total amount allocated by his Department for orthodontic training for each year since 1991; and what is the projected budget for orthodontic training for (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97. [36818]

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has carried out into the working of the capitation payment system to dentists for dental care of children; and what plans he has to change this system. [36814]

Mr. Malone: The Government have commissioned two research studies on the operation of the capitation system since it was introduced in 1990.

The reports are at different stages of readiness. That from the university of Birmingham is in its final form and I have today placed it in the House of Commons Library. The report from the university of Manchester will be available shortly. Both research teams have plans to disseminate their findings more widely.

The improvement of the capitation system was one of the package of proposals for the reform of NHS dentistry that I announced on 5 April. The Government intend to reform the capitation system by relating payments to dentists to disease levels in children. We are discussing the detailed development of this and the other elements of the package with the representatives of the dental profession.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, formerly health services authority if he will list by region and in total the number of people (a) deregistered from NHS dental treatment and (b) seeking help from their local FHSA to find a NHS dentist, since July 1992. [36994]

Mr. Malone: This information will be placed in the Library. At 31 July 1995, as at 1 July 1992, there were 27.3 million patients registered with national health service dentists in England.

Redundancy Payments

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his answer on 27 March, Official Report, column 412, if he will publish a breakdown of the grades of staff made redundant and the cost of redundancy payments, made to each grade of staff, for each of the last 10 years. [36647]

Mr. Malone: Information on the cost of redundancy by grade is not collected centrally.

Nursing and Midwifery Education

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the real terms NHS expenditure on nursing and midwifery education, for each of the past 15 years nationally and by region. [36621]

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many public interest immunity certificates his Department has issued in each year since 1986. [36689]

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the right hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 19 July, column 1286.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many elderly, over 65 years of age, people died last year in their homes in (a) Lancashire and (b) each other county in England. [36453]

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

Children Act 1989

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will remove public schools from the provisions of the Children Act 1989. [36556]

Mr. Bowis: The Children Act covers the welfare of children in England and Wales wherever they are. There are no plans to amend its provisions to exclude the welfare of children in independent boarding schools.

Chlamydia

Mr. Godsiff: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information his Department has concerning the incidence of chlamydia; and what measures his Department is taking to combat the spread of infection among the population with particular reference to women. [36952]

Mr. Sackville: Information about chlamydia is published in the statistical bulletin entitled "Sexually Transmitted Diseases, England 1994", copies of which are available in the Library. The Health Education Authority and other organisations issue materials on sexually transmitted diseases, including chlamydia, to help people understand what bacterial and viral infections exist and how they should be treated. People who think they may have been at risk can make use of the network of open-access genito-urinary medicine clinics which offer confidential advice and treatment. In addition, the Department plans to set up, in parallel with on-going research, an expert group to consider the practical implications that might arise if any screening programme for chlamydia was to be introduced for different population groups and in different settings.

Mental Health Services

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the real increases and real reductions in spending on mental health services for (a) hospital, (b) community services and (c) health authorities, for each year since 1979, taking 1979 as the base line. [36898]

Mr. Bowis: The information is shown in the table.

Expenditure on mental health services 1978–79 to 1992–93[1]

(a) Hospital: in-patient and out-patient expenditure—the consultant specialities of mental health, child and adolescent psychiatry, forensic psychiatry, psychotherapy and old age psychiatry; day patient expenditure—in the categories mental health (alcoholism, drug abuse, psychogeriatrics and general), child and adolescent psychiatry and forensic psychiatry.

(b) Community: community mental health nursing expenditure and local authority personal social services for people with mental health problems.

(c) Health authority: hospital expenditure and community mental health nursing expenditure.

[2] Local authority personal social services data are not available for the years 1979–80 to 1985–86.

[3] Figures for 1978–79, 1986–87 and 1987–88 are local authority personal social services expenditure only. The percentage change figure for 1987–88 on 1986–87 reflects this. Community mental health nursing expenditure was not collected separately in years before 1988–89. It was included with other community expenditure.

[4] Figures for 1991–92 cannot be compared with those for 1990–91 for the following reasons:

(a) The introduction of the NHS reforms in 1991–92 and changes to accountancy practices; and

(b) The revision of the local authority personal social services expenditure return meaning that information on client group spend was provided directly by local authorities rather than being apportioned by the Department of Health.

Note:

1. Increases in local authority personal social services expenditure data in 1992–93 are, in part, due to refinement of the basis for Department of Health apportionment.

NHS (Private Patients)

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the cost to the NHS of the recent decision by BUPA to withdraw automatic cover for intensive care treatment for patients who undergo routine surgery. [36623]

Mr. Sackville: This will depend on factors which are not predictable, including future patients' individual circumstances and unexpected complications during treatment. People who have a right to national health service treatment retain their right whether or not they are receiving, or have received, private treatment.

Private Finance Initiative

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the projected capital spending within the NHS for (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97; and how much of that total he estimates will be funded through the private finance initiative; [36787]

(2) what is the projected capital spending on family and community health services within the NHS for (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97; and what proportion will be funded through the private finance initiative. [36789]

Mr. Sackville: Gross capital spending within the National Health Service for 1995–96 is estimated to be £2,028 million. The Government's spending plans for 1996–97 will be announced in the Budget.

Spending on family health services and on community health services is not separately identified.

These figures are additional to capital arising from the private finance initiative. At present, capital projects with a total value of approximately £1 billion are being tested for private finance.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the rights of individual members of the public to make complaints to any of the appropriate ombudsmen about services or projects funded through the private finance initiative in his Department. [36831]

Mr. Sackville: The rights of complaint of members of the public about NHS services are unaffected by the private finance initiative.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many capital expenditure bids have been exempted from normal private finance initiative rules. [36981]

Mr. Sackville: The potential for private finance is always thoroughly investigated before public funding is made available. This rule applies to all capital investment projects submitted for approval since the issue of the capital investment manual to the national health service in June 1994.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he proposes to offer to trusts negotiating contracts under the private finance initiative in relation to foreclosure in the event of default on obligations. [36796.]

Mr. Sackville: Guidance on the general principles to be applied in contracting with construction companies is set out in the National Health Service Estates publication "Contracts and Commissions for the NHS Estate", issued to all NHS trusts. Trusts, in consultation with the NHS executive headquarters, are responsible for ensuring that contracts with the private sector cover the eventuality of default by the private sector partner. Trusts are therefore urged to take legal advice at all stages of negotiating such contracts.

NHS Clinical Contracts

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the value of NHS clinical contracts placed with independent sector providers by district and region for (a) 1992–93, (b) 1993–94 and (c) 1994–95; and what proportion this represented of the total NHS budget for each of those years. [36793]

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Infant Formula Advertising

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to ban the advertising of formula milk products in hospitals and clinics. [36805]

Mr. Sackville: The advertising and promotion of baby milks are restricted by the Infant Formula and Follow-on Formula Regulations which came into force on 1 March 1995.

Private Companies (Advice)

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the private companies that have advised his Department during the past five years. [36991]

Mr. Sackville: No central record is kept and this information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Acute Beds

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his Department classifies as an acceptable level of occupancy for acute beds in respect of (a) the district general hospitals and (b) teaching hospitals. [36791]

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health has not attempted to set-a definitive level for bed occupancy rates. Optimum levels are dependent on an examination of local factors and are not therefore suitable or capable of being the subject of central advice.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department's target remains to reduce the number of acute beds, by 40 per cent. by 2005 in England and Wales. [36790]

Mr. Sackville: There is no national target for reducing acute beds in England. The number of acute beds needed has to be decided at local level, based on contracted work loads and taking account of local circumstances, such the local rate for emergency admissions, the level of day case treatments and the availability of alternative services, such as hospital at home schemes.

Responsibility for hospital services in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Breastfeeding

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total amount spent by his Department on the promotion of breastfeeding for each year since 1991; and what is the projected budget for (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97. [36801]

Mr. Sackville: The expenditure by the Department on publicity materials to promote breastfeeding is as follows:

Financial year	£
1991–92	Nil
1992–93	30,000
1993–94	28,000
1994–95	58,000
1995–96	51,000 (estimated)
1996–97	not yet determined

Total expenditure, through section 64 grant aid programme, to voluntary bodies concerned with the promotion and support of breastfeeding, is as follows:

1991–92: 66,000

1992–93: 58,000

1993–94: 70,000

In addition, we have contributed £38,000—paid over the financial years 1994–95 and 1995–96—of the £50,600 funding from the United Kingdom Health Departments towards the costs of the "Invest in Breast" training programme introduced jointly by the Royal College of Midwives and the Health Visitors Association which was launched last May.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has undertaken into the potential savings to the NHS of encouraging more mothers to breastfeed their babies in the last five years. [36802]

Mr. Sackville: Publicly funded research studies have shown that there are substantial health benefits for babies who are breastfed rather than bottle fed.

The Department's "Breastfeeding: good practice guidance to the NHS" provides an estimate, based on the research findings on the benefits of breastfeeding and of the potential savings to the national health service that could be achieved from increased breastfeeding. The guidance was issued in May and copies are available in the Library.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make training on breastfeeding mandatory for general practitioners and other health service professionals. [36804]

Mr. Sackville: The body responsible for general practice vocational training—the Joint Committee on Postgraduate Training for General Practice—expects general practitioners to be skilled in recognising and making appropriate decisions about all health problems presented by their patients. The specific curricular arrangements to achieve these attributes are the responsibility of regional postgraduate organisations.

The English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting is responsible for approving—to standards set by the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting—institutions to provide courses for these three professions. Midwifery and health visiting courses include breastfeeding.

Hospital waiting Lists

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the waiting times for in-patient admission and day surgery by (a) three months, (b) six months, (c) nine months and (d) 12 months by region. [36798]

Mr. Malone: Information in the form requested is not available. The numbers of patients waiting, by regions, for in-patient and day case treatment as at 31 March 1995 are shown in the table.

Numbers of patients on waiting lists on 31 March 1995 who had been waiting for:

GP Surgeries

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many administrative and clerical staff have been employed in general practitioners' surgeries by region, including London, since 1990–91; [36989]

(2) what has been the total of practice managers located in general practitioners' surgeries employed by GP fundholders or non-fundholders by region, including London, since 1990–91. [36988]

Mr. Malone: Information on the type and number of general practitioner practice staff is contained in the publication "GMS Basic Statistics—England and Wales", copies of which are available in the Library. The fundholding status of GPs is not separately identified.

Baby Friendly Initiative

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many hospitals have been awarded UNICEF/WHO baby friendly awards; [36807]

(2) what support his Department intends to give to hospitals working towards baby friendly status; and if he will make baby friendly status a mandatory requirement for NHS trusts. [36803]

Mr. Sackville: Two hospitals in England have been awarded the WHO/UNICEF/UK baby friendly initiative status which indicates an international standard in the promotion of breastfeeding. Others are working towards this.

The Department's "Breastfeeding Good Practice Guidance to the NHS" was issued to the national health service, including trusts, in May this year. It was prepared in consultation with the national breastfeeding working group on which the UNICEF/UK baby friendly initiative were represented. The guidance gives some prominence to the baby friendly initiative "10 steps to successful breastfeeding" and asks purchasers to incorporate its principles within their purchasing plans. Copies of the guidance are available in the Library.

Consultants

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the (a) management, (b) medical and (c) other consultants employed by his Department during the past five years. [36993]

Mr. Sackville: No central record is kept and this information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Medicines Act 1968

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the cases in which information has been withheld by his Department under section 118 of the Medicines Act 1968. [36757]

Mr. Sackville: Except where disclosure would be in performance of duties placed upon holders of information, including public safety, the Medicines Act 1968 protects information obtained, furnished or gathered as a requirement of the Act. This would include trade secrets and manufacturing processes.

Fluoridation

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he is taking to ensure that water companies comply with requests from local health authorities for water fluoridation other than when technical considerations prevent them from doing. [36817]

Mr. Malone: Fluoridation of water supplies is a matter for local decision. Local health authorities have no power to compel water suppliers to fluoridate.

NHS Pension Scheme

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if men and women in the NHS pension scheme have contributed the same percentage contributions since 1972; [36800]

(2) what representations he has received regarding discrimination against women doctors in the NHS pension scheme in the last year; and if he will make a statement. [36799]

Mr. Malone: The contribution level of both men and women in the national health service pension scheme has been at 5 per cent. of pensionable earnings for manual workers, 6 per cent. of pensionable earnings for other staff, since 1972. Widower benefits were introduced into the scheme at no extra cost in April 1988. A voluntary purchase scheme was available until June 1989 to enable those members who wished to have additional widowers benefits cover to buy past service, costs being shared by NHS employers.

On 6 April the Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, West (Mr. Sackville), met representatives of the British Medical Association seeking retrospective improvements of widowers benefits. Since 1 July 1994, 29 right hon. and hon. Members have written on the same subject.

Outsourcing Contracts

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many outsourcing contracts were granted by his Department or agencies in each year since 1990, indicating the nature and value of each contract; and if any additional work was added and of what value to (a) Hoskyns/Cap Gemini Segeti, (b) AT and T Istel, (c) EDS, (d) Sema Group, (e) Datasolve, (f) ITN Net, (g) Andersen Consulting, (h) Centre Files, (i) Centre Files, (j) Telecom Capita, (k) ICL, (l) Digital equipment, (m) CFM, (n) Siemens, (o) Nixdorf, (p) CMG and (q) Logica. [36955]

Mr. Sackville: No central record is kept and this information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

GP Premises

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the projected capital spending by region on GP premises for (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97. [36788]

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan) on 25 January, column 259.

Formula Milk

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to limit the use of formula milk products by the NHS. [36806]

Mr. Sackville: While recognising and promoting breast feeding as the best start to life for infants the Government recognise some women will choose not to, or will not be able to, breastfeed. The use of formula milk products will reflect the choice mothers make about how to feed their babies.

Wellhouse Trust

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if the Wellhouse Trust will be exempted from the private finance initiative rules in raising funds for the new Barnet hospital project; [36980]

(2) what factors underlay his decision regarding capital expenditure by the Wellhouse Trust; and if he will make a statement. [36982]

Mr. Sackville: No. The trust is pursuing private finance initiative procedures for phase 1b of the redevelopment of Barnet general hospital. Phase 1a is under construction at a cost of £29 million. The new hospital will help to ensure local people have access to comprehensive and high quality acute services.

Private Contracts

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the private companies that have been awarded contracts by his Department during the past five years. [36992]

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Senior Registrars and Registrars

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received relating to his proposal to remove the contract of small registrars and small senior registrars from the regional health authority to national health service trusts. [36742]

Mr. Malone: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State received letters from representatives of senior and junior doctors about our plans for junior doctors' contracts. He met with them on 13 July and emphasised Ministers' commitment to ensuring that the high standards of medical education and training are maintained. A package of safeguards has been developed that will protect the continuity and high quality of training programmes. Guidance to the service is now being worked up in conjunction with the medical profession.

GP Paperwork

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what amount of time GPs devote to paperwork on average, by fundholder and non-fundholder, (a) now and (b) for whichever dates information is conveniently available in each of the last five years. [36990]

Mr. Malone: The information is not available.

Personal Social Services Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the social services standard spending assessment in each English and Welsh county for the current financial year. [36714]

Mr. Bowis: Personal social services standard spending assessments for 1995–96 for English county councils are set out in the standard spending assessment handbook 1995–96, copies of which are available in the Library.

Information relating to Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Variations in Health

Ms. Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the sub-group of the chief medical officer's health of the nation working group, variations in health is due to report; and when the report will be published. [36792]

Mr. Sackville: The variations sub-group of the chief medical officer's health of the nation working group has now reported. Its report will be published shortly.

Health Advisory Council

Ms. Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received about the reinstatement of the Health Advisory Council; and if he will make a statement. [36808]

Mr. Sackville: I am not aware of a body of that name.

Community Care

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of total national spending the Department of Social Security was spending in each English and Welsh county in the financial year prior to transfer of responsibility for care in the community to local authorities; and what proportion of funds allocated by his Department for care in the community are distributed in each English and Welsh county. [36713]

Mr. Bowis: I assume the hon. Gentleman is referring to community care and not the mental health care in the community. The Department of Social Security figures for 1992–93 relate to the amount paid in income support to residents of the independent sector residential homes. All other community care, residential, domiciliary and day services, were provided by social services departments. The information for England will be placed in the Library. Information relating to Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Population Statistics

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the population in each English and Welsh county is over pensionable age; and what is the English and Scottish average. [36715]

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

Postgraduate Education (Registrars)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has to ensure that high standards of postgraduate education and training for registrars are protected. [36743]

Mr. Malone: The medical Royal Colleges and their Faculties are responsible for the standards of training and education of registrars. Under the reforms of specialist medical education currently being implemented, the registrar and senior registrar grades will be abolished and replaced by the new specialist registrar grade. We are working with the royal colleges and postgraduate deans to ensure that training in the specialist registrar grade will be of the highest possible standard.

Booth Hall Children's Hospital

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the occupancy rate and number of patients seen in the last three years at Booth Hall hospital. [37355]

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally. The right hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. T. F. Lavin, chairman of Manchester Children's Hospitals national health service trust, for details.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what representations he has received on the future of Booth Hall; from which organisations; and what has been his response; [37354]

(2) what replacement services are proposed in replacement of those provided currently by Booth Hall children's hospital. [37353]

Mr. Sackville: Ministers have replied to eight letters from hon. Members. Officials have replied to 37 letters from members of the public.

Under the health authorities' proposals, all services currently available at Booth Hall children's hospital would be re-provided elsewhere. It is envisaged that routine paediatric services for local children would be provided at North Manchester general hospital. The more specialist, regional services would move to the Royal Manchester children's hospital, Pendlebury.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the report on paediatric care in Greater Manchester and when he will make an announcement on the future of Booth Hall children's hospital. [37352]

Mr. Sackville: The North West regional health authority commissioned Sir David Hull, professor of child health at Nottingham university, to carry out an independent and thorough review of service and make recommendations for the future. On the basis of Professor Hull's recommendations, Manchester and Salford and Trafford health authorities drew up specific proposals for the development of high quality, city-wide services for children. The proposals are currently set aside pending the outcome of a possible judicial review.

Accident and Emergency Services

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what instructions or advice his Department has issued to regional or district health services concerning criteria for contracts which they make with providers of accident and emergency services on a capitation or other basis and in relation to patterns of access to those services: and where such advice or information is published. [37330]

Mr. Sackville: Health authorities are expected to enter into contracts with appropriate providers covering all accident and emergency attendances, regardless of the district of residence of the attenders.

This was explained in the document "Contracts for Health Services: Operational Principles" published in September 1989, copies of which are available in the Library.

Fertility Treatment

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many district health authorities place restrictions, other than age-related ones, on the availability of fertility treatment; [37309]

(2) if he will list the district health authorities which have an age-related policy regarding the purchase of fertility treatment, together with details of the age at which each of these denies treatment, specifying what kind of fertility treatment is being limited. [37308]

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration he has given to introducing guidelines to ensure consistency of provision of fertility treatment across district health authorities. [37310]

Mr. Sackville: Advice on the services available under the national health service for the treatment of infertility is contained in the effective health care bulletin on "The Management of Subfertility", August 1992, published for the NHS management executive by a consortium of Leeds and York Universities and the research unit of the Royal College of Physicians, copies of which are available in the Library.

Local health authorities are responsible for the provision of local health services, including the provision of infertility services. Decisions about the availability of these services must be left to individual health authorities as they are in the best position to determine priorities in the light of local needs and circumstances.

Residential Care Homes

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimate his Department has of the number of complaints made about care in (a) residential and (b) nursing homes during the last year; [37010]

(2) what estimate his Department has of the number of (a) residential and (b) nursing homes that are holders of BS5750, and of investors in people awards; [37012]

(3) what estimate his Department has made of the number of care assistants in residential homes that have nursing qualifications. [37015]

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate his Department has of the number of registered residential homes and the number of registered nursing homes. [37013]

Mr. Bowis: As at 31 March 1994 in England, there were 17,600 residential care homes for adults registered with local authorities and 5,100 nursing homes registered with health authorities. A number of homes may be registered for both residential and nursing care under the terms of the Registered Homes Act 1984.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate his Department has made of the average gross and net profits made by private residential and nursing homes. [37018]

Mr. Bowis: Information is not available centrally on which to base such an estimate.

Blood Stocks

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on progress on the development of a national computing system to control blood stocks. [37137]

Mr. Sackville: I understand that the National Blood Authority expects to go out to tender shortly for bids to supply a new computer system for the national blood service.

NHS Staff

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps health authorities are taking to safeguard health staff carrying out their duties. [37042]

Mr. Malone: Under the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974 and the Management of Health and Safety at Work Regulations 1992, it is a requirement that employers and staff agree appropriate methods locally for ensuring the safety of their working environment.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has (a) to introduce safety guidelines to all health authorities aimed at minimising risks to staff and (b) to introduce a legal obligation on all health service bodies to ensure that such staff in the course of their duties are protected and in the event of sustaining injuries or contracting diseases have legal safeguards against employer negligence. [37043]

Mr. Malone: The national health service executive has issued guidance to NHS employers on health and safety at work issues, EL(93)66 and occupational health service matters HSG(94)51, which underline NHS employers' statutory duties to promote a safe working environment for staff, and on security "The NHS Security Manual", 1995. Copies of these documents are available in the Library. In the event of staff sustaining an injury or contracting a disease at work, they may be eligible for benefits under the NHS injury benefits scheme.

Complaints Procedures

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for legislation to introduce new national health service complaints and disciplinary procedures for general practitioners; on what date would these procedures take effect; and if he will make a statement. [37046]

Mr. Malone: The Government intend to lay measures before Parliament to introduce new national health service complaints and disciplinary procedures for family health services practitioners from 1 April 1996.

Excess Winter Death Rates

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 20 January, Official Report, column 763, what methodology is used to calculate excess winter death rates; and if he will publish the figures for all deaths in the relevant periods in each year since 1989. [37311]

Mr. Sackville: Excess winter deaths are defined as the number of deaths in the four months from December to March less the average of the numbers in the preceding autumn—August to November—and the following summer—April to July.

The excess winter mortality index is the number of excess winter deaths expressed as a percentage of the average of the number of deaths in the autumn and winter periods.

The numbers of deaths in each winter period in England and Wales since 1989 are as follows:

1990–91: 214,259
1991–92: 209,509
1992–93: 198,092
1993–94: 208,425

Hospitals (Car Parking)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will require all district health authorities, as a condition of any contract entered into with providers of hospital services, to refrain from making any charge for car parking for those visiting patients or receiving out-patient treatment at their establishments. [37371]

Mr. Sackville: No.

Islington Social Services

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many local authority social service departments have made inquiries of his Department in respect of the index he holds of ex-employees of Islington who were referred to in the White report. [37099]

Mr. Bowis: Three.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he has taken to ensure local authority social service departments have access to the list he holds of names of former employees of Islington social services department named in the White report. [37098]

Mr. Bowis: The Department has undertaken to check against its consultancy service index any names submitted by a local authority of any employee of theirs in the child care field who is understood to be a former employee of Islington social services department.

Information Disclosure

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the matters which staff of his Department are precluded by employment conditions from discussing with their Member of Parliament. [37102]

Mr. Sackville: There is no list of matters which staff of the Department are precluded by their employment conditions from discussing with their Member of Parliament. They may not, however, without prior permission, disclose official information held by the Department or another Government Department unless it has already been made public, nor should they discuss matters in such a way as to bring into question their political impartiality.

Private Psychiatric Hospitals

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for health how many extra contractual referrals were made by health authorities to private psychiatric hospitals containing source accommodation in (a) 1994 and (b) the first six months of 1995; and how many were made in each case to hospitals run by Partnership in Care Ltd. [37025]

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

Home Visits (Security)

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will call for a report from NHS trusts on arrangements in place to improve the security of midwives, district nurses and other carrying drugs to relieve pain to patients in the community. [37100]

Mr. Malone: No. There is a continuing responsibility on national health service trust management to ensure that staff in the community can practice in safety. The NHS executive provides guidance to local managers who must devise local solutions in their own particular circumstances. The NHS security manual includes a suggested "check list" to be used by staff involved in home visiting.

Hospitals, Manchester

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent assessment his Department has made of the adequacy of hospital provision in South Manchester; when he expects to make any further assessment; and if he will make a statement. [37168]

Mr. Sackville: In November 1994, the North West regional health authority considered a report by Professor Herbert Duthie into the future shape of health care in south Manchester. Following amendments to the original proposals and a further period of public consultation, Manchester health authority has now agreed plans to improve health services in south Manchester, including those based in hospitals. In doing so, the health authority has accepted a number of demands put forward by South Manchester community health council and is currently working with South Manchester university hospitals NHS trust and others on the detailed arrangements.

NHS Staff Retirement

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total of NHS staff (a) retiring on pension and (b) taking early retirements on pension for each of the last 10 years; and what was the annual cost of early retirements in each of the last 10 years. [22739]

Mr. Sackville: [pursuant to his reply, 11 May, c. 569–70]: I regret that the information provided in the previous reply was incorrect. I have asked the chief executive of the NHS Pensions Agency, Mr. A. F. Cowan, to send the hon. Member a revised answer.

Letter from A. F. Cowan to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 13 October 1995:

"To ask the Secretary of State for Health, what is the total of NHS staff (a) retiring on pension and (b) taking early retirements on pension for each of the last 10 years; and what was the annual cost of early retirements in each of the last 10 years."

I regret that the information previously provided was incorrect.

Ill-health retirements over the last 4 years

1994–95: 9,030

Early retirements over the last 4 years

1991–92: 2,818

Full cost of early retirements for the Scheme, excluding ill-health retirements in each of the following financial years is:

1992–93: £137.291m

1994–95: £211.383m

ENVIRONMENT

Civil Servants (Allowances)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what rates of travel allowance may be claimed by civil servants in his Department when using their own vehicles for official business. [36367]

Sir Paul Beresford: The mileage allowances payable to civil servants using their own vehicles in my Department are:

Cars—Standard mileage rate

Engine capacity	Up to 1500cc	1501–2000cc	Over 2000cc
	Pence per mile
Up to 4000 miles (pa)	34	43	47
Over 4000 miles (pa)	19	23	30

A special rate of 23.8p per mile is payable where staff choose to use their own car, even when public transport is available.

Motor Cycles and Motor Cycle Combinations

Engine capacity	Up to 125cc	Over 125cc
Up to 4000 miles (pa) (comprehensive insurance)	16.2	25.3
Up to 4000 miles (pa) (third party insurance)	14.5	22.8
Over 4000 miles	6.2	9.0
Pedal cycles	6.2p per mile

Dr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the total cost of travel expenses claimed by civil servants using their own vehicles for official business in each of the last five years in his Department; and what would have been the saving in the last five years if the maximum rate that could be claimed was set at the lowest rate. [36368]

Sir Paul Beresford: The total cost of travel expenses claimed by staff using their own vehicles for official business was some £450,000 in 1993–94 and £640,000 in 1994–1995. Records are no longer available for earlier years and records showing the actual rate claimed are not kept. It is not possible, therefore to estimate the saving if the lower rate had not been claimed in each case.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many public interest immunity certificates his Department has issued in each year since 1986. [36692]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Secretary of State for the Environment has not produced a public interest immunity certificate in legal proceedings in any year since 1986.

Homelessness

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people are estimated to be homeless in each English county. [36730]

Mr. Clappison: Data on households which local authorities accept responsibility to secure accommodation for under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act are reported by local authorities districts on a quarterly basis. Total acceptances by the districts in each county for the quarter ending June 1995, the latest available are set out in the table.

Housing Investment Programme

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much each English county has received via district councils under the housing investment programme. [36731]

Mr. Clappison: English counties do not receive any resources via district councils under the housing investment programme.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much each local authority received per head through central Government grants in 1994–95. [36732]

Sir Paul Beresford: I have placed the information in the Library of the House.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the total standard spending assessment funding allocated to each English and Welsh county for this financial year. [36768]

Sir Paul Beresford: The requested information for English counties is available in the Library. The standard spending assessments for authorities in Wales are the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Wales.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will discuss with Staffordshire fire service the effects of the revised standard spending assessment calculation on fire service operations; and if he will make a statement. [37037]

Sir Paul Beresford: Shortly after the Budget, we will consult on our proposals for the local government finance Settlement for 1996–97. We are willing to discuss our proposals with any authority at that stage, so far as time permits.

Birds

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he will take to stop the decline in population of (a) song thrushes, (b) bullfinches, (c) lapwings, (d) reed buntings, (e) grey partridges, (f) tree sparrows and (g) turtle doves; and if he will make a statement. [36904]

Mr. Clappison: A number of steps are being taken by my Department, and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to help in the recovery of these species. These include:

Habitats beneficial to these species are included in the sites of special scientific interest and special protection areas classified under the EC birds directive.

Agri-environment schemes developed under EC regulations, stewardship and woodland grant schemes encourage farming practices which help conserve habitat important to farmland birds;

Targets for the conservation of habitats to be developed under the UK biodiversity action plan;

Funding research and development projects on the effect of farming techniques on farmland bird populations;

Sponsorship of Royal Society for the Protection of Birds projects to provide practical information on farmland birds for farmers, their advisors and others.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he can take to increase the number of breeding pairs of (a) corncrake and (b) stone curlew on the British Isles. [36942]

Mr. Clappison: Since 1991, the Government have been involved in schemes in Scotland to provide financial incentives to landowners and farmers to introduce farming methods which are more conducive to breeding corncrakes. The Government are also working with landowners to protect nesting stone curlews on arable land in Wessex and East Anglia.

The biodiversity steering group is expected to advise the Government on action plans for the corncrake and stone curlew to improve their conservation status. The steering group will report later this year.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what financial support he will make available to the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds towards its song thrush research project. [36941]

Mr. Clappison: Although we are not planning to give financial support to this project, my Department is currently negotiating with contractors on research to assess whether the use of herbicides and insecticides on agricultural land be contributing to the decline in the number of certain UK species, including song thrushes, and to provide information about the impact of pesticides on bird populations.

The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food also funds research related to farmland birds.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the rights of individual members of the public to make complaints to any of the appropriate ombudsman about services or projects funded through the private finance initiative through his Department. [36833]

Sir Paul Beresford: Members of the public have the same rights to make complaints of alleged maladministration to the relevant ombudsman concerning a Department of the Environment project which is privately financed as they would have had if the project had been publicly financed.

Outsourcing Contracts

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many outsourcing contracts were granted by his Department or agencies in each year since 1990, indicating the nature and value of each contract; and if any additional work was added and of what value to (a) Hoskyns/Cap Gemini Segeti, (b) AT and T Istel, (c) EDS, (d) Sema Group, (e) Datasolve, (f) ITN Net, (g) Andersen Consulting, (h) Centre File, (i) BIS, (j) Telecom Capita, (k) ICL, (l) Digital Equipment, (m) CFM, (n) Siemens, (o) Nixdorf, (p) CMG, and (q) Logica. [36965]

Sir Paul Beresford: This information is not held centrally by my Department and to collect it would involve a disproportionate cost.

Water

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he gave and what (a) statutory and (b) other bodies he consulted concerning the impact on personal health and hygiene and public health, particularly on children, the elderly and the sick, of his policy to encourage the use of water meters for domestic premises; and if he will place the relevant documents in the Library. [37369]

Mr. Clappison: The Department of the Environment and the Office of Water Services commissioned a survey on "The Social Impact of Water Metering" the report of which was published in August 1992. A copy of the report is in the Library. The views of a wide range of organisations were sought in the Department's consultation paper "Using Water Wisely" published in July 1992. A copy of this document and a list of the organisations which responded to it are available in the Library.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the approximate revenue cost per given annual volume of water lost by leakage from (a) high and (b) low pressure water mains at which it becomes non-economic to eliminate such leakage, using average or median national costs for producing potable public supplies. [37337]

Mr. Clappison: The economic cost of leakage varies significantly, not only between companies but also within each company's operating area. An average national figure would not be meaningful.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to annex B, paragraph 8 of his document "Water Conservation; Government Action", what were the methodology and assumptions used; and what is the range of cost/value calculations he has used in determining his public targets for reduction by water companies in leakage for their mains distribution system. [37370]

Mr. Clappison: The Government does not at present propose to set mandatory leakage targets. The water companies themselves are in the best position to judge costs and benefits of leakage control. It will be for the Director General of Water Services to negotiate demanding voluntary leakage targets which take account of varying local circumstances.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what (a) advice has been issued and (b) regulations have been made by her Majesty's Government concerning the desirability of fitting of cisterns in domestic premises for the continued supply of water for hygiene and hot water systems during interruptions in mains supply. [37274]

Mr. Clappison: Section 66 of the Water Industry Act 1991 allows water undertakers to require certain properties to be provided with a cistern. In the case of a relevant house, the cistern should be capable of holding sufficient water to provide an adequate supply for a period of 24 hours.

Except in an emergency, a water undertaker may cut off a supply of water to any premises for the purposes of carrying out any necessary works only after having served reasonable notice on the consumer. If any supply of water to those premises for domestic purposes is interrupted for more than 24 hours for the purposes of carrying out those works then the water undertaker has a duty to the consumer to provide an emergency supply of water within a reasonable distance of the premises.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the mean daily evaporation rates from free water surfaces of reservoirs and rivers over a given period for known locations in England and Wales for an appropriate period of summer drought. [37368]

Mr. Clappison: Standard hydrological textbooks provide the equations, and the Meterological Office reports the data, from which estimates of free water evaporation can be made.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment following his conclusions in paragraph 29 of his White Paper, "Water Conservation, Government Action", that reduction in the need for additional capital investment in supply of water leads to consequential savings of cost for consumers, what are (a) nationally and (b) on a local basis the appropriate percentages of water charges that have been devoted to such investment (i) by undertakings which were previously regional water authorities and (ii) other water companies. [37382]

Mr. Clappison: Between 1989–90 and 1994–95 the water industry's investment on water resource development was about 5 per cent. of total investment on the water service during this period. Water company capital programmes may be funded by a combination of debt or equity finance and retained profits. Information on the percentage of water charges that has been devoted by the various water companies to this resource development is not held centrally.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the names or descriptions of the relevant statutory or non-statutory bodies now fulfilling the duties, including reportage, of (a) the former National Water Council and (b) the former regional water authorities, as specified in sections 4 and 24 respectively of the Water Act 1973 before their replacement or repeal later. [37276]

Mr. Clappison: The Water Act 1983 provided for the dissolution of the National Water Council, which was primarily a consultative and advisory body on matters relating to national water policy, and for its functions to cease by order of the Secretary of State. Subsequently, water authorities established their own non-statutory body, the Water Authorities Association—now the Water Services Association—to promote their interests nationally and to inform consumers about their activities.

Following the reorganisation of the water industry in England and Wales in 1989, the functions of the former water authorities are now largely undertaken by a combination of the National Rivers Authority, the drinking water inspectorate and the successor water and sewerage companies themselves.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what support from public funds, by nature and amount, ceased to be available to the former regional water authorities in England and Wales in privatisation. [37270]

Mr. Clappison: Water companies ceased to have access to the national loans fund on privatisation. The amounts borrowed would have varied annually depending upon their capital requirements. They continue to be eligible to apply for Government grants and support from European funds for qualifying schemes.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will request the relevant bodies, agencies or organisations concerned with the conservation, purification and distribution of potable water supplies in England and Wales to prepare a report on national water resources, taking into account circumstances of the winter of 1976 and those of the summer of 1995; [37367]

(2) what is the general increase in demand for potable water supplies in periods of summer drought over average summer consumption (a) for each of the principal water regions and (b) nationally; and what assessment he has made of the purposes to which that extra demand is put. [37365]

Mr. Clappison: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment announced on 1 September that the Department will be conducting a review of all aspects of legislation, planning, organisation and preparation for droughts. This will include consideration of changes in patterns of demand for water which have happened or which seem likely, and will involve all the interests concerned.

Sewers (Rodent Infestation)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what statutory powers he exercises over suppliers of water disposal services in respect of levels of rodent infestation in sewers; where standards relating to such infestation are publicised; and what powers elected authorities or district health authorities possess to inspect and enforce levels of infestation. [37268]

Mr. Clappison: There is no specific duty on water and sewerage companies in relation to the control of rats in sewers. However, all sewerage undertakers have programmes to control and reduce the number of rats in their systems. Local authorities have a long-standing duty to keep themselves informed about the sufficiency of drainage systems in their area to ensure that they do not pose a threat to public health. Failure to control rat infestations on property could be enforceable by the local authority environmental health officer under part III of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, if it is judged to be a statutory nuisance.

Mobile Fresh Water Tanks

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what statutory or other requirements have been made by Her Majesty's Government to require water companies to have available a given number of mobile fresh water tanks, wheeled or otherwise, related to the numbers of population served; and what national arrangement it has made for supplying of such equipment in emergencies. [37281]

Mr. Clappison: Water companies have a duty under the Security Measures (Water and Sewerage Undertakers) Direction 1989 to have plans in place to ensure the provision of essential water supplies at all times. The direction also requires that the water companies shall provide such facilities, including works, plant and equipment, as will secure the implementation of these plans, which should be mutually complimentary and co-ordinated between the companies.

Urban Renewal Grants

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will extend the urban renewal grant repayment conditions in the case of a dwelling where the grant recipient dies within the statutory three years and the dwelling is then sold by a new owner. [37113]

Sir Paul Beresford: We propose to extend the house renovation grant repayment conditions to cover such cases at the next suitable legislative opportunity.

Fire Authorities (Coastline Factor)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence he has that fire authorities with a coastline incur extra costs from the coastline factor. [37036]

Sir Paul Beresford: The measure of coastline was introduced into the fire SSA formula in 1995–96 to reflect additional costs that authorities with coastline face compared with inland authorities. Authorities situated on the coast have less scope than inland authorities for drawing reinforcements from neighbouring brigades and therefore need greater self-sufficiency to provide the same standard of service as other local authorities.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from fire services adversely affected by the inclusion of the coastline indicator in the standard spending assessment calculation for fire services. [37035]

Sir Paul Beresford: During consultation on the 1995–96 local government finance settlement, the Secretary of State for the Environment received two representations from local authorities concerning the use of a coastline factor in the fire standard spending assessment. Other representations have been received subsequently.

Urban Development Areas

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer concerning employment in urban development areas, Official Report, 18 July, column 1427-28, how many of the 63,025 jobs quoted for the London docklands area existed in the same, or equivalent form outside that area prior to the re-location of the enterprises or services concerned.

Sir Paul Beresford: The London Docklands development corporation does not hold records which enable an analysis of gross jobs in the way requested.

Canary Wharf

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much has been contributed (a) item by item (b) in toto by public funds to the infrastructure serving the complex of the Canary wharf project; and what is this figure as a proportion of the estimated current freehold value of the property, or the highest public offer extant, together with the purchase price of the site from the Port of London Authority and its selling price to the first Canary Wharf Company. [37332]

Sir Paul Beresford: Public spending on infrastructure serving the Canary wharf area totals £44.5 million and is broken down as follows:

	£ million
West Ferry Road Phase 1 Heron Quays Roundabout	5.3
Canary Wharf Eastern Access Road	22.3
West Ferry Road Electricity sub-station and National Grid Enhancement	16.9

Of course, all infrastructure expenditure by the London Docklands development corporation brings regeneration benefits to the economy and attractiveness of the docklands overall. Isolating separate areas of expenditure and attributing it to particular projects distorts its significance and broader benefits.

No valuation of the current freehold value of the Canary wharf complex is available.

The LDDC acquired land within the Canary wharf site from the Port of London Authority as part of a package deal—including water areas—and no separate breakdown of the land value is available. Of the 72 acre site purchased by Olympia and York, about 22 acres of land and 21 acres of water were in LDDC's ownership and these were sold for £8 million cash plus £12 million towards additional infrastructure.

Countryside Commission

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much was spent on advertising the post of chairman of the Countryside Commission; what was the cost of employing St. James Management Recruitment; what other costs were involved in making the appointment; and if Mr. Simmonds applied for the post. [37386]

Mr. Clappison: The total cost of employing St. James's Management Recruitment was some £31,000, of which some £8,000 represented advertising costs. The other costs involved in making the appointment relate to the time spent on the recruitment process by Ministers and officials in the Department, for which figures are not available. Mr. Simmonds did not apply but was approached by St. James's.

Biodiversity Convention

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what statutory, or other, consultations are being initiated by Her Majesty's Government with statutory and other bodies in fulfilment of obligations arising from (a) the biodiversity convention and (b) legislation of the European Community consequent on the biodiversity convention. [37275]

Mr. Clappison: The Government have consulted widely in the development of the UK biodiversity action plan which was produced in accordance with article 6 of the biodiversity convention. The publication of the plan in January 1994 followed a consultation involving some 300 organisations, including a two-day seminar in May 1993. In June 1995, a biodiversity steering group was established to advise Government on taking forward the plan. The group includes representatives from central and local government, the statutory conservation agencies, industry, the national collections and academia, landowners and land managers and the voluntary conservation bodies. It will publish a report in December and a Government response is planned early in the new year. Copies of both documents will be placed in the Library.

The UK delegation to the first meeting of the conference of the Parties to the Biodiversity Convention held consultation meetings with interested parties both before and during the meeting in Nassau last year. This approach is being repeated in preparation for the second conference next month in Jakarta.

The Government issued a public consultation paper in October 1993 about the legal transposition of the EU habitats directive. The Conservation (Natural Habitats & C.) Regulations 1994, approved by Parliament in October 1994, were prepared in the light of the consultation. In March this year, the Government consulted interested parties on a list of possible special areas of conservation under the directive. Similar consultation takes place before the classification of special protection areas under the birds directive.

Basking Sharks

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to include basking sharks on the list of endangered species; and if he will make a statement. [37038]

Mr. Clappison: The basking shark has been considered for protection under the Wildlife Countryside Act 1981 on two previous occasions but there was insufficient evidence to support protection.

The Joint Nature Conservation Committee, the Government's statutory conservation adviser, is currently considering which species should be recommended for protection under the Wildlife and Countryside Act as part of the third quinquennial review. The case for the basking shark is being reviewed, but it is too early to say whether the evidence will result in the species being protected.

Water Companies (Share Value)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the (a) total and (b) percentage increase in the capital value of those publicly owned assets, now privatised, on the basis of share capital at the time of issue and valuation on total share value at a given date during 1995. [37366]

Mr. Clappison: Information on the market capitalisation at floatation of the 10 water holding companies in England and Wales, is contained in the National Audit Office report "Department of the Environment: Sale of the Water Authorities in England and Wales", a copy of which is in the Library. Current share values vary daily according to fluctuations in the stock market and this information is not held by my Department.

Industrial Estates

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many industrial estates are owned by local authorities; and what is the total value of such estates. [37132]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Department's records show that between 260 and 290 local authorities have an interest in industrial estates and that the total value of these industrial estates is in the region of £750 million to £1,000 million.

City of London Common Council

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding the abolition of the Alderman's veto and extension of the franchise in the City of London; and if he will make a statement. [37112]

Sir Paul Beresford: We have received one such representation. We have no plans to reform the arrangements for election to the common council.

Commercial Leases (Rent Reviews)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress is being made in the development and publication of a code of practice in relation to rent reviews in commercial leases. [37120]

Mr. Clappison: The commercial property industry and professional bodies are now completing their discussions on the code, and plan to publish it before the end of the year.

Rateable Values

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the average change in rateable values between 1990 and 1995 for (a) commercial and (b) industrial properties for each region in England. [37136]

Sir Paul Beresford: The latest information I have is as follows:

Percentage

Region	Shops	Offices	Warehouses	Factories	Other
Northern	+28	+48	+41	+26	+18
Yorkshire and Humberside	+26	+55	+35	+24	+21
East Midlands	+24	+34	+21	+18	+20
East Anglia	+16	+14	+14	+4	+18
Inner London	−16	−58	−12	−10	−11
Outer London	+10	−4	+7	−2	+14
Rest of South East	+8	−12	+3	−3	+12
South West	+12	+13	+14	+6	+17
West Midlands	+32	+55	+49	+35	+28
North West	+35	+49	+44	+29	+22

Fair Rents

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he proposes to introduce (a) amending legislation, (b) revised guidance to rent officers and rent assessment committees or (c) any other action to reverse the effect of the Court of Appeal judgment on the use of comparables in setting fair rents in the case of Spath Holme Ltd. v. Greater Manchester and Lancashire Rent Assessment Committee. [37488]

Mr. Clappison: The statutory basis on which fair rents are determined is set out in section 70 of the Rent Act 1977, which consolidated the Rent Act 1968. In essence, a fair rent is what a landlord could achieve in a market in which the supply of, and demand for, accommodation are in balance—that is, in the absence of scarcity. This has been the understanding since fair rents were introduced, and the judgment of the Court of Appeal does nothing to change that. We therefore do not propose to legislate to change the current statutory basis.

The Secretary of State does not issue guidance to rent officers and rent assessment committees to seek to influence them in the exercise of their independent statutory jurisdiction, and it would be wrong to do so.

Employment Trends (Effect on Mortgage)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will initiate studies concerning the impact of the spread of employment by short-term contract instead of permanent contracts of employment, on the ability of persons and families to obtain mortgages for the purchase of homes. [37334]

Mr. Clappison: My Department has no current proposals for studies concerned specifically with the impact of labour market changes on the mortgage/housing market. However, employment trends figure prominently in many housing research areas and in our discussions with mortgage lenders.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Heritage Funds

2. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans she has to encourage the distribution of heritage funds to those areas which receive none at present. [35899]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I want to see the widest possible distribution of heritage funds, whether for grant in aid or the proceeds of the national lottery. Already the lottery has made possible a total of 1,405 grant awards the length and breadth of the United Kingdom, with a total value of over £543 million.

Sport in Schools

12. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what responses she has received about the Prime Minister's proposals for sport in schools. [35909]

Mr. Sproat: The Prime Minister, the Secretary of State and I have received 23 letters from hon. Members and 252 from members of the public commenting on aspects of the policy statement "Sport: Raising the Game." Some 68,000 copies of the statement have now been distributed, many in direct response to requests from members of the public. The response has been overwhelmingly positive and we welcome any ideas that emanate as a result of publication of the statement.

Public Library Service

13. Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what recent representations she has received on the public library service. [35910]

Mr. Sproat: We have received representations on both the Aslib report, which is a key element in the public library review, and the KPMG/Capital Planning Information report on the scope for contracting out in public libraries. My right hon. Friend plans to make a further statement to Parliament by the end of the year.

Television Coverage of Sport

14. Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how she intends to ensure that the country's great sporting events are shown live on terrestial television. [35911]

Mr. Sproat: Sports rights holders should be free to dispose of their broadcasting rights in the way they choose. Rights owners should be allowed to judge the balance between the level of income from broadcasting rights, the size of the television audience, the amount and type of coverage and the impact on potential spectators and supporters.

Piers

15. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what priority is given by her Department to the maintenance and development of piers in seaside areas; and if she will make a statement. [35912]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Seaside resorts play a significant role in the tourism market—accounting for nearly 50 per cent. of domestic tourist spend on all holidays in this country—and piers are an important feature of the traditional seaside resort. My Department has listed some 29 piers in England, including Southend pier in my hon. Friend's constituency.

National Lottery

16. Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will implement the recommendations of the Rowntree report on "The Impact of the National Lottery". [35913]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Rowntree report was one contribution to a lively debate. The Government are keeping all aspects of the national lottery under review.

21. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what percentage of sales of national lottery tickets is made in the north-west; and what percentage of the distributed proceeds to date has been made in the north-west. [35919]

Mrs. Bottomley: A report is placed in the Library of the House each month which includes a breakdown of awards made by region. Some 100 projects in the north-west region have so far been awarded almost £18 million. I shall ask the Director General of the National Lottery to write to you about the sale of national lottery tickets.

23. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proposals there are to change the competition arrangements and the good causes allocation of the national lottery. [35921]

Mrs. Bottomley: The lottery is making a tremendous contribution to the good causes agreed by Parliament. I have no plans to propose changes to these arrangements.

25. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list all recipients of lottery funding over 50,000. [35923]

Mr. Sproat: A report on the distribution of national lottery proceeds is placed in the Library of the House each month which lists awards made. To date, 620 of 1,405 awards made have been for more than £50,000.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when further details will be available regarding the financing of sport from national lottery funds. [35918]

Mr. Sproat: The Sports Council will announce the next set of awards in the first week of November.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will take steps to arrange that Camelot be required to give details of national lottery ticket sales at each outlet; and if she will make a statement. [36416]

Mr. Sproat: This is an operational matter for Camelot Group plc. I have therefore asked the Director General of the National Lottery, who is responsible for regulating the operation of the lottery, to write to my hon. Friend, placing copies of his response in the Library of the House.

17. Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans she has to provide additional funding for public sports facilities. [35915]

Mr. Sproat: It is for local authorities and other suppliers of public sports facilities to determine their level of expenditure on sporting provision, in the light of their own priorities. The Department recognises the important role that both local authorities and the other suppliers of public sports facilities play in this area and the Sports Council will continue to work closely with them, as appropriate, in pursuing its objectives.

Royal Opera House

18. Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will make a statement about the future capital funding of the royal opera house. [35916]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The royal opera house is looking to a number of sources of funding for the new development project. These include major donations as well as the national lottery.

Film Industry

19. Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what measures her Department is taking to attract film makers to make films in Britain. [35917]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My Department funds the British Film Commission, which actively markets to overseas producers, the United Kingdom's considerable wealth and diversity of locations, facilities and industry expertise.

28. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations she has received on the Government's review of the film industry. [35926]

Mrs. Bottomley: Since publication of the Government's policy paper on the British film industry in June, I have received seven representations from various members of the British film industry. On the whole these have given a very positive response to the paper, generally welcoming the various initiatives we announced.

Music Teaching

22. Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations she has had from major orchestras concerning teaching of music to children [35920]

Mr. Sproat: I have had no such representations.

Media Ownership

26. Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what she is doing to reduce the concentration of national media in the hands of a small number of owners. [35924]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government's proposals for the future regulation of media ownership are set out in its policy document, Cm 2872, published in May 1995. These aim to preserve the diversity of the broadcast and press media, while introducing greater flexibility in ownership to reflect the needs and aspirations of the industry.

British Academy for Sports

27. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what discussions she has held so far concerning the location of the new British Academy for Sports. [35925]

Mr. Sproat: None. The GB Sports Council is taking this initiative forward. The council is at present developing proposals for the possible structure and content of the British Academy of Sport and, following consultation this autumn, the sports councils across the UK will, by 31 March 1996, be open to consider bids to the national lottery to establish the academy.

Football Transfer Fees

29. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when she last met officials of the Football Association to discuss the issue of transfer fees. [35927]

Mr. Sproat: Both my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I have regular meetings with all the football bodies to discuss various issues of significance to the sport.

Violence on Television

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what steps she is taking to curb violence on television. [35922]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Broadcasters in the UK are independent of Government but have clear responsibilities with regard to programme content. Both the BBC and ITC undertook to monitor violence on television as a result of meetings with my predecessor last year. I have now received the findings of the study, and I am pleased to note that the amount of television violence broadcast on the terrestrial channels in the UK is down. I will be meeting with the chairman of both the ITC and BBC to discuss how the findings of the study can be taken forward. However, it will remain the duty of the broadcasting regulatory bodies to continue to monitor the amount of violence broadcast on television.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will make a statement about the rights of individual members of the public to make complaints to any of the appropriate ombudsman about services or projects funded through the private finance initiative in her Department. [36829]

Mr. Sproat: The parliamentary ombudsman has, subject to the conditions of the Parliamentary Commissioner Act 1967, jurisdiction to investigate complaints from members of the public about the way they have been treated by Government Departments, other public sector bodies engaged in the work of central Government, and those acting on their behalf. The ombudsman can investigate complaints about projects or services funded through the private finance initiative if they are carried out by or on behalf of a Department or public body within his jurisdiction, that is those bodies which are listed in schedule 2 to the 1967 Act.

The Department itself has no capital projects so does not engage directly in the private finance initiative. However, its two agencies, the Royal Parks agency and the Historic Royal Palaces agency, have a substantial number of private finance initiative projects, for activities ranging form car park systems to restaurant refurbishment. Both agencies are under the jurisdiction of the parliamentary ombudsman and so members of the public are able to pursue complaints about the agencies' services or projects funded by the private finance initiative through this avenue.

The Department is also contributing to the new Royal Armouries museum in Leeds, a private finance initiative scheme due to open in spring 1996. This is being financed in partnership with a private company, Royal Armouries (International) plc. The Royal Armouries does not come under the jurisdiction of the parliamentary ombudsman, so members of the public are unable to make complaints through this avenue. However, the Royal Armouries will have in place at the new museum a charter standard statement which will explain to members of the public how they can complain to the Master of the Armouries if they are dissatisfied with the museum related services they receive.

Travel Allowances

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what rates of travel allowance may be claimed by civil servants in her Department when using their own vehicles for official business. [36361]

Mr. Sproat: Mileage allowance rates in the Department of National Heritage with effect from 1 October 1995 are as follows:

Car Standard Rate

	Up to 1500cc	1501-2000cc	Over 2000cc
Up to 4,000 miles	34p	43p	47p
Over 4,000 miles	19p	23p	31p
Public Transport Rate	23p	—	—
Passenger supplement	First passenger	2p per mile	—
	Others	1p per mile	—
	Equipment supplement	3p per mile	—

Motor Cycles

	Up to 125cc	Over 125cc
Up to 4,000 miles
Third party insurance	14.6p	22.1p
Comprehensive insurance	16.2p	25.3p
Over 4,000 miles	6.1p	9.0p
Bicycles
Mileage allowance	6p	—

Dr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list the total cost of travel expenses claimed by civil servants using their own vehicles for official business in each of the last five years in her Department; and what would have been the saving in the last year if the maximum rate that could be claimed was set at the lowest rate. [36362]

Mr. Sproat: My Department was created only in April 1992.

The available figures for standard rate motor mileage claims in my Department are as follows

1993–94: £82,273

For the period 13 April 1992 to 31 March 1993 the information is not available in the format requested.

The saving in the last year if the maximum rate that could be claimed was set at the lowest rate—until 1 October 1995—of 35.7p per mile would be £1,985.36.

Eurotica Satellite Service

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will take steps to prescribe the TV Eurotica Satellite Service under the terms of section 177 of the Broadcasting Act 1990. [36444]

Mr. Sproat: I understand that my hon. Friend's question relates to TV Erotica. There is, however, a similarly named satellite service called Eurotica. The Independent Television Commission has not, under section 176 of the Broadcasting Act 1990, notified us that the satellite service Eurotica is unacceptable. The Secretary of State has however, been notified of the unacceptability of a similar service, TV Erotica, and the ITC has recently confirmed that that service has repeatedly been broadcasting unacceptable material. Discussions with the European Commission and Sweden, with the objective of reaching an amicable settlement, are in train, and we shall shortly be considering what further action to take.

Outsourcing Contracts

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many outsourcing contracts were granted by her Department or agencies in each year since 1990, indicating the nature and value of each contract; and if any additional work was added and of what value to (a) Hoskyns/Cap Gemini Segeti, (b) AT and T Istel, (c) EDS, (d) Sema Group, (e) Datasolve, (f) ITN Net, (g) Andersen Consulting (h) Centre File, (j) Telecom Capita, (k) ICL, (l) Digital Equipment, (m) CFM, (n) Seimens, (o) Nixdorf, (p) CMG and (q) Logica. [36960]

Mr. Sproat: My Department was established on 13 April 1992. IT service provision has been outsourced in line with the policy set out in the White Paper on "Competing for Quality". Sema Group won the contract through competitive tender. The value of the contract is of the order of £1 million per annum. Neither of my Department's two agencies has outsourced any contracts to the companies mentioned in the questioned.

Tourism

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how much his Department allocates for tourism promotion in each tourist board area. [36718]

Mr. Sproat: The Department of National Heritage sponsors the English tourist board which makes grants to the regional tourist boards in England for the operation of national programmes. The formula for funding RTBs is agreed between the ETB and the RTBs and is based on scale, need and performance. The regions can also apply for additional funding for specific projects from a tourism development fund.

In 1994–95 the total funding made available to the regional tourist boards, including their allocation from the TDF, was as follows:

Cumbria	473,000
East Anglia	618,000
East Midlands	456,000
Heart of England	537,000
London	754,000
Northumbria	394,000
North West	558,000
South East England	522,000
Southern	1,106,000
West Country	615,000
Yorkshire and Humberside	490,000
Total	6,523,000

NORTHERN IRELAND

Former Mental Hospital Patients

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the number of killings by discharged mental hospital patients with personality disorders; what assessment he has made of the scope of the current laws in (a) Northern Ireland and (b) Great Britain to prevent such killings; and what proposals he has for change. [36716]

Mr. Moss: I am aware of one such case in Northern Ireland, the circumstances of which are currently the subject of an independent review.

The operation of the powers of detention under the Mental Health (Northern Ireland) Order 1986, and of the Mental Health Act 1983, is not significantly different in practice. Neither the Act nor the Order is intended to allow the detention in hospital of someone whose condition is not amenable to treatment. Under the Northern Ireland Order, personality disorder alone is not sufficient grounds for detention for treatment, but a person may be detained where he or she is also suffering from mental illness. In England and Wales, a patient with a psychopathic or personality disorder may only be detained under the 1983 Act where treatment is likely to alleviate or prevent a deterioration of his condition.

I have no proposals for change to the Northern Ireland mental health legislation, but the need for change is kept under regular review. In addition, the Mental Health Commission for Northern Ireland has a statutory duty to monitor the operation of the order.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the rights of individual members of the public to make complaints to any of the appropriate ombudsmen about services or projects funded through the private finance initiative in his Department. [36828]

Sir John Wheeler: The Northern Ireland ombudsman has, subject to the conditions of the Parliamentary Commissioner Act (Northern Ireland) 1969 and the Commissioner for Complaints Act (Northern Ireland) 1969, jurisdiction to investigate complaints from members of the public about the way they have been treated by Government Departments, other public sector bodies engaged in the work of central government, and those acting on their behalf. The ombudsman can investigate complaints about projects or services funded through the private finance initiative if they are carried out by, or on behalf, of a Department or public body within his jurisdiction, that is those bodies which are listed in schedules 1 and 2 respectively, to the above Acts.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what subsidies were paid out for environmentally sensitive areas in Northern Ireland in (a) 1992–93, (b) 1993–94, (c) 1994–5 and (d) 1995–6; and how many individuals were recipients of these payments in these years. [37129]

Mr. Ancram: The expenditure on ESAs for the years 1992–93 to 1995–96 and the number of persons receiving payment is as follows:

Year	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96[1]
Expenditure (£'000s)	465	586	527	697
Claimants	1,062	1,059	1,050	526

[1] To 6 October 1995

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what area, in hectares and percentage terms, of environmentally sensitive areas in Northern Ireland is made up of productive, or potentially productive, agricultural land. [37128]

Mr. Ancram: The total land area of the five areas designated as environmentally sensitive areas in Northern Ireland is 247,000 hectares. Of this, 221,800 hectares—89 per cent.—is productive agricultural land.

Queen's University, Belfast

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the amount of financial support Her Majesty's Government distribute to Queen's university, Belfast and the amount of additional financial support Queen's university receives from the European Union. [37209]

Mr. Ancram: In the 1993–94 academic year, the latest year for which figures are available, the Queen's university of Belfast received financial support amounting to £55.8 million directly from central Government sources and additional support amounting to £6.4 million from the European Union.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his policy in respect of playing the national anthem at graduation ceremonies at Queen's university, Belfast. [37361]

Mr. Ancram: The Queen's university, as with all other universities in the United Kingdom, is an autonomous and independent body, and as such is responsible for its own internal affairs, practices and procedures. The playing of the national anthem at graduation ceremonies is not a matter of Government policy; it is entirely for the university authorities to determine.

Criminal Injuries Compensation

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many military service personnel have received awards following injuries received in Northern Ireland from the Northern Ireland criminal injuries compensation scheme; how many cases have been reviewed after an award has been made; and how many awards were increased as a result of review. [37097]

Sir John Wheeler: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Compensation Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Denis Stanley. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D. A. Stanley to Mr. Jeff Rooker, dated 16 October 1995:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to reply, on behalf of the Compensation Agency, to your recent Question regarding the number of military service personnel who have received compensation under the Northern Ireland criminal injury compensation scheme.

Compensation is paid under the Criminal Injuries (Compensation) (Northern Ireland) Order 1988, which provides a right to compensation for injury or death caused by violent (including terrorist) offences in Northern Ireland. This scheme applies equally to civilians and members of the security forces.

The number of claims resulting in payment to military service personnel in each year since 1989–90 is set out in the table below. (Military service personnel has been taken to include members of the regular Army and both full-time and part-time members of the UDR/R Irish.)

Awards of Compensation to Military Service Personnel

Financial Year	Number of awards
1989–90	336
1990–91	375
1991–92	146
1992–93	382
1993–94	307

Information about the number of awards prior to 1989–90 is not available.

It is not possible under the legislation to re-open cases or increase amounts once awards have formally been settled and the appeal period passed or where, in contested cases, awards are made by the Courts. Neither the Courts nor the Secretary of State can subsequently reinstate cases.

You may also wish to know that most applicants obtain the services of solicitors and will therefore have received legal advice before accepting offers of compensation in full and final settlement of their claims. Army Legal Services provide military personnel with advice at no cost to the individual and, in cases where outside solicitors are engaged, the Agency pays the reasonable costs and expenses incurred in making out and verifying successful claims, which normally includes the costs of such solicitors.

I trust this explains the position fully.

Proposed Legislation (Consultation)

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which external bodies, bodies and individuals have been consulted to date in the drafting process of (a) the proposed Race Relations Order and (b) the proposed Contracting Out and Deregulation Order (Northern Ireland) 1995. [37390]

Mr. Ancram: We have not yet reached the drafting process stage in relation to the proposed Race Relations Order and accordingly no formal consultation has taken place.

In advance of publication of the proposals for a Deregulation and Contracting Out (Northern Ireland) Order, an extensive number of bodies and individuals was consulted. On publication of the proposals, a number of additional bodies are individuals received copies. A full list of consultees has been placed in the Library.

Bangor-Belfast Road

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans are under consideration for the Bangor to Belfast road in relation to noise abatement, traffic calming and safety; and what measures are (a) already decided or (b) in progress. [37165]

Mr. Moss: Although there are no plans under consideration for this route in relation to noise abatement, a number of traffic management and road safety measure are proposed. These measures include, in particular, the introduction of new technology which will enable traffic signals along the route to be controlled remotely so that signal settings can be optimised to cater for varying traffic flows, and the provision of right turning lanes at the busiest junctions along the route. It is planned to start work on most of the proposals in the next financial year, subject to the availability of the necessary finance.

Public Works Loan Board

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of whether the transfer of responsibilities for local authority lending from his Department to the Public Works Loan Board would (a) result in savings to public funds and (b) provide a more effective service. [37197]

Sir John Wheeler: Loans to local authorities in Northern Ireland are made from the Northern Ireland Consolidated Fund by the Department of Finance and Personnel on similar terms to those which are extended to local authorities in Great Britain through the Public Works Loans Board. The administrative charges to local authorities in Northern Ireland are in most cases the same as those levied in Great Britain. In a minority of cases the Northern Ireland charges are less.

It is appropriate that the scheme continues to be administered locally along with other transferred matters.

Electoral Registration

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people gave their nationality as (a) British and (b) Irish on the electoral registration form in 1994–95; and what other significant numbers and nationalities were otherwise specified. [37213]

Mr. Ancram: Information about nationality included on the 1994–95 electoral registration forms in Northern Ireland was not recorded centrally as there is no legal requirement to record statistics on nationality.

Information is available, however, on the nationality of those EU nationals who registered separately to vote in the 1994 European election. The nationalities were as follows:

	Number
Belgium	1
Denmark	7
France	54
Germany	51
Greece	1
Italy	5
Netherlands	38
Portugal	4
Spain	8
Total	169

Abandoned Vehicles

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will review Northern Ireland planning legislation to ensure that the powers available to him regarding the unauthorised dumping of wrecked or abandoned vehicles are (a) as strong as those in Great Britain and (b) sufficient to protect the environment properly. [37248]

Mr. Moss: District councils in Northern Ireland have the power to remove or dispose of abandoned vehicles and to initiate proceedings under the Pollution Control and Local Government (Northern Ireland) Order 1978. This legislation is broadly similar to that obtaining in Great Britain. Planning legislation would not be an appropriate code to deal with abandoned vehicles.

Nursery Education

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consideration was given to extending he under-fives initiative to Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [37315]

Mr. Ancram: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) on 11 July, Official Report, columns 519–20.

Civil Service Transfers

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy by mutual agreement specifically to permit transfers of staff between the Northern Ireland civil service and the home civil service on marriage. [37392]

Sir John Wheeler: The Northern Ireland civil service and the home civil service are separate civil services and there are no formal rights of transfer between them. It is the policy of both services, however, to seek to facilitate inter-service transfers on compassionate grounds, whenever possible, and the criteria for compassionate transfers include those who need to move to be with their spouse.

Joyriding

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many people have been charged with offences relating to (a) joyriding and (b) other traffic offences since 1 September 1994; [37040]

(2) how many people have been charged with offences relating to (a) joyriding and (b) other traffic offences in the nine months before 1 September 1994. [37041]

Sir John Wheeler: Figures for the number of persons charged are not available. The number of persons proceeded against at magistrates courts was as follows:

	1 Dec 1993–31 August 1994	1 Sept 1994–31 May 1995
Number proceeded against for unauthorised taking of a motor vehicle[1]	420	408
Number proceeded against for other motoring offences[2]	16,815	17,375

Notes:
[1] "Joyriding" is taken to be the offence of 'unauthorised taking of a motor vehicle'.
[2] 'Other traffic offences' is taken to mean summary motoring offences and to exclude indictable offences such as "reckless driving causing death/grievous bodily injury".

Police Staff

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many people are employed in the Police Authority of Northern Ireland departments in respect of (a) information technology, (b) buildings and (c) transport; and what is the cost of running these departments annually; [37059]

(2) how many people are employed in the Royal Ulster Constabulary departments in respect of (a) information technology, (b) buildings and (c) transport; and what is the cost of running these departments annually. [37058]

Sir John Wheeler: The information is as follows:

Police authority	Number of staff	Staff costs (estimate 1995–96) £
Information Technology[1]	68	1,931,500
Buildings	28	650,850
Transport	197	3,620,650
RUC
Information Technology[1]	68	1,931,500
Buildings	11	443,040
Transport	102	3,154,840

[1] Information as to annual running costs of these departments, other than staff pay and related costs, is not available. The information technology department operates on a joint basis.

Farming and Forestry (Accidents)

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many recorded accidents in the farming and forestry industry have occurred in each of the last three years; and how many have been fatal. [37135]

Mr. Ancram: During the calender years 1992, 1993 and 1994 there were 64, 64 and 70 accidents respectively reported to Department of Agriculture's health and safety inspectorate.

There were six fatalities in 1992, 10 in 1993 and 14 in 1994.

Interest Rates

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy to ensure that interest rates for local authority lending are issued in advance. [37199]

Sir John wheeler: Interest Rates are fixed on a weekly basis by the Treasury and are promulgated by the Department of Finance and Personnel and the Public Works Loans Board at the same time. They take effect from their time of issue. It is not possible to give advance notice of interest rate changes since these are subject to market volatility.

Fair Employment

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland in which perceived religious category the fair employment monitoring process of the Northern Ireland civil service places those applicants or employees who have attended integrated secondary schools. [37391]

Sir John Wheeler: The Northern Ireland civil service relies on the primary school attended for the longest period of time, "The First Schools Method", as its principal method of making a determination of the perceived religious category of an applicant or employee. Where use of the "Schools List" fails to produce a determination of Protestant or Roman Catholic the service then relies on information specified under the "Residuary Method" in the Fair Employment (Monitoring) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1989 to make a determination, insofar as this is possible. Under the "Schools List" maintained by the Fair Employment Commission for the purposes of the regulations, integrated schools, whether primary or secondary, are among the schools which are unclassified for religious monitoring purposes.

Small Loans

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Department of Finance and Personnel expects to introduce a rule similar to the PWLB circular 105 allowing a refinancing of small loans. [37198]

Sir John Wheeler: The Department of Finance and Personnel, having consulted with the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland, the approving authority for loans to local government in Northern Ireland, intends to apply the terms of PWLB circular 105 as they relate to refinancing of small loans, from 1 November.

Prevention of Terrorism Legislation

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many times the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 and the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1991 have been invoked in Northern Ireland. [37214]

Sir John Wheeler: Statistics on the operation in Northern Ireland in 1995 of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1991 and the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 are available in the Library, but I am sending the hon. Member the information he seeks.

House Building

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will assess the special circumstances pertaining in the current year that have affected the cost of house building and construction in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement on the measures he intends now to take to deal with the cost and budgetary consequences within this financial year. [37389]

Mr. Moss: Tender prices for public sector housing contracts have shown a sharp increase in the past year and the reasons for this are being examined. The budgetary consequences will be considered in the context of in year monitoring of the amount allocated to the Northern Ireland public expenditure block.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many individuals applied to join the Royal Ulster Constabulary in its most recent round of recruitment; and of these how many were (a) women and (b) Catholics. [37060]

Sir John Wheeler: The most recent recruitment competition was advertised in March/April of this year.

The total number of applicants was 2,058 of whom 811, or 40 per cent. of applicants, were female and 467, or 23 per cent. of applicants, were perceived to be from the Roman Catholic community.

Race Relations Legislation

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what considerations underlay the decision to bring race relations law into operation in Northern Ireland by means of an Order in Council; what consideration was given to amending the existing Great Britain legislation to include Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [37212]

Mr. Ancram: The consultative document published in December 1992 considered a number of ways in which race relations legislation could be enacted in Northern Ireland. Having considered the responses, it was decided that the commitment to the early introduction of race legislation would be best achieved by way of a separate race relations Order in Council.

The extension of the Race Relations Act 1976 was not included as an option for legislation on the grounds that it would not be appropriate in the context of the particular circumstances and scale of race relations issues in Northern Ireland.

Country Parks

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will introduce an environmental sensitivity forum to advise on the future arrangements for, and operation of, Crawfordsburn and Redburn country parks. [37156]

Mr. Moss: The Council for Nature Conservation and the Countryside advises my Department on the management of country parks. I am not clear as to what the hon. Member has in mind regarding an environmental sensitivity forum and perhaps he would write to me with further details.

Life Sentence Prisoners

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the current life sentence prisoners who have served more than 14 years in prison, indicating whether they are loyalist or republican prisoners. [37208]

Sir John Wheeler: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Prisons Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Alan Shannon. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. D. Shannon to Rev. Ian Paisley, dated 16 October 1995:

Sir John Wheeler has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question in which you have asked for a list of life sentence prisoners who have served more than 14½ years in prison, including whether they are loyalists or republican prisoners.

The paramilitary affiliation of prisoners is recorded for prison management purposes, not for classification. In addition, it is not the policy of the Prison Service to disclose particulars pertaining to individual prisoners.

There are currently 25 life sentence prisoners who have served more than 14½ years in custody. They are broken down by perceived affiliation as follows:

Loyalist: 15

Others: 3

Of these 11 (7 loyalist and 4 republican) are already in possession of provisional release dates. They are currently involved at various stages of the Pre-release Scheme.

Boundary Commission Reports

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he proposes to take in respect of the fourth periodical and second supplementary reports of the Boundary Commission for Northern Ireland. [37475]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I have today laid before Parliament the fourth periodical and second supplementary reports of the Boundary Commission for Northern Ireland together with a draft Order in Council for giving effect, without modifications, to the recommendations contained in the reports.

Written Answers to Questions

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Agencies

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the Government's intentions for HMSO and the other agencies for which he is responsible. [37635]

Mr. Freeman: I have appointed Coopers and Lybrand to consider urgently the options for the future of HMSO, with a view to privatisation provided that satisfactory arrangements can be made for the future provision of services to Parliament. The future of HMSO has been uncertain for too long and I am anxious to set in place quickly arrangements which will secure the long-term interests of the taxpayer as well as HMSO's staff and customers, among whom Parliament is particularly important. I believe that these interests are most likely to be secured by privatisation of all but a very small part of HMSO. Consultation is under way with the House authorities about the safeguards necessary to ensure the future provision of the services which Parliament receives from HMSO. I shall be making an oral statement to the House as soon as these consultations are sufficiently advanced and we have received advice from our financial advisers and decided on the way forward.

The Government intend to sell Chessington Computer Centre as a single viable business in a way which will ensure that it retains its reputation for the provision of high quality services to Government Departments and the wider public sector. Freedom from the constraints of operating within Government will make Chessington better able to serve existing customers and to attract new customers in wider markets. I believe that this is the best way to secure the long-term interests of the taxpayer as well as those of the staff and customers of the business. I have appointed KPMG Corporate Finance to assist with the sale of Chessington. Formal expressions of interest for the business will be sought early in the new year.

I have also appointed Coopers and Lybrand to advise urgently on ways of increasing private sector involvement in the Occupational Health and Safety Agency, Recruitment and Assessment Services, the Central Office of Information and the Civil Service College. My aim is not only to secure savings for the taxpayer, but also to maintain the best interests of the agencies' customers and staff.

Outsourcing Contracts

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, how many outsourcing contracts were granted by his Department or agencies in each year since 1990, indicating the nature and value of each contract; and if any additional work was added and of what value to (a) Hoskyns/Cap Gemini Segeti, (b) AT and T Istel, (c) EDS, (d) Sema Group, (e) Datasolve, (f) ITN Net, (g) Andersen Consulting, (h) Centre File, (i) BIS, (j) Telecom Capita, (k) ICL, (l) Digital Equipment, (m) CFM, (n) Siemens, (o) Nixdorf, (p) CMG and (q) Logica. [36966]

Mr. John Horam: The nature of current outsourcing contracts let by my Department and agencies since 1990 with the firms listed is set out in the table. Individual contract values, representing the total anticipated cost of the contracts, have been aggregated to preserve commercial confidentiality. The estimated total value of the contracts is £5,239,149. Further information is available only at disproportionate cost.

	Outsourcing contracts
(a) Hoskyns/Cap Gemini Segeti	Management of project risk. Software services.
(b) AT & T Istel	Software, connection and training and line rental. Viewdata information service.
(d) Sema	Maintenance and support for hardware.
(i) BIS	Training call-off contract.
(k) ICL	Support for corporate strategy. Software services. Hardware maintenance (2 contracts).
(l) Digital	System maintenance.
(n)/(o) Siemens/Nixdorf	Call-off contracts for Personal Computers.
(q) Logica	Technical support to review Government Data Network (GDN) security policy. Government Telecommunications Network (GTN) Managed Network Services Agreement. Open Systems Environment (OSE) advice and profiles (3 contracts). Strategic Consultancy services. Consultancy support for performance monitoring. Technical support to assist Telecommunications staff. Central Support Staff audit of GDN billing system. Review of GDN security policy. IT System supply and support contracts.

Civil Service Pension Scheme

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) what plans he has to market test the civil service pension scheme; and if he will make a statement; [37296]

(2) what provision has been made for in-house bids from civil servants to administer the civil service pension scheme; and if he will make a statement. [37295]

Mr. Horam: An order will be laid, under the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994, in the next parliamentary Session to enable Departments to market test administration of the civil service pension scheme. I intend to make a further statement on the matter at that stage.

ENVIRONMENT

Sustainable Development

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how the Government are responding to the House of Lords Select Committee report on sustainable development, published on 18 July. [37942]

Mr. Clappison: The Government published their response to the Lords Select Committee report on sustainable development on 12 October. We did so in order that the House should have ample opportunity to consider it before the report is debated on 26 October. Copies of the response have been formally laid before the House and placed in the House Library.

Farming and Forestry (Accidents)

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number of recorded accidents in the farming and forestry industry in each of the last three years; and how many have been fatal. [37134]

Sir Paul Beresford: The table shows the total number of fatal and other accidents in the agriculture and horticulture and forestry sectors reported to all enforcing authorities between 1991–92 and 1993–94.

Year (1 April to 31 March)	Fatal injuries		Non-Fatal major industries (c)		Over three-day injuries (d)		Total
	(a)	(b)	(a)	(b)	(a)	(b)	(a)	(b)
1991–92	46	7	495	39	1,308	213	1,849	259
1992–93	45	6	525	49	1,361	164	1,931	219
1993–94	37	4	593	53	1,246	142	1,876	199

(a) Agriculture and horticulture sector. (b) Forestry.
(c) As defined under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations—RIDDOR—but chiefly amputations, serious fractures and other injuries causing hospitalisation.
(d) An injury causing incapacity for normal work for more than three days and reportable for employed and self-employed persons only.

Liquid Effluent Treatment Plants

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his departmental ruling on the applicability of the waste management licensing regulations as applied to liquid effluent treatment plants. [36776]

Mr. Clappison: On 1 May 1994, the Government brought into force a new waste management licensing system under part II of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. On 25 July 1995, I announced that we had decided to extend from 31 July 1995 to 31 March 1996 the transitional arrangements made for the introduction of certain requirements of the new system. The Waste Management Licensing (Amendment No.2) Regulations 1995 give effect to this decision.

Whether or not the operation of a liquid effluent treatment plant needs a licence must be determined on the facts of the case. The effect of the 1995 regulations is that, where a licence is necessary, operators of treatment plant will have until 31 March 1996 to apply for a licence.

In the meantime, we are considering whether a case may be made for the exemption of some treatment plant from licensing. In doing so, it is necessary to have regard to the terms of article 11 of the amended EC framework directive on waste and the need to ensure that waste is treated without causing environmental pollution or harm to human health.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the local authority associations about the area cost adjustment; and if he will make a statement. [37941]

Mr. Curry: I met leading members of the local authority associations on 16 October. The local authority representatives whom I met are considering my proposals for an independent review of the adjustment. The aim would be to establish a method of carrying out the adjustment which commanded the widest degree of acceptance among authorities in all parts of the country, had a sound conceptual basis and was practical to apply.

I proposed that the review should be steered by a leading academic. It should also have someone knowledgeable about local government finance, nominated by the local authority associations, and someone familiar with central Government processes, nominated by the Secretary of State. Research would be commissioned to assist the review in its work. We would seek a report from the review in June 1996.

Leisure Activities

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Government's response to the Environment Select Committee's report on "The Environmental Impact of Leisure Activities" will be published. [37943]

Mr. Clappison: Our response is being published today, as a supplementary memorandum, to the Committee's report on "The Environmental Impact of Leisure Activities".

We welcome the Committee's report, and we are pleased to note the general thrust of the Committee's findings. We share its view that there is no evidence that tourism and leisure pose a serious, immediate or intrinsic threat to the environment. Nevertheless, we acknowledge the need for effective management to take account of potential impacts. These impacts are most likely to be felt and be best resolved at the local level, taking account both of the diversity of the countryside and the knowledge and experience of local communities.

We strongly agree with the Committee that the economic benefits which tourism and leisure can bring to rural areas should be more widely recognised. We also welcome the Committee's endorsement of the principles of "green tourism" and their contribution towards securing a sustainable tourism industry.

We have addressed many of these issues in the context of the rural White Paper, which acknowledges the distinctive nature of the countryside, its value to the nation, and the importance of vibrant local communities.

Ministerial Transport

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the security implications of using hire car companies to transport Government Ministers rather than directly employed drivers. [37149]

Sir Paul Beresford [holding answer 16 October 1995]: Ministers, in the main, are provided with cars and drivers through the Government car service. All GCS drivers are security cleared to an appropriate level.

During busy periods, the Government car service will sometimes use private companies under contract. In all cases, drivers have the necessary security clearances. Very occasionally, to meet unusual requirement, a private company may be employed which is used so infrequently that security clearances are not justified. In such cases, the involvement of a Minister is not advertised to the company in advance. No substantive security implication therefore arises.

Renewal Areas

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 25 April, Official Report, column 471, if he will make a progress statement on the research work being undertaken in renewal areas by Austin Mayhead and Co. Ltd. for his Department. [37477]

Mr. Clappison: The research has now been completed and a draft final report is due to be delivered to the Department by Austin Mayhead on 31 October.

Nuclear Waste Repository, Cumbria

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements have been made for the provision of daily transcripts to be made available to (a) participants and (b) outside interested parties of the proceedings of the public inquiry into the application by UK Nirex to construct a rock characteristics laboratory in connection with its nuclear waste repository development programme which began in September in Cumbria. [36753]

Mr. Clappison: The arrangements for the public inquiry into the appeal by UK Nirex Ltd. are matters for the Planning Inspectorate agency and Cumbria county council. I have asked the agency's chief executive to write separately to the hon. Member.

Letter from J. Greenfield to Mr. Llew Smith, dated 16 October 1995:

The Secretary of State for the Environment has asked the Inspectorate's Chief Executive to answer your question about arrangements for providing transcripts of the inquiry, currently being held, into the application by UK Nirex Ltd for a rock characterisation facility at Sellafield. I am replying in the absence of Mr Shepley.

There is no requirement in the Inquiry Procedure Rules for daily transcripts to be made available, either to participants or to interested parties. The only formal record of the proceedings is the Inspector's report to the Secretary of State which will be issued to the main parties with the decision letter.

However, I understand that one of the interested parties, the National Anti-Dump Network (NAND) is making daily transcripts. Cumbria County Council has agreed to produce photocopies of these and a limited number are periodically being made available at the inquiry venue. I should stress that this is a purely voluntary arrangement, and that the transcripts will not form part of the formal inquiry documentation to be included in the Inspector's report.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make an assessment of the operation of the system by which European regional development funds are filtered through to local authorities and other organisations; and what currently available tables he has for take-up of European development funds by the United Kingdom, in percentages, in relation to other member states. [37279]

Mr. Oppenheim: Grants are decided and offered by Government Departments after a procedure, agreed by a monitoring committee for the area concerned, which includes scoring applications against project selection criteria and consultation with members of the committee, for example in working groups.

The projects selection criteria have only recently been introduced. I will make an assessment in due course.

The European Commission's most recent annual report on the implementation of the reform of the structural funds includes tables for commitments and payments for the period 1989–1993. These show that the UK committed all allocations from the European regional development fund. Payments to the UK made by the end of 1993 were 86.8 per cent., 68.1 per cent. and 76.3 per cent. of these commitments for objectives 1, 2 and 5(b) respectively. Payments for the Community as a whole were 86.2 per cent., 71.3 per cent. and 77.0 per cent. Payments can continue until the end of 1995.

Assisted Areas

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentage of the United Kingdom assisted area population resides in Devon and Cornwall. [36723]

Mr. Oppenheim: The percentage of the UK assisted area population resident in Devon and Cornwall is 5.03 per cent.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Rooker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to receive the report of Lord Justice Scott on the inquiry into arms sales to Iraq; and if he will make a statement. [37110]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 16 October 1995]: I understand from Sir Richard Scott that he has virtually finished the section of his report dealing with prosecutions arising from exports to Iraq in the period 1984 to 1990. He is currently completing the writing of his recommendations chapter.

I understand that the inquiry is engaged in seeking comments on criticisms of individuals made by Sir Richard Scott in the prosecutions section of the report. When Sir Richard has received those comments, he will consider them and, as appropriate, revise the report.

It is impossible to predict with certainty how soon the report will be completed. This depends on a number of factors, including the extent and promptness of the responses to the draft extracts which have been, and continue to be, sent to people.

Subject to that, I am informed that the inquiry's own present expectation is that the final text will be completed in early December. The report will then be printed and published as soon as practicable thereafter.

Newspaper Carriage Charges

Mr. Sykes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions are taking place between the Director General of Fair Trading, the newspaper wholesalers and the National Federation of Retail Newsagents in relation to newspaper carriage charges. [36953]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: There have been no such discussions involving the Office of Fair Trading since the Director General of Fair Trading announced his decision on 21 August not to refer the wholesale distribution of newspaper to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

PRIME MINISTER

Priorities

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister what are his priorities for the remaining period of his premiership. [36028]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the speech that I made on 13 October, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Outsourcing Contracts

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Prime Minister how many outsourcing contracts were granted by his Department or agencies in each year since 1990, indicating the nature and value of each contract; and if any additional work was added and of what value to (a) Hoskyns/Cap Gemini Segeti, (b) AT and T Istel, (c) EDS, (d) Sema Group, (e) Datasolve, (f) ITN Net, (g) Andersen Consulting, (h) Centre File, (i) BIS, (j) Telecom Capita, (k) ICL, (l) Digital Equipment, (m) CFM, (n) Siemens, (o) Nixdorf, (p) CMG and (q) Logica. [36996]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 16 October 1995]: For this purpose my office is part of the Cabinet Office. I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service on 16 October 1995.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins) of 17 March, Official Report, column 735, if he will now make it his practice to release historic details of nuclear weapons numbers in the United Kingdom arsenal. [36840]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Information on the size of our nuclear forces since the 1970s was published in the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1995, Cm 2800, pages 38–39. We have no current plans to release further details of our nuclear weapons numbers.

Rosyth Naval Base

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made on the sale of Rosyth naval base; and if he will make a statement. [37738]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I have now received the results of the recent tender exercise for the sale of the naval base. After careful analysis, and the submission of revised bids following further discussions with all the complaint bidders, the tender submitted by the Rosyth 2000 consortium was judged to be the best offer in terms of producing convincing business plans for the regeneration of the area and representing a fair return to the taxpayer for the sale of the base. The consortium has been selected as our preferred tenderer and our negotiations with the company will now continue to ensure a smooth transition of the naval base to civilian use by the end of March 1996. I am confident that Rosyth 2000 has the expertise and financial resources to sustain the regeneration of the area that we all wish to see.

Military Survey Defence Agency

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key performance targets have been set for the Military Survey defence agency for 1995–96. [37877]

Mr. Soames: The Military Survey defence agency key targets for 1995–96 are:

(1) To complete the endorsed in-year production programme, recognising that this may be impacted upon by unforeseeable, higher priority operational and emergency requirements.

(2) To implement by 31 March 1996 those three-year review study recommendations applicable to the agency, to include the development of customer agreement procedures.

(3) To implement by 31 March 1996 the military survey fundamental review redesign report, stage 1, part 2.

(4) To implement by 1 April 1998 a capability to support a specified geographic requirement package; initially to have costed the geographic implications for the Department by 31 March 1996.

(5) To improve the work unit cost of the production programme by 31 March 1996 by 3 per cent., in accruals terms, from an agreed 1 April 1995 baseline.

These key targets take forward much of the work of previous targets and prominence is given to the agency's core outputs. They also drive the management reforms possible because of agency status. More detail on these reforms, including those applicable to the agency and fundamental reviews, are contained in the agency's 1994 annual report, copies of which will be placed in the Library of the House shortly.

SCOTLAND

Roads

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the proposed capital allocation for roads in the

Angus unitary authority for the years 1996–97, 1997–98 and 1998–99. [36456]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Capital allocations for roads and transport for the new unitary authorities in Scotland, including Angus, have still to be determined for these years.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the capital allocation for roads in Tayside region in each year since 1983, at 1994 prices. [36405]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The annual roads and transport capital allocations for Tayside regional council since 1982-83 at 1994 prices are set out in the table.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Transfer of Land Report

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department whether he plans to implement recommendations in the Law Commission's report on Transfer of Land—Obsolete Restrictive Covenants, Law Com. No. 201. [37634]

Mr. John M. Taylor: Due to concerns about the potential costs to the public of using the scheme recommended by the Law Commission, and following careful consideration of representations from the public in this regard, it is not the Government's intention to implement the commission's recommendations. However, the matter will be kept under review following implementation of the commission's recommendations in Law Com. No. 127 for a scheme of land obligations.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Upper Waiting Hall (Exhibitions)

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the work of the Henley management college to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 13 November to Friday 17 November 1995.

WALES

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many jobs were created or safeguarded as a result of regional selective assistance granted to companies in Ynys Môn in each year since 1990. [36654]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is not available in the precise form requested. Regional selective assistance offers accepted between 1 July 1990 and 30 September 1995 where some payments have been made are forecast to create or safeguard 521 jobs. To date, 343 jobs have been accounted for.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Detention Centres (Emotional Disturbances)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish his assessment of the significance of emotional disturbance among young people as a factor associated with inmates of detention centres, indicating his estimate of the proportion of the cost accounted for by such young people; and if he will make a statement. [36631]

Miss Widdecombe: Detention centres and youth custody centres were replaced by young offender institutions in 1988.

Two studies have been commissioned by the Home Office into the mental health of sentenced and unsentenced prisoners. Both include findings on young males in prison, although data on young females were not collated separately from data on adult females. The report of the first study was published in May 1991 under the title "Mentally Disordered Prisoners". The report of the second study, "Mental Disorder in Remand Prisoners" was received by the Home Office in late September 1995.

The 1990 study showed that 33 per cent. of sentenced young male offenders in the sample group were diagnosed as suffering from some form of psychiatric disorder, including harmful or dependant misuse of substances. The corresponding figure for unsentenced young male offenders in the 1995 study was 53 per cent. of the sample group.

No figures are available on the cost of maintaining inmates with emotional or mental health problems, as opposed to those without such problems.

Smoke Alarms

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment his Department has made of the reduction in fire deaths attributable to the installation of smoke alarms. [37133]

Mr. Howard: None. However, United Kingdom fire statistics for 1993 reveal death rates for fires in dwellings which are discovered by smoke alarms are lower than those which are not discovered by smoke alarms; three deaths per 1,000 fires compared with nine deaths per 1,000 fires.

Prisons Ombudsman

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, when he authorised the office of the prisons ombudsman to refuse to investigate complaints which are received in a prisoner's own handwriting. [37195]

Miss Widdecombe: Complaints to the prisons ombudsman are never rejected because they are hand-written. The vast majority of complaints received by the prisons ombudsman are in the prisoner's own writing and are carefully considered to see whether they are eligible for investigation within the terms of the ombudsman's remit. It is, of course, helpful to the ombudsman's office if handwritten letters are legible. The ombudsman also accepts complaints from prisoners written in foreign languages. The detailed procedures are set out in the document, "The Prisons Ombudsman: A Note on Arrangements" a copy of which is available in the Library.

Operation Bumblebee

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the trends in domestic burglaries in London since the inception of Operation Bumblebee. [37170]

Mr. Maclean: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that prior to the launch of Operation Bumblebee in June 1993, the number of domestic burglaries recorded for the financial year 1992–93 was 127,611. A total of 15,136—11.8 per cent.—of these offences were cleared up. By 31 March 1995 the number of recorded burglaries had fallen to 106,558, while the number of crimes cleared up had risen to 20,666—19.4 per cent.

Remand Custody

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) 15 (b) 16 and (c) 17-year-old-boys were remanded into custody during (i) 1990, (ii) 1991 and (iii) 1992. [37186]

Miss Widdecombe: The available information on the number of 15 to 17-year-old boys received on remand into prison service establishments in England and Wales is given in the tables. The age split requested is not available for 1990–1991. This information is also published in successive volumes of "Prison statistics, England and Wales"—table 3.9 of the 1992 edition (Cm 2581) and table 2.6 for earlier years. Copies of these publications are available from the Library.

[36261]

Miss Widdecombe: The available information on the number of young persons remanded to local authority accommodation in England is published by the Department of Health in "Children accommodated in secure units"—reference A/F 94/21, table 10. This information is presented on a financial year basis with the last report covering the year ending 31 March 1994. The available information on the number of 14 to 16-years-olds received on remand into prison service establishments in England and Wales is given in the table. No age split is available for 1989–1991.

This information is published in "Prison statistics, England and Wales", table 3.9 of 1992 and 1993 editions, Cms 2581 and 2893, copies of which are available in the library. No information is available for young persons held in any other venue.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the number of farms of the size (a) 1 to 25 hectares, (b) 26 to 50 hectares, (c) 51 to 75 hectares, (d) 76 to 100 hectares, (e) 101 to 150 hectares, (f) 151 to 200 hectares and (g) 201 or more hectares for (i) the last available year and (ii) 1985. [36430]

Mr. Boswell: Statistics for England from the June agricultural census for the years 1985 and 1994 are shown in the table:

Holding size (hectares)	1985	1994

201 and over	9.198	9,357
Total holdings	153.766	153,426

1. The above figures exclude minor holdings.

Outsourcing Contracts

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many outsourcing contracts were granted by his Department or agencies in each year since 1990, indicating the nature and value of each contract; and if any additional work was added and of what value to (a) Hoskyns/Cap Gemini Segeti, (b) AT and T Istel, (c) EDS, (d) Sema Group, (e) Datasolve, (f) ITN Net, (g) Andersen Consulting, (h) Centre File, (i) BIS, (j) Telecom Capita, (k) ICL, (l) Digital Equipment, (m) CFM, (n) Siemens, (o) Nixdorf, (p) CMG and (q) Logica. [36959]

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 16 October 1995]: Since 1990, no outsourcing contracts have been granted by the Department or its agencies to any of the companies listed. Consequently, there has been no additional work.

Fish (Pollution)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the dangers to cod, haddock and plaice stocks in the North sea of the pollutions of hydrocarbons in drilling wastes discharging from rigs [37292]

Mr. Baldry There have been a number of recent studies which examined the levels of hydrocarbons and taint in fish. These show some evidence that oil residues are present but no evidence of taint. There are no dangers to cod, haddock or plaice stocks in the North sea arising from drilling wastes.

HEALTH

Cancer

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the mortality rates from (a) cervical, (b) breast, (c) lung and (d) bowel cancer in (i) England and (ii) other OECD countries. [36618]

Mr. Sackville: This information is shown in the table.

Malignant neoplasm of the bowel	152,153,154	31.3

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the mortality rates from all cancers in (a) England and (b) other OECD countries. [36617]

Mr. Sackville: This information is shown in the table.

Provisional mortality rates for England 1993

The latest available data for other Organisations of Economic Co-operation and Development Countries can be found in the "World Health Statistics Annual 1993", copies of which are available in the Library.

Junior Doctors (Accommodation Changes)

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance his Department gives to trusts in relation to charging junior doctors for hospital accommodation when they are required by their contract to be resident on call. [37220]

Mr. Malone: The terms and conditions of service for hospital medical and dental staff (England and Wales) handbook includes the provisions for charges for residence for junior doctors whether they are compulsory resident practitioners or voluntary resident practitioners. From 1 April 1995 the ceiling on lodging charges for voluntary resident practitioners was removed. AL(MD)4/95, which announced this change, was issued on 12 June 1995 and contains guidance for employing bodies on the provision of accommodation for hospital medical and dental staff, including compulsorily resident practitioners.

Copies of both documents are available in the Library.

Travel Allowances

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the total cost of travel expenses claimed by civil servants using their own vehicles for official business in each of the last five years in his Department; and what would have been the saving in the last year if the maximum rate that could be claimed was set at the lowest rate. [36370]

Mr. Sackville: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's assessment of the potential value of a national awareness week focusing on attention deficit hyperactivity disorder and similar conditions; and if he will make a statement. [36648]

Mr. Bowis: I am advised that it is unlikely that attention deficit hyperactivity disorder would benefit from presentation in this way.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each of the last three years (a) the total amount estimated to have been spent on mental health treatment and (b) the total amount estimated to have been spent in treating children diagnosed as suffering from attention deficit hyperactivity disorder, indicating in each case the percentage of each item as a proportion of the total health budget; and if he will make a statement. [36651]

Mr. Bowis: The available information on the amount spent on mental health treatment is shown in the table.

Information on the amount spent on treating children diagnosed as suffering from attention deficit hyperactivity disorder is not available centrally.

	Mental illness expenditure cash prices £ million	Mental illness expenditure 1993–94 prices £ million	Mental illness as a proportion of total hospital and community health services expenditure Percentage
1991–92	2,185.3	2,341.8	11.58
1992–93	2,350.3	2,422.2	11.56

1. Final figures for 1993–94 are not yet available.
2. The gross domestic product deflator was used to calculate the 1993–94 prices.
3. The mental illness expenditure is made up of the following:
   (a) in-patient and outpatient expenditure—the consultant specialities of mental illness, child and adolescent psychiatry, forensic psychiatry, physiotherapy and old age psychiatry.
   (b) day patient expenditure—in the categories, mental illness (alcoholism, drug abuse, psychogeriatrics and general), child and adolescent psychiatry and forensic psychiatry.
4. Expenditure figures for 1991–92 onwards are not comparable with earlier years due to changes in national health service accountancy practices.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will issue guidelines to assist head teachers and social workers in providing for the medical problems of hyperactive children; and if he will make a statement. [36652]

Mr. Bowis: Children with attention deficit hyperactivity disorder who are regarded as having special educational needs should be assessed on an individual basis by a team of appropriately trained professionals, as provided for in the code of practice on the identification and assessment of special educational needs issued last year by the Department for Education and Employment and the Welsh Office.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his assessment of the linkage between long-term addictive tendencies and attention deficit hyperactivity disorder; and if he will make a statement. [36656]

Mr. Bowis: Some research suggests that children with attention deficit hyperactivity disorder may have an increased risk of developing further problems later in childhood and in adolescence, including substance abuse. The nature of any such linkage is, however, not yet clear.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice his Department provides for adoptive parents who discover that their adopted child is affected by attention deficit disorder or similar condition; and if he will make a statement. [36657]

Mr. Bowis: Advice for parents, whether adoptive or otherwise, is a matter for professional consideration in each individual case.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the appropriateness of conventional family therapy in the case of families in which one or more children are affected by attention deficit hyperactivity disorder. [36658]

Mr. Bowis: Family therapy may play a part in a comprehensive treatment programme which may also include medication and other interventions. With young children and in milder forms of attention deficit hyperactivity disorder, family therapy may be an appropriate and effective approach on its own—for example, if focused on enhancing parenting skills and helping the child learn strategies to improve concentration.

Breast Cancer (Radiotherapy Damage)

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the number of women whose treatment by radiotherapy after breast cancer has led to major permanent injuries; what plans he has to pay compensation in these cases; and what compensation has been paid in each of the last five years. [37224]

Mr. Sackville: No estimate has been made but the Department of Health is working with Rage Breast, a patient support group representing women who have had radiotherapy for breast cancer which has led to major permanent injuries. There are no plans to pay compensation in these cases, nor has any compensation been paid in the last five years. We sympathise fully with those suffering as a result of any medical side effect; however, we consider that compensation by the national health service is appropriate only when there is evidence of medical negligence. The Government's position remains that the basis for seeking compensation should be by proof of negligence through the courts.

"Pocket Guide to the NHS in London"

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much the "Pocket Guide to the NHS in London" cost to write, publish and distribute; how many copies have been produced; and to whom and to which organisations it has been distributed. [37424]

Mr. Sackville: A total of 15,000 copies of the "Pocket Guide to the NHS in London" have been produced at a total cost of £26,000. The guide has been distributed to a wide range of organisations and individuals in London including health authorities and trusts, hon. and right hon. Members, community health councils, general practices, local authorities and the media. The response to the guide has been overwhelmingly favourable with many requests for additional copies.

Health Care from Non-NHS Providers

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was spent on purchasing care from non-NHS providers by fundholders, trusts, heath authorities and in total in each year since 1990. [37425]

Mr. Sackville: The table details expenditure on purchasing care for 1991–92, 1992–93 and 1993–94 for general practitioner fundholders, national health services trusts, health authorities and in total. Figures for 1990–91 are not available.

London Ambulance Service

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the Government intend to respond to the second report of the Health Select Committee on London's Ambulance Service, HC 20; and if he will make a statement. [37633]

Mr. Sackville: Copies of the Government's response to the Health Committee's report on London's Ambulance Service have been laid before the House today.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what targets she has set for the executive agencies in her Department. [37739]

Mr. Sproat: The following targets have been set for 1995–96:

[1]Visitor ratings are assessed from market research interviews with 900 visitors, undertaken by independent consultants each summer. 2.0 is extremely good; 1.5 is very good; 1.0 is quite good; 0 is OK; –1.0 is quite poor; –2.0 is very poor.

National Lottery

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the total income received to date (a) in tax revenue, (b) in money for distribution to good causes since the start of the national lottery and (c) in interest received on money prior to expenditure being incurred by the distribution boards. [37487]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 16 October 1995]: For the period 22 November 1994 to 30 September 1995, £410.7 million has been paid in duty levied on the national lottery. For the same period, £1,093 million has been paid to the national lottery distribution fund for distribution to good causes and £30.7 million of interest has accrued to the fund as a whole.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage whether the interest on the lottery income earmarked for distribution by the National Lottery Charities Board is being added, automatically and in full, to the money available for future distribution by that board; how the money is being held; and under what rules it is to be released to the board. [37484]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 16 October 1995]: Pending draw down by the distributing bodies, proceeds available from the national lottery are held in the national lottery distribution fund. Funds are invested and balances calculated for each distributing body. The NLDF investment account is revalued before each transaction, either receipt or draw down of funds—for payment of grants or expenses—and interest is apportioned in full to each body. Funds are normally drawn on a monthly basis, in accordance with procedures agreed between the Department of National Heritage, the National Debt Commissioners and the distributing bodies.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will show (a) the income earmarked for distribution by the National Lottery Charities Board from the income in each month since money started to flow from the national lottery, (b) the cumulative total held in respect of the NLCB at an appropriate point in each month, (c) how much of that total is held respectively (i) by the Treasury, (ii) by his Department or (iii) in any other fund and (d) the rate of interest and the total cash figure earned each month from the sums held. [37483]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 16 October 1995]: The National Lottery Charities Board is allocated one fifth of the money generated by the national lottery for the national lottery distribution fund. Since 22 November 1994, £217.4 million has accrued to the charities board, which is an average of £20.7 million per month. All money paid into the fund, not immediately required for distribution, is paid over to the National Debt Commissioners and invested by them in accordance with Treasury directions. Interest is accrued on the fund as a whole and apportioned to each distributor. To date, £30.7 million of interest has accrued to the fund as a whole, of which £6.3 million is attributable to the charities board.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will show (a) the income received in taxation in respect of each month since such income started to flow from the national lottery, (b) the total income from distribution to good causes received in respect of each month since such income started to flow, (c) the proportion and sum earmarked for distribution by the National Lottery Charities Board from each month's income, (d) the sums actually disbursed by the Treasury each month, indicating the amounts within the total passed to the Home Office and direct to the National Lottery Charities Board, (e) the amount of interest earned each month on the sums held by the Treasury for future distribution by the National Lottery Charities Board and (f) the cumulative monthly total including interest held by the Treasury for each month since the income commenced. [37486]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 16 October 1995]: The national lottery distribution fund is maintained under the control of the Secretary of State for National Heritage. All money paid into the fund not immediately required for distribution, is paid over to the National Debt Commissioners and invested by them in accordance with Treasury directions.

For the period 22 November 1994 to 30 September 1995, £410.7 million has been paid in duty levied on the national lottery, which is an average of £41 million per month.

For the same period, £1,093 million, has been paid to the national lottery distribution fund for distribution to good causes. This is an average of £104 million per month. One fifth of all money paid into the fund is allocated to the National Lottery Charities Board. To date, this equates to £217.4 million, which is accrued at an average of £20.7 million per month.

To date, £65.3 million has been paid to distributors, an average of £6.5 million per month. Of the total, £6.6 million has been paid to the National Lottery Charities Board.

Interest accrued on the charities board share of the national lottery distribution fund, since the start of the lottery, totals £6.3 million. This is an average of £0.6 million per month.

The total value of the fund to date stands at £1,052 million, which represents average monthly income of £100.2 million.

In-House Bids

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list those parts of his Department or departmental agencies which were privatised without an in-house bid; if he will indicate the expertise which was absent in his Department or departmental agencies which prevented an in-house bid taking place; which future parts of his Department or departmental agencies he intends to privatise; and which of them do not have the necessary in-house expertise to mount an in-house bid. [29432]

Mr. Sproat [pursuant to the reply, 20 June 1995, c. 177–82]: I regret that there was an omission from the reply given by my right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State. Following is the complete answer that should have been provided.

Mrs. Knight: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave him in my letter dated 28 July, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Betts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the rights of individual members of the public to make complaints to any of the appropriate ombudsmen about services or projects funded through the private finance initiative in his Department. [36823]

Mr. Jack: For Treasury and other Chancellor's Departments, members of the public have the same rights to make complaints of alleged maladministration to the relevant ombudsman concerning a project funded through the private finance initiative as they would have had if the project had been publicly financed.

Housing

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, following the 25 per cent. rise above estimates in tender costs for house building in Northern Ireland in the current year, what plans he has to provide emergency extra funding for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. [37388]

Mr. Moss: None. However, the Northern Ireland Housing Executive can, along with other important public expenditure programmes, bid for any resources which might become available in-year within the Northern Ireland block.

National Anthem

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the policy of the Northern Ireland Department of Education in respect of whether the national anthem is sectarian. [37362]

Mr. Ancram: The Government's policy remains that the national anthem should be played on ceremonial occasions. Its use on other occasions is a matter for the relevant authorities in each case.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what grounds the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland issued instructions that the national anthem should not be played when Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II visited Northern Ireland to open the new Lagan bridge in Belfast. [37360]

Sir John Wheeler: No instructions were issued either by the Department of the Environment or my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State.

Statutory Rules, Regulations and Orders

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many statutory rules, regulations and orders have been made in total, and by each Northern Ireland Department, over the last five years. [37393]

Sir John Wheeler: The total number of statutory rules, regulations and orders made by my right hon. and learned Friend and Northern Ireland Departments over the last five years is as follows:

1990: 426
1991: 506
1992: 536
1993: 463
1994: 478
1995 to 11 October: 362

The breakdown by Department is as follows:

	1990	1991	1992	1993	1994	1995 to 11 October
Department of Agriculture	45	65	52	63	62	56
Department of Economic Development	45	79	71	54	44	36
Department of Education	22	28	24	25	20	13
Department of Environment	183	224	244	210	208	166
Department of Finance and Personnel	2	9	10	6	6	4
Department of Health and Social Services	131	106	154	121	117	91
Secretary of State for Northern Ireland	25	18	22	23	29	17
Medicines Act 1968, 1971 made jointly by Great Britain and Northern Ireland Departments	11	8	20	10	22	4

Because a number of statutory rules, regulations and orders are made by more than one Department the figures when broken down by Department are greater than the overall total.

Business Development Service

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the prior options study of the business development service has been completed; and what was the outcome of the study. [37873]

Sir John Wheeler: On 18 January 1994, I announced that the business development service of the Department of Finance and Personnel would be subject to a prior options study. That study is now complete and I have decided that the business development service of DFP should become a next steps agency and that preparations for launch should proceed, with a view to agentisation by 1 April 1996.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much has been spent on self-promotion as distinct from services to patients and clients by (a) the Department of Health and Social Services, (b) the management executive, (c) the four area boards and (d) the various trusts for the last available year. [37294]

Mr. Moss: Neither the Department of Health and Social Services, which includes the management executive, nor any of its agent bodies in the health and personal social services incur expenditure on items which could be termed "self-promotion", as distinct from "public relations". Most HPSS bodies have a public relations function which is concerned with the communication to interested parties of information relating to services, service development, and health and personal social services issues generally.

Chief Constable's Certificates

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the Chief Constable's certificates issued between the commencement of the ceasefire and 30 September 1995 giving the date of the incident and the date of issue. [37225]

Health and Social Services Estates Agency

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in establishing the Northern Ireland Health and Social Services Estates Agency. [37875]

Mr. Moss: I am pleased to announce that the Northern Ireland Health and Social Services Estates Agency was established as an executive agency of the Department of Health and Social Services on 2 October 1995, under simplified next steps procedures.

The agency is the principal source of expertise available to health and personal social services managers in all aspects of an estate which comprises some 427 sites covering approximately 1200 hectares throughout Northern Ireland. The agency has 127 staff, the majority of whom are within professional estates disciplines. The range of estate services which the agency will provide includes policy and strategic advice to the Department, as well as project sponsor support, planning, project management and design and consultancy services for health and personal social service bodies generally.

I have delegated full managerial authority for the agency's day-to-day operation to its chief executive. A ministerial advisory board will enable me to ensure public accountability for the performance of the agency. The policy and resources framework of the agency is set out in its framework document, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

In addition, I have set challenging targets for the agency in its first six months of operation. These are as follows:

Financial management

To manage the agency's resources so as to deliver the business plan within a total budget of £2.156 million;

To deliver efficiency savings of 4 per cent. and to develop a programme of efficiency reviews to ensure that the most efficient and effective use is made of the agency's resources.

To develop a programme for the development and implementation of resource accounting system by 31 March 1996;

To develop service level agreements with client bodies and broad assessments of the prices to be charged for each of these packages of services by 31 March 1996.

Efficiency of services

To continue the continuous market test of the design and consultancy function of the agency ensuring a 3 per cent. increase in achieved surplus of £368,000 over the previous market testing period.

Completion of planning of two schemes with a value of £74 million.

Police Complaints System

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will carry out a review of the police complaints system; and if he will make a statement. [37876]

Sir John Wheeler: After consultation with the Royal Ulster Constabulary, the Police Authority and the Independent Commission for Police Complaints, the Government have concluded that after seven years' operation of the current police complaints system, it is appropriate now to review it. This review constitutes another important part of the major process of review of the policing service in Northern Ireland, and will be co-ordinated with the wider reform of policing structures and with the fundamental review of policing needs which the Secretary of State announced in a speech at Queen's university on 25 August this year.

The Government will be appointing an independent reviewer shortly to take forward the review. Copies of the terms of reference have been placed in the Library.

The terms of reference make it clear that the Government want a fundamental and wide-ranging review which will include examination of the current system of investigating complaints into the behaviour of individual officers but will also consider how complaints against police policy and standards of service can be dealt with. The review will begin in November with a report being presented to me no later than May 1996. The results of the review, and the Government's proposals for taking them forward, will be made public.

I have no doubt that the reviewer will want to consult widely and I hope that, when comments are invited, all those with an interest will make their views known.

TRANSPORT

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what actions have been taken concerning departmental action on bomb warnings since the meeting on 14 June 1989 between assistant secretary C. T. Harris and Mr. and Mrs. Martin Cadman, Lockerbie relatives, and Mr. Derek Dempster, a member of the Air Transport Users Committee. [37451]

Mr. Norris [holding answer 16 October 1995]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave on 6 March 1995, Official Report, column 55.

Aircraft Noise

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what plans he has to improve the criterion for controlling the noise of aircraft landing and taking off at Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted airports; [36705]

(2) if the existing policy of controlling noise of aircraft landing and taking off at Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted remains in force. [36701]

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friend's policy on noise abatement measures at Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted has not changed.

A consultation paper proposing increased monitoring efficiency and reductions in the noise limits which apply to departing aircraft at these airports, was issued on 3 October. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House. The aircraft noise monitoring advisory committee, which reviewed the departure noise limits, will now study the feasibility of noise limits for landing aircraft at these airports.

Travel Allowances

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what rates of travel allowance may be claimed by civil servants in his Department when using their own vehicles for official business. [36371]

Mr. Norris: The present rates of travel allowance that may be claimed by civil servants in the centre of the Department of Transport and in the Highways Agency, Transport Research Laboratory, Coastguard Agency, Driver Vehicle Licensing Agency, Marine Safety Agency and Vehicle Certification Agency are:

Car (standard rate) engine capacity	Up to 4,000 miles	Over 4,000 miles
Up to 1000cc	27p	15p
1001cc to 1500cc	35.7p	19p
1501cc to 2000cc	42p	23p
2001cc and above	46p	30p
Public transport rate	23.8p per mile

Motor cycles	Up to 125cc	Over 125cc
Up to 4,000 miles
with third party insurance	14.6p	22.1p
with comprehensive insurance	16.2p	25.3p
Over 4,000 miles	6.1p	9p
Pedal cycles	6.2p per mile

The Driving Standards Agency figures are:

Per mile

Standard Rate	Up to 1500cc	1501–2000cc	Over 2000cc
Up to 5,000 miles	35.7p	42p	46p
Over 5,000 miles	18p	22p	30p
The public transport rate	23p per mile

Motor Cycles	Up to 125cc	Over 125cc
Up to 4,000 miles third party insurance	14.6p	22.1p
Comprehensive insurance	16.2p	25.3p
Over 4,000 miles	6.1p	9p
The pedal cycle allowance	6p per mile

The Vehicle Inspectorate Executive Agency figures are:

Engine size (cc)	First 5,000 miles	Over 5,000 miles
Class A Up to 1500	35.7p	18p
Class B 1500–2000	42p	22p
Class C Over 2000	46p	28p
Public Transport Rate Rail Classes	23p

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the total cost of travel expenses by civil servants using their own vehicles for official business in each of the last five years in his Department; and what would have been the saving in the last year if the maximum rate that could be claimed was set at the lowest rate. [36372]

Mr. Norris: The Department of Transport, including its agencies, holds no detailed record of this expenditure past the end of each financial year.

During 1994–95 the spend for the Department's Central Transport Group, together with the Highways Agency, Marine Safety Agency, Coastguard Agency, Vehicle Certification Agency, and Transport Research Laboratory was £1.418 million. If claims had been limited to the lowest level—that is, the public transport rate of 23.8p per mile—the spend would have been £944,000. Disaggregated figures for the Driver Vehicle Licensing Agency, Driving Standards Agency and Vehicle Inspectorate Executive Agency are not available.

Traffic Measures, Newbury

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what detailed studies he undertook into traffic reductions in Newbury in order to alleviate the problems of congestion from local vehicles; [36678]

(2) what on-the-ground measures he has undertaken to assess the environmental impacts of the Newbury bypass during the review period; [36675]

(3) what account he has taken of the findings of the Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution 18th report, with particular reference to recommendations 59 and 96, and possibilities and options for traffic reductions in the review of the A34 Newbury bypass and the subsequent decision to proceed with the road; and if he will make a statement. [36677]

Mr. Watts: The inspector who held the public inquiry in 1988 agreed with the Department that the bypass would not solve all Newbury's traffic problems, but he did conclude that it would provide sufficient relief to enable local authorities to introduce effective measures to relieve the residual problems.

The recent study commissioned by my right hon. Friend for Peterborough (Dr. Mawhinney) looked at traffic management—including the measures covered by RCEP recommendation 96—public transport and minimal improvements to the existing road as an alternative to the proposed bypass. The conclusion was that the benefit of such measures were constrained by the limited number of canal/river crossings and the congested junctions at either side. The bypass will allow the space for a new approach to transport and traffic in the town by removing the heavy through traffic.

The team which carried out the study based its work on existing environmental data collected for the public consultation and the two public inquiries, visiting the site to put this in context. In assessing the information thus collected, the team applied the current environmental assessment procedures set out in the Department of Transport's design manual for roads and bridges.

RCEP recommendation 59 was considered by the recent study, but the measures that this would involve would force more traffic on to local routes unsuited to heavy traffic, much of which would end up travelling longer distances. If the measures covered by RCEP recommendation 96 were implemented on their own, they could worsen the situation. By removing the through traffic, the bypass will allow the space for a new approach to transport and traffic in the town.

M25

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if it is possible to construct the additional lanes proposed for the M25 between junctions 14 and 15 without an expansion of the existing curtilage or boundaries of the M25 at this section; [36419]

(2) for what reasons the proposed widening of the M25 between junctions 13 and 15 announced by him on 3 April exceeds the capacity which the British Airports Authority has said would be sufficient to absorb additional traffic generated by the proposed additional terminal 5 at Heathrow;

(3) pursuant to his statement of 3 April, Official Report, columns 1391–93, to what extent his traffic forecast for the M25 in the area and approaches to Heathrow airport agrees with the findings of the reassessment following the publication of the Standing Advisory Committee on Trunk Road Assessment report; [36407]

(4) how the traffic forecast on which he based his decision to plan the widening of the M25 to 10 and 12 lanes over most sections varied from the forecasts previously used in support of the M25 link road scheme, the abandonment of which he announced on 3 April; [36435]

(5) if he will publish the traffic forecast for the M25 that he used when determining his decision to widen the motorway to 10 and 12 lanes over most sections; [36436]

(6) to what extent plans for additional motorway lanes proposed between junctions 12 and 16 of the M25 will require a reduction in the widths of the existing lanes or hard shoulder; [36418]

(7) what remedies or other arrangements he proposes for those people whose properties were covered by the compulsory purchase orders in connection with the defunct scheme for M25 link roads; [36414]

(8) what were the findings of the reassessment of M25 traffic growth forecasts that stated he would publish after the receipt of the SACTRA report; [36434]

(9) what factors he intends to take into account when deciding whether to conduct a public inquiry into plans for the additional motorway lanes proposed between junctions 12 and 16 of the M25; [36420]

(10) what assessment he has made of the effect of a refusal to grant planning permission in respect of BAA's application for Heathrow terminal 5 on the need to widen the M25 between junctions 13 and 15; [36429]

(11) to what extent the proposal to widen a section of the M25 to 12 and 10 lanes take into account (a) the recommendations of the Royal Commission on environmental pollution and (b) the SACTRA report; [36437]

(12) which sections of the M25 he intends shall not be widened to a standard of eight lanes. [36413]

Mr. Watts [holding answers 16 October 1995]: Following the withdrawal of the link road proposals between junctions 12 and 16, the Highways Agency has been assessing the widening schemes to be taken forward in their place. The work undertaken so far indicates that the proposed widening between junctions 12 and 15 be accommodated within the existing highway boundary. Between junctions 15 and 16, the proposals to widen to dual five lanes may require small areas of land outside the highway boundary.

The proposals, which have yet to be published, are expected to maintain standard lane widths and hard shoulders for most of the distance between junctions 12 and 15. At bridges and over certain lengths where there are restrictions, reductions in lane widths and/or discontinuous hard shoulders are expected to be necessary. Some reduction in widths and loss of hard shoulders are likely to be necessary between junctions 15 and 16 but where existing underbridges are to be widened the opportunity will be taken to reinstate hard shoulders which had earlier been dispensed with.

Traffic forecasts used to assess the change from link roads to widening were based on the same model and growth factors as the forecasts published in May 1994 with the draft Highway Orders for the then proposed link roads. But the design year adopted for the widening is 15 years from now compared with 2015 for the link roads, for the reasons explained by the Secretary of State in his announcement on 3 April. The contribution of the control motorway pilot was taken into account in determining traffic that could be catered for on this section of the M25 in the period up to 2010. This regulates speeds and sets speed limits according to conditions on the motorway.

Traffic growth is being reassessed and this includes work to test the effect of the factors identified in the SACTRA report. The Highways Agency is also taking into account the appropriate balance between road building and environmental impact raised by the Royal Commission on environmental pollution. The results will be made available when details of the schemes are published.

There are remedies proposed for those people whose properties were covered by the draft compulsory purchase orders for the link roads. The Highways Agency has offered to pay all reasonable costs incurred from the date of the first notice of the draft orders by the owners of these properties in preparing an objection to the draft orders.

When the proposals for both widening schemes are published, all the comments received will be considered by the Secretaries of State before a decision on the way forward is taken. They would consider the weight and nature of objections to any draft highway orders in determining the need for an inquiry. Where the widening does not involve draft orders, as is likely between junctions 12 and 15, there is no statutory requirement for a public enquiry.

The scope of the widening of the M25 between J13 and 15 is governed by the need to reduce congestion on the motorway and provide for the predicted traffic in the next 15 years, whether or not the fifth terminal at Heathrow airport proceeds. Refusal of planning permission would therefore not alter the proposals for the M25.

The only sections for which dual four lanes do not exit or for which there are no schemes in the roads programme to widen to dual four lanes are clockwise from junction 28 to junction 3.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list for (a) the Shetland maritime rescue co-ordination centre, (b) the Aberdeen maritime rescue co-ordination centre, (c) the Great Yarmouth MRCC, (d) the Dover MRCC, and (e) the Falmouth MRCC and (f) the Humber MRCC the dates in 1995 when the centre was understaffed and an unqualified senior watch officer was on duty; [36671]

(2) if he will list for the Shetland MRCC from September 1994 to January 1995 inclusive, the dates when the centre was undermanned and when an unqualified senior watch officer was on duty. [35700]

Mr. Norris: These are operational matters for the Coastguards Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from C. J. Harris to Ms. Joan Walley, dated 16 October 1995:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions as the questions deal with operational matters, for which I have responsibility as Chief Executive.

Questions 2504, 2498, 2492, 2491, 2471 and 2463/94/95 were answered in my reply of 28 september in response to your letter of 23 August, addressed directly to me (copy attached).

The following information replies to questions 2478 and 2486/94/95.

Coastguard instructions allow watches which are short by one Regular Watch Officer to be made up by using Auxiliary Coastguard Operations Room Assistants. The figures below show the dates when there was a shortfall on that provision. In many cases the shortfall was not for a full twelve hour watch.

MRCC ABERDEEN 1995:

1 Jan–1; 13 Jan–1; 16 Jan–1, 17 Jan–1; 24 Jan–1; 4 Feb–1; 6 Feb–1; 20 Feb–1; 2 Mar–1; 20 Mar–1; 26 Mar–1; 13 Apr–1; 14 Apr–1; 18 Apr–1; 19 Apr–1; 21 Apr–1; 22 Apr–1; 29 Apr–1; 1 May–1; 25 May–1; 29 May–1; 2 Jun–1; 1 Jun–1; 15 Jun–1; 16 Jun—1; 18 Jun–1; 22 Jun–1; 24 Jun–1; 2 Jul–2; 13 Jul–1; 22 Jul–1; 23 Jul–1; 26 Jul–1; 28 Jul—1; 1 Aug–Aug–1 4 Aug–1; 6 Aug–1.

MRCC Dover

1 Apr–1; 26 Jun–1; 3 Jul–1; 4 Jul–1; 14 Jul–1; 20 Jul–1; 27 Jul–1; 2 Aug–1.

During 1995—and for Shetland, from September 1994 to January 1995—there were no shortfalls in the numbers of watchkeepers at the following rescue centres; Shetland; Humber; Yarmouth; Falmouth.

There have been no occasions when a Coastguard station has been under control of an unqualified Watch Officer. Staff are selected for the post of Senior Watch Officer (SWO) and allocated to rescue centres one per watch. In their absence they are either replaced by another SWO or deputising Watch Officer. A deputising Watch Officer is a Watch Officer who is "qualified" by their initial establishment as Coastguard Officer, having successfuly completed the new entrants process and who has been approved as deputy by the Regional Management. Senior Watch Officer are required to complete a SWO (Qualifier) course run by the Coastguard Training Centre. Successful completion of this course is a perquisite to selection as SWO on a permanent basis. It is not a requirement that a deputy should have passed this course.

Letter from C. J. Harris to Ms Joan Walley, dated 28 September 1995:

Thank you for your letter of 23 August requesting information on various aspects of Coastguard Operations.

1. The number of managers to regular watch keeping staff (Watch Officers and Senior Watch Officers) at each Coastguard Rescue Centre is as follows:

Rescue Centre	Senior watch officers and watch officers	Regional or district management team
Shetland	12	3
Pentland	12	3
Aberdeen	19	5
Forth	12	3
Tyne Tees	13	3
Humber	14	3
Yarmouth	15	5
Thames	13	3
Dover	25	5
Solent	18	3
Portland	14	3
Brixham	14	3
Falmouth	16	6
Swansea	18	5
Milford Haven	13	3
Holyhead	12	3
Liverpool	14	3
Clyde	14	5
Oban	12	3
Stornoway	12	3
Belfast	13	3

District and Regional Management Teams (DMT/RMT) comprising Station Officers, District Controllers, Regional and Deputy Regional Controllers as well as Coastguard Officers (Senior Watch Officers and Watch Officers) are all "regular staff"; ie, uniformed, professional Coastguards. DMT and RMT members have an active Operations Room role in major emergencies and at any time if required.

The above figures do not include the 92 regular Sector Officers, nor the Auxiliary Coastguards who keep watch in rescue centres.

2. The required number of staff in operations rooms are as follows:

In each MRCC except Dover	1	3
In each MRSC	1	2
Dover	[1] 1 + 1	3

All New Entrant Coastguards undertake an initial training lasting approximately one year. After a short familiarisation period (usually 6 to 8 weeks) at their parent station, they undertake 6 weeks intensive training at the Training Centre. They then return to their parent station for about nine months, during which time, under the guidance of the District Management Team, they work through a taskbook compiled by the Training Centre. They return to the Training Centre for a two week revision and examination period at the end of the year. Subject to successful completion of the taskbook, the exams, an interview board and management reports, they are appointed Coastguard Watch Officers.

About two years later they could be ready to take Senior Watch Officer and Sector Officer Qualifying Courses. Passing the examinations on these courses, together with management reports indicating their fitness, qualifies them for selection to these posts.

Auxiliary Coastguard Operations Room Assistants receive 80 hours initial training locally, culminating in examinations. They receive 20 hours refresher training per annum thereafter.

3. No rescue centres have close in the last five years. The following sector bases and lookouts have closed in the last five years:

1991: three (Seaton Sluice, Tyne Tees District) (Maryport and Aberdon lookouts)

1992: five (Sizewell and Orford, Thames District) (Bass Point, Portland Bill and Whitehaven lookouts)

1993: one (Polrvan lookout)

1995: three (Prawle, Peverll Point, Fleetwood lookouts)

The above does not include the relocation of rescue centres of sector bases in new buildings or the amalgamation or sector bases (there have been 2 of these).

4. There is no specific limit on overtime other than that applied by the Regional and District Controllers to ensure that individual performance is not compromised.

5. There have been no occasions when a Coastguard station has been under the control of an unqualified Watch Officer. Staff are selected for the post of Senior Watch Officer (SWO) and allocated to rescue centres one per watch. In their absence they are either replaced by another SWO or a deputising Watch Officer. A deputising Watch Officer is a Watch Officer who is qualified by his or her initial establishment as Coastguard Officer having successfully completed the new entrant's process and who has been approved as deputy by the Regional Management. In order to be selected as SWO on a permanent basis Watch Officers are required to complete a SWO (Qualifier) course run by the Coastguard Training Centre. It is not a requirement that a deputy should have passed this course.

6. All rescue centres are equipped with rest rooms and comprehensively equipped kitchens. There is not requirement for Officers to sustain a 24 hour shift or to need sleeping accommodation.

7. The table below shows the average amounts of overtime (in hours per week) for each Region in each of the last five years. The averages include all regular watchkeeping staff, i.e, Senior Watch Officers as well as Watch Officers.

	1991	1992	1993	1994	1995
North and East Scotland	5.4	5.3	5.5	4.2	6.8
Eastern	4.4	4.6	3.9	3.5	3.4
South Eastern	2.6	2.8	2.4	1.5	1.9
South Western	5.7	5.8	4.9	4.4	5.1
Western	4.5	4.6	4.0	3.8	3.9
West of Scotland and Northern Ireland	8.7	7.4	6.7	3.8	3.6

8. The basic watch level at a rescue centre is the watch level required to meet the normal day-to-day operational commitments at that centre.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Costs

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the costs to a household of a child, aged (a) one, (b) eight and (c) 15. [36970]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: This information is not available. The cost of a child in any household will inevitably depend on a wide range of factors, including income.

Compensation Recovery

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will commission an independent review of the responses to the consultation exercise contained in the Government's reply, Cm 2997, to the Social Security Committee's fourth report of 1994–95, HC 196, on compensation recovery, in the same style as the analysis published on the Government measures to tackle discrimination against disabled people. [37470]

Mr. Roger Evans: The consultation exercise on compensation recovery is different in scale and range of groups affected to the exercise concerning measures to tackle discrimination against disabled people. I therefore have no plans to commission an independent review on this occasion.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will place in the Library copies of all responses to his consultation exercise contained in the Government's reply, Cm 2997, to the Social Security Committee's fourth report of 1994–95, HC 196, on compensation recovery, which do not specifically request that they remain confidential. [37471]

Mr. Evans: A summary of the main responses to the consultation exercise will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will place in the Library a list of the individuals and organisations who have been sent copies of the Government's reply, Cm 2997, to the Social Security Committee's fourth report of 1994–95, HC 196 on compensation recovery. [37472]

Mr. Evans: I will do so shortly.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many weeks elapsed between the publication of the fourth report from the Social Security Committee of 1994–95, HC196, on compensation recovery, and the publication of the Government's reply, Cm 2997, to that report; how many weeks he has allowed for responses to the consultation exercise on the proposals in Cm 2997, and if he will extend the deadline for receipt of responses to his consultation exercise. [37473]

Mr. Evans: The periods are 12 and six weeks respectively. The issues on which the Government are seeking views are closely tied to the Select Committee's central recommendations. When the consultation exercise ends, it is likely that those commenting will have had a total of 18 weeks to form a view on the implications of those recommendations. However, we will consider any reasonable request for an extension to the deadline where the respondent contacts the Department by 13 November.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, further to his answers of 29 November 1994, Official Report, column 625, and 27 June 1995, Official Report, column 587, if he will set out the final outturn figures on the operation of the compensation recovery unit for the financial year 1994–95; and if he will give such comparable data as he has available for the current financial year. [37474]

Mr. Evans: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Frank Field, dated 16 October 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about information relating to the operation of the Compensation Recovery Unit during the 1994/95 financial year and the first half of the 1995/96 financial year.

The information is provided in the table below:

Period	Number of cases	Total amount recovered £ million	Operating costs £ million
1/4/94–31/3/95	39,915	[1]110.1	2.8
1/4/95–30/9/95	19,874	[1]61.8	1.5

[1] These figures includes monies recovered from both final and interim settlements.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Income Support, Derby

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the number of people on income support for the city of Derby and in each of its constituent wards; [37139]

(2) what is the number of people for whom direct payments are made in respect of (a) gas, (b) electricity and (c) rent and council tax for the city of Derby and in each of its constituent wards. [37140]

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the right hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mrs. Margaret Beckett, dated 16 October 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions about the number of people receiving Income Support and the numbers for whom direct payments, in respect of gas, electricity, rent and council tax is being made, in the city of Derby and in each of its constituent wards.

Statistics are maintained on the Income Support live load for each of the Benefit Agency's Districts. These are not co-terminus with the areas covered by Parliamentary Constituencies.

The Benefits Agency's Central Derbyshire District comprises of the Derby (Becket Street) and Ilkeston offices. The Benefit Agency's South Derbyshire District comprises of the Derby (London Road) and Burton-on-Trent offices.

At the end of August this year, the figure for the number of people receiving Income Support in the Central Derbyshire District was 33,996. In the South Derbyshire District the figure was 24,527.

Appendix A provides details of the numbers of people in the Central and South Derbyshire Districts who have their fuel, rent and council tax paid direct from their Income Support. Separate statistics are not kept for gas and electricity.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Benefits Agency Mail

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidelines govern arrangements agreed between the Benefits Agency and the Post Office for Post Office employees to open mail addressed to the Benefits Agency; how many such arrangements are in place; and what training is provided for Post Office employees covered by such arrangements. [37218]

Mr. Roger Evans: This is a matter for Mr. Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Rhodri Morgan, dated 16 October 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the arrangements between the Benefits Agency (BA) and the Post Office to open mail addressed to the BA.

In taking forward the Governments Competing for Quality initiative, the BA market tested a range of accommodation and office services throughout the country. This included opening and sorting post addressed to BA offices.

Services were packaged geographically for market testing and, following competitive tender, some of the work was awarded to external suppliers and some retained in-house. Seven of the successful in-house teams have contracted out their post opening services to the Royal Mail.

The guidelines which govern the arrangements between the Royal Mail and the BA are laid down in the 'Benefits Agency Postal Security Framework'. This covers:

post receipt,

post opening,

post despatch,

mandatory checks, and discretionary checks.

The guidelines apply to all staff opening BA post, whether this is the BA's own staff, Royal Mail employees or any other external contractor.

These arrangements are clearly set out for potential bidders in the Invitation to Tender document, and are contained within the contract document between the Royal Mail and the BA.

Royal Mail staff received a minimum of one weeks initial training from the BA. Additional training is given as and when required to meet the particular needs of individual offices.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what date consent was first sought and given for the Benefits Agency to agree arrangements with the Royal Mail for Royal Mail employees to open letters addressed to the Benefits Agency, what specific conditions relating to confidentiality govern such arrangements; and if he will make a statement. [37219]

Mr. Evans: This is a matter for Mr. Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Rhodri Morgan, dated 16 October 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the date consent was first sought and given for the Benefits Agency (BA) to agree arrangements with the Royal Mail for the opening of post addressed to the BA. You also asked what specific conditions relating to confidentiality governed the arrangements.

The arrangements for each contract awarded to Royal Mail were approved by the BA's Chief Executive and Department of Social Security Ministers. Approval for the first of these contracts was given on 22 March 1994.

Confidentiality of information is governed by legislation and the conditions of contract. Section 123 of the Social Security Administration Act 1992 makes it a criminal offence to disclose personal information provided for Social Security purposes. All staff working for Royal Mail on BA business are required to sign a declaration acknowledging the provisions of Section 123. This is a condition of the contract (Condition 33) between the BA and the Royal Mail.

Contracts require that mail has to be opened under supervision in separate secure areas within the Royal Mail premises. The accommodation used for post opening is locked at all times and only staff directly involved in the contract are allowed access to the room. The contract further requires that post marked 'private', 'confidential' or 'personal' is to be passed to the BA unopened. Sorted mail is put into sealed bags and is delivered to the appropriate BA office for processing.

I enclose Appendix A which is a copy of Condition 33 of the contract and Appendix B which is a copy of the confidentiality agreement.

I hope this reply is helpful.

33.2 The Authority undertakes to treat as confidential all unpublished information supplied by the Contractor under or in connection with the Contract.

33.3 The provisions of this Condition shall not apply to any information appertaining to either party which is held in the public domain.

33.4 Section 123 of the Social Security Administration Act 1992 shall apply to this Contract. It is an offence for any Person to disclose any information obtained while carrying out the Service, where that information relates to a particular person.

33.5 The Contractor shall introduce procedures which ensure that only Approved Persons are given any information relating to the Authority's business. These procedures shall be subject to Approval.

33.6 The Contractor undertakes to store all items, and any personal data or information acquired in connection with the Contract only at Premises specifically Approved in advance.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what provision he has made to promote advice to employers via the Child Support Agency on the method of the payment of deductions from earnings orders, which will ensure that parents in care and their children receive the child maintenance due to them with minimum delay; and if he will make a statement. [37050]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Mr. Rhodri Morgan, dated 17 October 1995:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security on the subject of Deduction from Earnings Orders (DEOs).

When a DEO is issued to an employer it clearly states the amount to be deducted and when this should be paid to the Child Support Agency; it also provides guidance on the methods of payment.

Additional guidance for employers on DEOs is contained in a Child Support Agency leaflet called "Advice for Employers". I have enclosed a copy of this for you. The Agency also has an enquiry line for employers should they require further information (local rate telephone number 0345 134134) and we hold meetings with employers' representatives and payroll providers.

We have not identified any general problems or concerns with this method of payment.

Habitual Residence Test

Ms Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have been made homeless while awaiting the (a) judgment and (b) appeal of their habitual residence tests as a result of their inability to produce evidence of income while their cases were in progress.

Mr. Clappison: I have been asked to reply.

This information is not available centrally.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Transfers between Schools

12. Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement about the age of transfer between schools in Buckinghamshire. [36002]

Mr. Paice: It is for Buckinghamshire local education authority in respect of its schools and for the governing bodies of individual voluntary and grant-maintained schools to publish proposals if they wish to change their age range. My right hon. Friend will consider any such proposals on their merits. My officials stand ready to advise on the technical aspects.

Hours of Study Limit

13. Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what has been the effect of limiting permitted hours of study by recipients of social security benefits on recruitment in the further education colleges. [36003]

Mr. Forth: There has been no change in the permitted number of hours of study by current recipients of benefit. The number of students entering further education courses continues to rise, increasing by 3 per cent. in 1994–95 over the previous year.

24. Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what has been the effect on college recruitment of the changes to the 21-hour rule. [36014]

Mr. Forth: There is no intention that the introduction of job seeker's allowance in October 1996 will lead to any change in the permitted hours of study by recipients on benefits. The number of students entering further education courses continues to rise, increasing by 3 per cent. in 1994–95 over the previous year.

Jobseeker's Allowance

14. Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on the progress made in the implementation of the jobseeker's allowance. [36004]

Mr. Forth: Work is continuing on the preparations for introducing the jobseeker's allowance.

27. Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment she has made of the effect of the jobseeker's allowance on wage levels. [36017]

Mr. Forth: The jobseeker's allowance will help unemployed people to compete effectively for jobs and will therefore contribute to the general improvement in employment prospects that the country is experiencing.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what services will be provided by the Employment Service for those people who are ineligible for jobseeker's allowance and are seeking employment. [37031]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M.E.G. Fogden to Dr. Lynne Jones, dated 17 October 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about what services will be provided by the Employment Service (ES) for those people who are ineligible for Job Seekers Allowances (JSA) and are seeking employment.

There are no plans to change the nature of the services currently available for people who are not claiming benefit.

The public access employment service including vacancy displays provided by the ES through its network of Jobcentres will continue to be available to people seeking work, irrespective of whether or not they qualify for JSA.

I hope this is helpful.

Assisted Places Scheme

15. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many pupils are currently being helped by the assisted places scheme. [36005]

Mrs. Gillan: In the school year 1994–95, 29,747 pupils held assisted places under the Department's scheme in England.

Local Employment and Training Projects

16. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proposals she has to encourage local employment and training projects similar to the Allerton outreach team in Bradford. [36006]

Mr. Paice: The single regeneration budget challenge fund now enables local people to define their needs and priorities. This year we are providing £125 million to support 200 new projects. Many of these include employment and training objectives.

Unemployment

17. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the total number of unemployed people in the United Kingdom. [36007]

Mr. Forth: In August, seasonally adjusted claimant unemployment stood at 2,295,000—down by more than half a million since the labour market recovery began.

Special Needs

18. Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is her policy towards the outcomes necessary for young people with special needs on training courses. [36008]

Mr. Paice: It is the Government's policy that all young people are given the opportunity to maximise their potential.

Grant-maintained Schools

19. Mr. Merchant: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many pupils are currently being educated in grant-maintained schools. [36009]

28. Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the number of pupils who attend grant-maintained schools in the United Kingdom. [36108]

Mrs. Gillan: We estimate that more than 660,000 pupils are currently being educated in grant-maintained schools in England. The figure for the United Kingdom as a whole is more than 670,000.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what advice is given to grant-maintained schools about the operation of schools' admission and exclusion procedures in relation to Sex Discrimination Acts and Race Relations legislation. [36643]

Mr. Robin Squire: Guidance is contained in circulars 6/93, "Admissions to Maintained Schools", and 10/94, "Exclusions from School". Copies of both circulars were sent to all maintained schools and have been placed in the Library.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what are the requirements on the governing bodies of grant-maintained schools in respect of the process of consultation about proposals to alter admission arrangements. [36641]

Mr. Squire: The Department's circular 6/93, "Admissions to Maintained Schools", a copy of which was placed in the Library, advises all admission authorities to take into account local views before changing their admission arrangements.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what capital funds have been provided to grant-maintained schools for emergencies outside the normal annual bidding round; to which schools; and for what purpose in each of the financial years 1990–91 to 1994–95. [35811]

Mr. Squire: These matters are now the responsibility of the Funding Agency for Schools. I have asked the chairman of the Funding Agency to write to the hon. Member with this information.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) primary and (b) secondary school governing bodies were under a duty to consider whether to conduct a parental ballot on grant-maintained status during the 1994–95 school year; how many ballots have been held in (i) primary and (ii) secondary schools since 1 September; and, in each case, how many resulted in votes in favour of grant-maintained status and how many resulted in votes against. [35810]

Mr. Squire: We estimate that the governing bodies of about 18,200 primary schools and 3,000 secondary schools were under a duty to consider whether to conduct a parental ballot on grant-maintained status during the 1994–95 school year. The overwhelming majority determined that they would not conduct such a ballot. The number of ballots held and their outcome during the same period is as follows:

Type of school	Number of ballots held	Number of ballots in favour	Number of ballots against
Primary	59	37	22
Secondary	26	13	13

Ministerial Duties

20. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the most significant finding she has made since assuming the duties of the Department of Employment. [36010]

Mr. Forth: That the integration of policies for education and employment will increase Britain's competitiveness by raising education and skills levels, advancing knowledge and promoting a flexible and efficient labour market—in particular, by providing a single focus on young people in the crucial years between 14 and 19.

Nursery Education Vouchers

21. Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many local authorities have so far volunteered to take part in phase 1 of the nursery education voucher scheme. [36011]

Mr. Robin Squire: As I announced earlier, Kensington and Chelsea, Wandsworth, and Westminster have confirmed their decision to take part in the first phase of the voucher scheme, beginning in April 1996.

I hope to add to this list in the near future.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her oral statement of 6 July, Official Report, columns 517-19, in respect of the provision for providers to borrow capital for premises against the value of voucher income, who she envisages will underwrite such loans. [36152]

Mr. Squire: As the Secretary of State previously stated, we envisage that borrowing or similar arrangements will take place on the strength of the anticipated voucher income. Any additional underwriting of the loans will be a matter for negotiation in the normal commercial way.

Modern Apprenticeship Scheme

22. Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement regarding the operation of the modern apprenticeship scheme. [36012]

Mr. Paice: Modern apprenticeships are now available in more than 50 sectors. Many employers are offering places nationwide and recruitment of young people for this year's intake is well under way.

School Transport (Finance)

23. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to compel local authorities to finance the cost of transport of children to grammar schools. [36013]

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has no plans to change the current statutory position whereby local education authorities have a duty to provide free transport to the nearest suitable school for pupils who live beyond the designated walking distances.

Higher and Further Education

25. Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of school leavers in England go on to higher and further education.

Mr. Forth: Almost 80 per cent. of 16-year-olds go on to further education. Approaching 30 per cent. of young people enter full-time higher education.

Internet

26. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will give details of her Department's initiatives to augment public access to Internet information and training. [36016]

Mr. Robin Squire: The UK Education Departments' super-highways initiative was launched earlier this year. As part of this, our consultation paper "Superhighways for Education" considered the use of network connections, including the Internet, in all sectors of education and sought views widely. We shall be announcing the outcome later this year, including plans to evaluate a series of projects piloting innovative communication technologies in education. Work is also in progress on the potential of super-highways to deliver training.

Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the arrangements and practice of statementing of children suffering from attention deficit disorder and similar conditions in schools; and if he will make a statement; [36655]

(2) if she will examine what measures could be put in place to equip schools to deal more effectively with children suffering from attention deficit disorder and attention deficit hyperactivity disorder; [36649]

(3) what assessment she has made of the significance of attention deficit hyperactivity disorder in explaining withdrawal of children from state education in favour of home tuition; and if she will make a statement. [36650]

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Member to the replies that I gave him on 24 January 1995, Official Report, columns 166–67 and on 26 June 1995, Official Report, columns 503–4.

Pupil Medication

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what guidelines and controls exist regarding decisions by head teachers on the giving of medication in schools; and if she will make a statement. [36653]

Mr. Forth: Many schools and local education authorities already have policies on giving medication in schools. The Department is currently consulting on general guidance for LEAs, schools and teachers on managing children with a range of medical conditions, including administering medication. It is intended that this guidance will draw together much of the good practice already followed by some schools and LEAs.

Class Sizes

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what his her Department's latest estimate of the number of children in (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools in England and Wales that are being taught in classes of over 30 pupils. [35997]

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The number of pupils in England in single-teacher classes of 31 pupils over in January 1995 was just under 1.2 million in maintained primary schools and 201,000 in maintained secondary schools.

Information on class sizes in Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage, and how many primary school pupils were in classes of more than 30 in January in each local education authority and in total; and what was the actual and percentage change in numbers compared with January 1994 in each local education authority and in total. [36759]

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is shown in the table.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many public interest immunity certificates her Department has issued in each year since 1986. [36691]

Mr. Forth: One certificate was issued in 1991 and one in 1992 in civil court cases to which the then Secretary of State for Education was a party.

Travel Allowances

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what rates of travel allowance may be claimed by civil servants in her Department when using their vehicles for official business. [36353]

Mr. Robin Squire: Two rates are payable depending on the circumstances of the journey involved. The public transport rate is 23p to 23.8p per mile. The standard mileage rate is 35.7p to 46p per mile up to the first 5,000 miles and 18p to 30p per mile thereafter, depending on engine size.

Dr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the total cost of travel expenses claimed by civil servants using their own vehicles for official business in each of the last five years in her Department; and what would have been the saving in the last year if the maximum rate that could be claimed was set at the lowest rate. [36354]

Mr. Squire: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Pupil Costs

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the average expenditure per primary school and per secondary school pupil of (a) all London boroughs, (b) all metropolitan counties and (c) all other English and Welsh counties. [36773]

Mr. Robin Squire: The table sets out for each local education authority in England and Wales the net institutional expenditure per pupil in LEA-maintained pre-primary/primary and secondary schools for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the average unit cost per pupil for part-time provision in (a) nursery schools, (b) nursery classes in primary schools and (c) playgroups, at the latest available date. [36175]

Mr. Robin Squire: The table shows estimates of unit costs in maintained schools for 1993–94, based on the assumption that part-time pupils attend for half the normal attendance time of full-time pupils, and, on average, cost half as much as a full-time pupil.

Equal Opportunities

Mrs. Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proposals she has to promote the equal treatment of women. [35891]

Mrs. Gillan: The Government will continue to promote the interests of women at work, in education and beyond, and to promote effective equality of opportunity at work. In addition to a strong legislative base, this policy has meant that the United Kingdom has one of the lowest rates of women's unemployment in the European Union, and that the gap between men's and women's earnings continues to narrow.

Dance Education

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when she expects to reach a decision on the future of discretionary awards for dance education. [37169]

Mr. Forth: The Government are continuing to review this issue. Any plans for change would be announced to Parliament in the usual way.

Postgraduate Students

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many postgraduate students during the current academic year received the maximum contribution towards their bills; and what percentage this was of the total number of post-graduates; [37303]

(2) what proportion of British postgraduate students during the last academic year received a state grant for maintenance. [37249]

Mr. Forth: Information is not available in the form requested.

In the academic year 1993–94, the latest year for which data are available, there were 43,800 postgraduate award holders in the United Kingdom—22 per cent. of the postgraduate population. Information on the level of maintenance paid is not collected by the Department for all these award holders.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, how many postgraduate students during the last academic year received support from access funds; and what was the average level of support. [37250]

Mr. Forth: Information for the last academic year will be available later in the year.

During the academic year 1993–94, 9,267 postgraduate students at higher education institutions in England received support from the access funds. On average, these students receive £463 each.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, what estimate her Department has of the average amount of the careers development loans currently held by postgraduates. [37254]

Mr. Forth: The average loan amount for career development loans approved for postgraduates currently in training is £4,429.39.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of British postgraduates during the last academic year paid their own tuition fees. [37302]

Mr. Forth: Figures for the academic year 1994–95 show that at 31 December 1995 there were 231,000 United Kingdom-domiciled postgraduates—full time and part time in UK higher education institutions, including the Open university, of whom 35 per cent. paid their own tuition fees.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, what estimate her Department has of the number of postgraduate students in British universities during the last academic year; and what proportion of these students were British born and educated. [37301]

Mr. Forth: Figures for the academic year 1994–95 show that at 31 December 1995, there were 290,000 full-time and part-time postgraduate students in United Kingdom higher education institutions, including the Open university, of which 80 per cent. were domiciled in the UK.

Public Access Job-broking Service

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on the future of the public access job-broking service; how many stand-alone offices providing such a service were in use in (a) 1980 (b) 1985, (c) 1990 and (d) 1995; and if she will list the year of closure of each office and its location. [37205]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Rhodri Morgan, dated 17 October 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the future of the public access job broking service and the stand alone offices providing such a service.

We do not maintain detailed records concerning the numbers of offices although I am able to advise that at the start of the project in 1989/90 to integrate our benefit offices and Jobcentres, the Employment Service (ES) had a total of 1,800 offices. By the end of 1990, 300 integrated offices had been opened. This number has risen to 950 by September this year. The total number of offices is currently 1,124.

It is expected that the public access job broking service will continue to be provided by the ES as at present. The current system is geared to the needs of unemployed people, particularly those at a disadvantage in the labour market. It is also used by people seeking to change work, including those facing redundancy.

The service will be enhanced by a new computer system, the Labour Market System (LMS), which is being piloted in some Jobcentres at present. National implementation of LMS is scheduled to take place during 1996.

LMS will, for the first time, give Jobcentre people access to client, job opportunities, programme and other information via one computer system. This will enable us to provide a more professional service to all our clients, through for example, searching for suitable vacancies or opportunities quickly and easily.

Availability for Work Rules

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what guidance and instructions apply in respect of people deemed capable of work under the all-work test when such people are unable to work full time as defined by the availability for work regulations. [37026]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Dr. Lynne Jones, dated 17 October 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about what guidance and instructions apply in respect of people deemed capable of work under the all work test when such people are unable to work full time as defined by the availability for work regulations.

It may help if I explain that the receipt of unemployment benefits is conditional upon a person being available for and actively seeking employment. This means that they must be available to start work immediately; must not place such restrictions on the work they are willing to do which would leave them with no real prospects of finding a job and must take those steps, each week, which offer them their best prospects of obtaining work.

Unemployed clients are not required to work full-time. Indeed there is no definition of "full-time" in the unemployment benefit regulations. However they must be available to work some hours every day they claim benefit.

If a client imposes restrictions on any of the conditions of employment they are willing to accept, they may nevertheless satisfy the availability for work condition provided they have reasonable prospects of getting a job within those restrictions. However, if a client with health problems or disability imposes restrictions, and those restrictions are reasonable in view of their physical and, or, mental condition, they do not have to satisfy the requirement of having reasonable prospects.

People who have been deemed capable of work as a result of the all work test for incapacity benefit and who subsequently claim unemployment benefits, are seen by one of my client advisers. I recognise that people who have been taken off incapacity benefit may need specialist help to get back to work. In addition to the extra programmes and opportunities introduced for these clients, I have also issued my advisers with additional guidance to help them understand the problems faced by these clients, many of whom will have been out of the labour market for some time. As well as informing clients about jobs and other opportunities open to them, my people will agree with them the type of work they can reasonably be expected to do. My advisers will also explain the availability and actively seeking employment conditions and advise clients what they must do in order to satisfy these conditions.

If an adviser decides that a client needs more specialised help, they may refer them to a Disability Employment Adviser who is specially trained to advise people with health problems or disability which may affect their ability to get, and hold down, a job.

I hope this is helpful.

Jobcentre, Kings Norton

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, what current plans there are to open an Employment Service jobcentre in Kings Norton, Birmingham. [37032]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Dr. Lynne Jones, Dated 17 October 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question regarding any current plans to open an Employment Service Jobcentre in Kings Norton, Birmingham.

The Employment Service has no plans at present to open a Jobcentre in Kings Norton itself. At present unemployed clients who live in the Kings Norton catchment area are handled by Selly Oak Employment Service Jobcentre.

I hope this is helpful.

Employment Service Staff

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what reductions in staffing levels in the Employment Service are planned in (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98 and (c) 1998–99; and how many of these are as a result of targeted efficiency savings arising from the introduction of the jobseeker's allowance; [37030]

(2) what is the planned number of staff to be transferred from the Employment Service to the Benefits Agency to administer the jobseeker's allowance. [37029]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Dr. Lynne Jones, dated 17 October 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the planned staffing levels in the Employment Services (ES) over the next four years and the expected numbers who will transfer from ES to the Benefit Agency (BA) to process Job Seekers Allowance (JSA) payments.

The latest estimates available of staffing in the ES over the years in question are contained in the Employment Department's 1995 Departmental Report, a copy of which is in the library. As at March 1995, the estimates for staffing in 1996–97 were 40,960 and 39,148 in 1997–98. No estimate was made for 1998–99.

These figures are being looked at again as part of this year's Public Expenditure Survey and are likely to change, particularly because under the JSA responsibility for paying unemployment benefits will transfer from the ES to BA. This will help streamline the administrative process. However, there is no target for specific efficiency savings in staff numbers as a result of the introduction of the JSA.

Currently, within the JSA Project, design work is being done on the business processes for its implementation, Each business process details the activities which need to be done in order to complete a specific task, for example Taking a New Claim from a Jobseeker.

From these business processes, we will be able to assess the number of people required to transfer from ES to BA to process payment of JSA. This area of work is ongoing and numbers have yet to be finalised.

I hope this is helpful.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list (a) the number of (i) male and (ii) female employees, (b) the number of officials employed at each of the principal grades and the numbers and percentages of women employed at these grades and (c) the number of staff employed at administrative grades and the number and percentages of these staff that are women, in her Department and for each of the executive agencies for each year since 1985. [35683]

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 19 July 1995]: Figures for the former Employment Department Group and its executive agency, the Employment Service, can be found in table 5 of "Civil Service Statistics", a copy of which is available in the Library. Figures for 1995 will be published later this year.

Figures for the former Department for Education, which are not shown separately in "Civil Service Statistics", are set out in the table for 1993 to 1995. Figures for previous years could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Head Teacher Training

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what procedures exist for ensuring that training providers measure up to the standards envisaged in head teacher training. [36270]

Mr. Robin Squire: I will ask the chairman of the Teacher Training Agency to write to the hon. Member about the quality assurance procedures applied to Headlamp training providers.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, what advice she decides the training needs of newly qualified head teachers. [36274]

Mr. Squire: The Headlamp scheme allows governors and head teachers to decide the specific training needs to be met under the scheme. I will ask the chairman of the Teacher Training Agency to write to the hon. Member about the general Headlamp criteria.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what organisations her Department plans to involve in the Headlamp scheme; and what expertise each brings to this work; [36284]

(2) how many teachers she expects to take part in the Headlamp scheme in its first year of operation; [36294]

(3) of those teachers taking part in Headlamp during its first year how many (a) are practising head teachers and (b) are practising deputy heads; [36295]

(4) what consultation has taken place with (a) teacher unions, (b) school governors or bodies representing them and (c) parents and bodies representing them in developing the Headlamp programme. [36271]

Mr. Squire: The development and management of Headlamp is a matter for the Teacher Training Agency. I will ask the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, what is the expected cost of the Headlamp scheme in (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97; and what was the budgetary provision for the training of head teachers in 1994–95. [36292]

Mr. Squire: In the grant for education support and training programme for 1994–95, £1.3 million was made available for head teacher mentoring. Schools and local education authorities could also support headteacher training from the separate GEST support for school management, totalling £22.4 million. In the GEST programme for 1995–96, these are covered by school effectiveness grant, which supports expenditure of £121.5 million. Grant-maintained schools may use special purpose grant (development) to pay for head teacher training. I will ask the chairman of the Teacher Training Agency to write to the hon. Member about the expected cost of Headlamp .

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, on what criteria she decides the training needs of newly qualified head teachers. [36275]

Mr. Squire: The Headlamp scheme allows governors and head teachers to decide the specific training needs to be met under the scheme. I will ask the chairman of the Teacher Training Agency to write to the hon. Member about the general Headlamp criteria.

School Advertising

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what rules exist governing the use of broadcast advertising by schools seeking to attract pupils to enrol. [36173]

Mr. Robin Squire: Schools are not prohibited from broadcast advertising and educational services in general are not unacceptable under the Independent Television Commission code. But any advertisements for schools would be subject to the same rules as apply to all other advertisements under the code.

Departmental Buildings

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what are the rental charges and associated costs on her Department's premises, Sanctuary Buildings, Great Smith street. [35777]

Mr. Robin Squire: In the current financial year, the rental charges and associated costs amount to £12.9 million.

Students with Disabilities

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many physically disabled people there are over (a) 18 and (b) 30 years of age currently engaged in higher or further education. [36141]

Mr. Forth: Provisional estimates for 1994–95 indicate that 44,200 students with all types of learning difficulties and/or disabilities aged 18 or over, were engaged in further education. Of these, 26,500 were aged 30 or over. Specific information on the numbers of students with physical disabilities is not collected centrally. Information on the numbers of such students in higher education is currently not held centrally.

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when she expects the Further Education Funding Council to publish a definitive policy for physically disabled students; and if she will make a statement on her policy in this area. [36140]

Mr. Forth: The Further Education Funding Council has established its learning difficulties and/or disabilities committee to advise the council on how it can best fulfil its legal responsibilities towards students with learning difficulties and disabilities. The committee will report to the FEFC in 1996. The FEFC has published its policy about provision for students with disabilities in a number of circulars.

The Government's policy is that learning difficulty or disability should not be a bar to access to further education. The provisions in education legislation governing further education for people with disabilities are comprehensive, covering the complementary responsibilities of the FEFC, local education authorities and educational institutions. They recognise the requirement to make available further education which is appropriate to the needs of individual students, in an accessible setting with associated support.

The Government plan to build on these provisions through the current Disability Discrimination Bill by placing a duty on the FEFC to require further education sector colleges, as a condition of grant, to produce disability statements outlining their provisions for disabled students. The FEFC will also be required annually to report to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on its progress to date and future plans for the provision of further education for students with disabilities.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing Transfers, East Hampshire

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about irregularities in the conduct of the consultation with tenants over the proposed large-scale voluntary transfer of housing in East Hampshire district council.

Mr. Clappison: Six letters have been received complaining that the consultation period was too short and alleging that the council's campaign was biased towards the transfer. Of these, four were from the Liphook Tenants Association. The Secretary of State carefully considers all objections before deciding whether to give his consent to a transfer.

Valuation Appeals

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out in total and by each valuation office the number of appeals that have been received against council tax bandings; how many have been resolved; how many remain outstanding; when he estimates this process will be completed; and if he will make a statement. [37497]

Sir Paul Beresford: I am placing in the Library a table which sets out, by valuation office region and office in England, the number of valid proposals to alter the valuation list which were received by 30 September 1995, the number settled and the number outstanding.

Virtually all proposals received during the initial appeal period, up to 30 November 1993, have now been settled. The Valuation Office Agency currently receives around 8,000 proposals to alter valuation lists each month, and aims, in co-operation with the valuation tribunals, to settle all cases received after 1 April 1995 within 12 months of receipt.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out in total and by each valuation office the number of appeals that have been received against the 1995 rating list; how many have been resolved; how many remain outstanding; when he estimates that this process will be completed; and if he will make a statement. [37498]

Sir Paul Beresford: I am placing in the Library a table which sets out, by valuation office region and office in England, the number of valid proposals to alter the 1995 rating lists which were received by 30 September, the number settled and the number outstanding.

It is still too early to gauge with any accuracy the volume and timing of appeals against the entries in the 1995 lists, which may be made at any time, in some cases up to 31 March 2001.

Sites of Nature Conservation Importance

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the procedures for designating SNCI areas which lie on privately owned land; and what is his policy on voluntary co-operation and compulsory obligation. [37573]

Mr. Clappison: The Government encourage local authorities to identify and adopt appropriate policies in their development plans to protect such sites from inappropriate development. In accord with the voluntary principles of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 local authorities may enter into management agreements. In the last resort they have powers of compulsory purchase, subject to the approval of the Secretary of State for sites of particular local importance.

Local Government, Leicestershire

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest position on local government reorganisation in Leicestershire. [37940]

Sir Paul Beresford: During the summer the social services inspectorate has considered the capability of a unitary Rutland to fulfil its responsibilities for social services. The inspectorate has now completed its report and is content that Rutland will be a viable social services authority.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Public Library Guidance

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will make a statement about the issue of public library guidance to local authorities. [38350]

Mr. Sproat: Following consultation with public librarians and the local authority associations, I have authorised today publication of guidance to local authorities about the provision of public library services. The guidance is intended to help in particular those authorities assuming public library responsibilities for the first time following reorganisation of local government in the English shire counties. Printing and despatch of copies to all English library authorities and other interested parties will take place over the next few days. Meanwhile, I have deposited advance copies in the Library of the house and I have sent one to the Library Association.

Tourism

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans she has to promote the South West tourist industry in the coming year. [36721]

Mr. Sproat: Government support for tourism is channelled through the statutory British Tourist Authority and English tourist board. Through the ETB, support is made available to the 11 non-statutory regional tourist boards, including the West Country tourist board, which helps them undertake a variety of marketing and development activities of benefit to the tourism industry in their regions. The WCTB received a subvention of £614,073 from the ETB in 1994–95.

Tourism in south west England will also benefit from the overseas marketing work of the BTA and from the action programme announced earlier this year in my Department's document, "Tourism: Competing with the Best".

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proportion of each English region's economy is estimated to be generated by the tourist sector. [36717]

Mr. Sproat: Figures for tourism's contribution to each region's economy are not available. However, the figures for the number of employees in tourism-related industries, when shown as a proportion of the total number of employees in employment, give an indication of the importance of tourism in that region. The figures provided are for the latest month available and have been calculated on a new basis following changes to the standard employment classifications. The figures for each English region at June 1995 were:

	Number of employees in tourism related industries	Total number of employees in employment	Percentage of total number of employees employed in tourism related industries Percentage
Greater London	229,000	3,189,000	7
Rest of South East	264,000	3,914,000	7
South West	151,000	1,762,000	9
East Anglia	52,000	819,000	6
North	83,000	1,090,000	8
North West	169,000	2,284,000	7
Yorkshire and Humberside	135,000	1,854,000	7
East Midlands	102,000	1,527,000	7
West Midlands	118,000	1,979,000	6

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Bermuda

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what amount Her Majesty's Government have paid to Bermuda in each of the last three financial years in respect of (a) development projects, (b) administration and (c) other services. [37061]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We have made no payments to Bermuda in each of the last three financial years in respect of any of the categories mentioned.

Territorial Waters

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the delineation of the territorial sea boundaries between the United Kingdom and (a) France, (b) Belgium and (c) the Irish Republic. [37286]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The agreement with France relating to the territorial sea boundary in the straits of Dover, Cm 733, entered into force on 6 April 1989. The territorial seas of the United Kingdom and Belgium do not meet, but there is an agreement for the delimitation of the continental shelf between the United Kingdom and Belgium, Cm 2499. The delimitation of the continental shelf between the United Kingdom and the Irish Republic is the subject of a 1988 agreement, Cm 990 and a 1992 protocol, Cm 2227.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many nautical square miles of the United Kingdom's territorial seas are claimed by the Irish Republic in its constitution; and what percentage of the total United Kingdom territorial seas that represents. [37287]

Mr. Rifkind: We do not recognise the claim by the Irish Republic to Northern Ireland or its territorial sea. No delimination of Northern Ireland waters has taken place as the British and Irish Governments have not discussed this issue. In the circumstances the information requested is not available and cannot accurately be calculated.

Montserrat (Volcanic Activity)

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about problems facing Montserrat because of the threatened volcanic eruption; and if present rules for Montserratians entering the United Kingdom will be waived for a short period. [37285]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: Since mid-July, scientists have been monitoring closely the volcanic activity on Montserrat and keeping Her Majesty's Government and the local Government advised on the likelihood of a major eruption. Contingency plans are in place for a partial or full evacuation of threatened areas of the island, depending on the gravity of the situation.

Immigration matters are for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department. Applications from Montserratians will continue to be considered under the immigration rules, having regard to all the relevant circumstances.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has received from the European Commission regarding its application of articles 34, 35, 36 and 37, respectively, of the Euratom treaty to French nuclear tests. [37327]

Mr. David Davis: We have received no formal communication on this subject from the European Commission. However, we are aware of bilateral contacts between the Commission and the French Government on this issue.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the issues in regard to nuclear testing discussed at the informal Foreign Affairs General Council meeting in Santander on 9 and 10 September. [37256]

Mr. Davis: The informal meeting at Santander was an opportunity for confidential discussion between European Union Foreign Ministers. I do not intend to make a statement on specific issues discussed.

European Ombudsman

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many candidates were considered by the European Parliament for the post of European ombudsman; what was the procedure under which candidates were asked to apply; what is the salary of the ombudsman; and how many staff he will employ. [47194]

Mr. David Davis: Six candidates were considered by the European Parliament for the post of ombudsman. The procedures for the appointment of the ombudsman are set out in the European Parliament's decision of 9 March 1994, Official Journal of the European Communities-Legislation, volume 113 of 4 May 1994, pages 15-18, and the European Parliament's rules of procedures 159, as amended on 16 May 1995, 160 and 161. Copies have been placed in the House Library. Article 10(2) of the European Parliament's decision to appoint the ombudsman states that the ombudsman will have the same salary and benefits as a judge at the European Court of Justice. The ombudsman currently employs one member of staff, but is entitled to increase this to 10.

EU Overseas Citizens

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the rules (a) relating to migration to European Community states by Dutch Caribbean, Spanish African and French Overseas Department residents. [37284]

Mr. David Davis: The rules governing the entry and stay in member states of the European Union of persons from the Dutch Caribbean, Spanish Africa or French overseas department depend on the nationality held by the individual resident, not only the status of a particular territory. Nationals of the Netherlands, Spain and France, like other nationals of member states of the European economic area, which comprises the EU member states plus Iceland, Norway and Liechtenstein, are free to enter other member states to take employment, to establish themselves in self-employment or business, or to provide or receive services for payment. They are also entitled to reside in member states in a non-economic capacity, provided that they have sufficient resources to avoid becoming a burden on public funds.

Iraqi Weapons Programmes

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information has been provided to Her Majesty's Government by the Jordanian authorities or the United States Government on the status of the Iraqi nuclear, biological and chemical weapons programmes following the defections from the Iraqi Government and debriefing of Hussein Kamil Hassan and Saddam Kamil Hassan in August. [37338]

Mr. David Davis: It would not be appropriate to comment on our contacts with other countries on this matter. However, the UNSCOM and IAEA reports on the implementation of resolutions 687 and 715, presented to the UN Security Council on 11 October 1995, take account of useful information given by Hussein Kamil and describe developments following his defection and the subsequent disclosure by Iraq of large quantities of documents relating to past weapons programmes. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Northern Ireland (Broadcasting Penetration)

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures are proposed to effect the greater penetration of Northern Ireland by Telefis Eireann; and what changes are required and have been put into effect by the authorities in the Irish Republic to bring about equal and reciprocal transmission of United Kingdom terrestrial channels. [37164]

Mr. Rifkind: Greater penetration of RTE into Northern Ireland could be achieved by a number of means, notably cable, satellite and through changes to the terrestrial UHF networks in the two countries. The British Government fully support RTE's wish to enhance its service to Northern Ireland, but there are certain technical difficulties. British and Irish officials are discussing the possible solutions but have not reached any agreed conclusions.

As a result of decisions taken by the Irish authorities planning the RTE transmitter network, UK terrestrial channels can be received in many parts of the Republic of Ireland from transmitters in the UK.

UK Dependent Territories

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current population of each of the United Kingdom's dependent territories, excluding Hong Kong. [37282]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my hon. Friend the Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry) gave to the hon. Member for Thurrock (Mr. Mackinlay) on 8 February 1995, Official Report, column 285.

European Parliament (Cost)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the estimated cost of the European Parliament in 1995; and if he will list the allowances payable to members. [37153]

Mr. David Davis: The budget of the European Parliament for 1995 is 843 million ecu or £703.4 million. This includes operational costs for 723 million ecu or £603.4 million, and special capital costs of 120 million ecu or £100.1 million for the new offices of the European Parliament in Brussels.

The following allowances are available to Members in 1995:

Telephone and fax—unlimited use from European Parliament offices.

Travel—within the union, 0.76 ecu or £0.634 for every km up to 400 km, and 0.38 ecu or £0.317 for every km thereafter. Outside the Union, the cost of the return air fare by the most direct route.

Subsistence on official travel—within the Union 213 ecu or £177.75 per day. Half this amount, plus hotel costs, outside the Union.

General office expenses—2,926 ecu or £2,441.75 per month.

Secretarial assistance—8,000 ecu or £6,676 per month.

Cyprus (EU Accession)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to what extent the admission of Cyprus to the EU would affect Britain's obligations and rights as a guarantor. [37160]

Mr. David Davis: The UK remains committed to its role as guarantor. We shall continue to keep under review any possible implications for that role of developments on an intercommunal settlement and the future EU accession negotiations.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Betts: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the rights of individual members of the public to make complaints to any of the appropriate ombudsmen about services or projects funded through the private finance initiative in his Department. [36825]

Mr. Lang: The parliamentary ombudsman has, subject to the conditions of the Parliamentary Commissioner Act 1967, jurisdiction to investigate complaints from members of the public about maladministration by Government Departments, other public sector bodies engaged in the work of central Government, and those acting on their behalf. As a consequence, the ombudsman can investigate complaints of maladministration about any projects or service carried out by or on behalf of the Department of Trade and Industry that are funded through the private finance initiative.

Travel Allowances

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what rates of travel allowance may be claimed by civil servants in his Department when using their own vehicles for official business. [36359

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Civil servants in DTI using their own vehicle for official business are entitled to claim the following rates for motor mileage allowance:

	Engine size
	up to 1500cc	1501–2000cc	over 2000cc
Up to 4,000 miles (Standard Rate)	34p	43p	46p
Over 4,000 miles (Lower Standard rate)	19p	23p	31p
Rates payable from 6 April 1995

Dr. Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the total cost of travel expenses claimed by civil servants using their own vehicles for official business in each of the last five years in his Department; and what would have been the saving in the last year if the maximum rate that could be claimed was set at the lowest rate. [36360]

Mr. Evans: The DTI does not record mileage separately from other travel and subsistence expenses paid on official business. To provide the information requested would entail disproportionate cost.

Exports

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate his Department has made of the volume and value in percentage terms of exports in (a) cars, (b) televisions and (c) video recorders made last year by foreign companies which have invested in production in Britain. [37418]

Mr. Page: My Department has not made estimates concerning exports of individual products based on whether or not the manufacturer is a British-owned company. Information obtained from the British Radio and Electronic Equipment Manufacturers Association indicates that all televisions and video recorders exported from the UK were made by foreign-owned companies.

Statutory Consumer Councils

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what provisions of the treaty of Rome, as amended, and any consequential regulation or directive constrain the sole duties or activities of statutory consumer councils as established and operating prior to preparations for, or changes consequent to, accession to the treaty. [37260]

Mr. Jonathan Evans [holding answer 16 October 1995]: I am not aware of any such constraints on the duties and activities of the statutory consumer councils.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Departmental Minutes

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the three departmental minutes which the Overseas Development Administration laid before the House during the summer recess. [38446]

Mr. Hanley: The departmental minutes refer to projects which are being supported by the Overseas Development Administration under the aid and trade provision soft loan financing arrangements which enable the banks to lend at concessional rates. Under new arrangements for ATP agreed in 1992, the ODA pays the aid portion of a soft loan to the bank or banks making the loan during the implementation period of the project, rather than, as previously, during the period over which the soft loan is disbursed. The former is much shorter than the latter. As a result, the banks would be exposed to additional charges if the tax regime relating to the lump sum payments were to change over the disbursement period of the loan. To safeguard the banks against such a potential liability the ODA provides an indemnity against possible tax changes. This indemnity creates a contingent liability on the aid programme, which therefore falls to be reported to Parliament.

The departmental minutes reported the estimated cost of these contingent liabilities as a result of making concessional loans to developing countries to finance the following projects:

Country	Project	Amount of Liability £
Thailand	Mini Hydros	1,346,909
Indonesia	Samarinda Power Plant	3,856,568
Indonesia	Samarinda Transmission Line	500,778
Indonesia	Piston Engine Research Laboratory	1,436,633
China	New Nanjing Airport	2,657,844

The contingent liabilities for projects 1 and 2 were incurred in, respectively, August 1994 and March 1995 and it is regretted that they were not brought to the attention of the House at the proper time. Those for projects 3, 4 and 5 were incurred during the summer recess. It was necessary to give the indemnities urgently to avoid delaying the start of the projects. The minutes were placed in the Libraries of both Houses and copies were sent to the Public Accounts Committee and the Foreign Affairs Committee.

Comoros Islands

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what support he has received for the appraisal mission, sponsored by the World bank executive board, to the Comoros Islands in September, with particular reference to the coelacanth and other endangered species. [37397]

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 16 October 1995]: Following the World bank—United Nations development programme appraisal mission in September, it is envisaged that a request for funding for a project to protect the coelacanth and other endangered species will be submitted by UNDP to the global environment facility. The report will be available in due course through the World bank's public information centre. I will arrange for copies to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses when it is available.

Commodity Exchanges

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance has been given by (a) his Department and (b) EU aid to establish or develop commodity exchanges for cocoa, coffee or sugar in developing countries; and if he will list the date, location and value of any aid projects of this type approved by his Department or the EU in the past five years. [34301]

Mr. Hanley [pursuant to his answer, 13 July 1995, c. 688–89]: We have been unable to obtain a list of EU-funded projects which directly support either commodity exchanges for cocoa, coffee or sugar or these particular markets in developing countries.

Two EU-funded projects have supported commodity marketing and development in developing countries:

Cote d'Ivoire: Grant 12 mecu: construction of wholesale market at Bouake (agricultural products)

All African, Caribbean and Pacific states, overseas countries and territories: Grant 7.75 mecu: grant to assist marketing and sales and promotion of their products.

TRANSPORT

A3 Trunk Road

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures his Department has taken to reduce noise volume for residents on the A3 trunk road in the region of Onslow village, Guildford; and if he will make on-site assessments of the noise level following the completion of recent works with particular reference to the effect of the laying of porous asphalt. [37574]

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to my right hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. David Howell, dated 18 October 1995:

As you know, the Minister for Railways and Roads, Mr. John Watts, has asked me to write in reply to your Parliamentary Question asking what measures have been taken to reduce noise volume for residents on the A3 trunk road in the region of Onslow Village, Guildford; and if on-site assessments of the noise level will be made following the completion of recent works with particular reference to the effect of the laying of porous asphalt.

The Highways Agency has provided noise barriers and porous asphalt to limit noise levels from the A3 trunk road at the worst affected properties in the region of Onslow Village.

An evaluation to the effect of these noise measures has been carried out using the calculation procedures prescribed in the Noise Insulation Regulations. The calculation method is preferred because it applies a consistent technique for assessment which overcomes the many variables that affect noise over a period of time. The Agency has no proposals for carrying out on-site assessments.

MOT Hotline

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the MOT hotline was established; how many calls it has received each year and for the first six months of 1995–96; what is the cost of running the scheme; and what income the scheme receives from the hotline number. [37502]

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Vehicle Inspectorate executive agency.

I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ron Oliver to Mr. Paddy Tipping, dated 18 October 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question on when the MOT hotline was established, the number of calls it has received, the cost of running the scheme and the income the scheme receives from the hotline number.

The scheme was introduced in September 1994. Since that date there have been 14,521 calls made to the hotline, of which 6,347 were made in the first 6 months of 1995 (ie January to June). The costs of running the scheme for the first year were approximately £5,500, and the income £3,425.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Justice and Home Affairs Council

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Justice and Home Affairs Council held on 25 and 26 September. [38347]

Mr. Howard: The United Kingdom was represented at the Council by the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department. The main matters dealt with at the Council were as follows.

The Council adopted as "A" points, among other things, a regulation establishing a common visa list, a resolution on burden sharing of refugees, an action programme for judicial co-operation with the central and eastern European states and a decision on funding operational activity in the third pillar.

The Council discussed in an open session the principle issues raised by the draft convention on enforcement of decisions and rules of jurisdiction in matrimonial matters, known as the Brussels II convention. It agreed that work would continue on developing the convention, and that a new draft text should be submitted for consideration by the Justice and Home Affairs Council in November.

The text of a draft convention on insolvency proceedings was initialled by the representatives of all member states. The presidency hoped that the convention would be ready for signature at the Justice and Home Affairs Council in November.

The Council welcomed in principle a draft joint action against racism and xenophobia. The purpose of the instrument would be to promote a comparable response by member states' criminal justice systems to racist and xenophobic acts committed within the European Union. The subject was examined by Ministers at the Informal Council on 14 and 15 October, with a view to concluding the joint action at the November Justice and Home Affairs Council.

The Council discussed a number of points arising from the negotiations on the draft regulations implementing the Europol convention, and agreed that work should continue on them at official level.

The Council considered requests from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for the temporary protection of refugees and displaced persons from the former Yugoslavia. The Council instructed the K4 committee to examine this matter further at its next meeting in the light of a presentation by a representative from the UNHCR.

The presidency condemned terrorist acts and welcomed efforts among the member states to tackle this problem through reinforced co-operation and improved exchanges of information.

Ministers of the member states met their counterparts from the central and eastern European states, the Baltic states and Cyprus and Malta to continue the pre-accession structured dialogue with those countries on justice and home affairs. On the second day of the Council, the troika held meetings on third pillar matters with representatives from Norway, Switzerland, Morocco and the Andean pact countries.

National Lottery

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what directions he has given to the National Lottery Charities Board on how it is to consider applications for grants and how lottery money should be spent. [38348]

Mr. Howard: I have issued directions to the National Lottery Charities Board under the terms of sections 26 and 39 of the National Lottery etc. Act 1993 in respect of various policy and financial matters. The policy directions are meant to ensure, inter alia, that the board achieves over time the distribution of money to a reasonably wide spread of recipients, including small organisations and those operating purely at a local level, and across a reasonably wide range of charitable—whether or not charitable in law—benevolent and philanthropic activity.

The directions also require the board:

to have regard from the outset to: to the interests of the United Kingdom as a whole; the interests of the different parts of the United Kingdom; and the relative population sizes of, and appropriate socio-economic factors applicable to, the different parts of the United Kingdom;

to consider the interests of organisations with a base in the United Kingdom and working overseas; to distribute grants in the light of these considerations.

The financial directions regulate the payment of grants and put in place safeguards to ensure that grants are used for the purposes for which they were given.

I have today placed in the Library copies of the policy and financial directions.

Roger Casement

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the review of the records relating to Roger Casement has been completed. [38349]

Mr. Howard: The review of the Roger Casement records, requested by the Institute of Contemporary History under the open government initiative, has been completed. I am pleased to announce that my Department's records will today be released at the Public Record Office.

Probation and Bail Hostels

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many instances local objections have been made to the siting of an approved probation and bail hostel since 1990; and if he will list those objections. [37185]

Mr. Howard: Since 1990, 24 approved probation and bail hostels have been opened. In all cases there were some local objections, including representations to the local planning authority and the Home Office; but it is not practicable to provide an exhaustive list.

Police Cautions

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many juveniles and young persons had been cautioned by the police on (a) three occasions, (b) four occasions and (c) more than five occasions. [37179]

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is not collected routinely. The table shows results from a special study of all 4,500 offenders cautioned for indictable offences in one week of 1994 in England and Wales.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of (a) juveniles and (b) young persons, who were formally cautioned by the police in England and Wales, did not subsequently become the subject of a further arrest and further caution in each of the last three years for which figures each are available. [37180]

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is not collected routinely. The tables show results from special studies of those cautioned for indictable offences in England and Wales in one sample week each in 1985, 1988 and 1991. Table 1 shows the percentage of offenders in each sample not subsequently convicted within two years of being cautioned. More detail for part of the 1991 sample on subsequent convictions and cautions for part of the 1991 sample is included in table 2.

Handcuffs

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of rigid and chain link handcuffs used by police officers are manufactured in the United Kingdom. [37079]

Mr. Maclean: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners have suffered injury from the use of rigid handcuffs in the latest period for which figures are available. [37078]

Mr. Maclean: This information is not held centrally. I understand that in 1994 the Police Complaints Authority received some 300 complaints about handcuffs, including both the traditional style and the rigid handcuff.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the effect of the use of rigid handcuffs on the level of assaults upon police officers. [37080]

Mr. Maclean: I understand that this type of handcuff is quicker to apply and provides a more effective restraint upon a prisoner than the traditional design. I have no information as to the effect of the rigid handcuff on the level of assaults on police officers.

Supervision Orders

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many supervision orders with residential requirements have been made by the courts in England and Wales since the implementation of the Children Act 1989. [37188]

Lanarkshire health board seeks continually to improve the full range of health services it purchases for the people of Lanarkshire.

27. Mrs. Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities to discuss local government services. [36056]

Public Transport, Fife

28. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the provision of public transport in Fife. [36057]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The provision of public transport services in Fife is a matter for the train operating companies and the bus companies. Fife regional council also takes an active interest in promoting public transport in the area.

In February 1994, following consultation with Fife regional council, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State agreed to provide additional capital allocations of up to £8.8 million to Fife for planned improvements to rail services. The regional council and ScotRail are now taking this forward.

The future of rail services in Fife has been contractually assured for the first time by their inclusion in the ScotRail and InterCity east coast passenger service requirements.

However, I have established a working group, chaired by Professor Sir Robert Shields, to produce and consolidate guidance on the developing roles and responsibilities of health boards. A copy of the group's remit and a list of members has been placed in the library.

Road Upgrading, Gordon

32. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the upgrading of the A96 and A92 within the constituency of Gordon. [36062]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In December 1988, I announced a comprehensive six-point plan to improve the A96 comprising dual carriageways, bypasses, increased overtaking opportunities and accident remedial measures. Bypasses have been constructed at Inverurie, Bucksburn and Lhanbryde and others have completed their public local inquiry stages. In Gordon, work is progressing on the preparation of bypasses at Kintore and Blackburn.

On the A92, good progress is being made on the preparation of the improvement between Balmedie and Tipperty. Earlier design work has been reviewed and draft orders can be published once the final phase of evaluation has been completed. Other improvements are being made on the A92 and speed cameras have been introduced to improve road safety.

Housing (Glasgow)

34. Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to meet Glasgow district council to discuss housing conditions. [36064]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so. However, one of my first visits as Housing Minister was to Easterhouse in Glasgow on 8 August 1995. I saw at first hand the problems of that estate and the significant investment programmes being devoted to tackling them. Scottish Homes expects to invest around £15 million in Easterhouse in 1995–96. The specific developments I viewed involved over 100 new or improved units costing just over £6 million.

I have also accepted invitations from the council to speak at the city housing conference on energy which is being held in November and to visit the district later in the year to see the housing conditions for myself and to learn how the council is utilising the £116 million capital resources available to it for housing investment this year. I look forward to hearing more about the council's efforts to involve the private sector in meeting Glasgow's housing needs.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total number and area of Forestry Commission woods in (a) England (b) Scotland and (c) Wales sold since 1981; and, of those, the total number and area of woods in each country sold for which legal agreements were made and are currently enforceable to protect public access on foot. [37499]

Mr. Kynoch: The number and area of Forestry Commission woods sold since 1981 are as follows:

	England	Scotland	Wales
Number of woods sold	986	801	848
Area of woods sold (hectares)	33,629	73,780	16,462

The number and area of Forestry Commission woods sold since the introduction of access agreements in 1991 are as follows:

	England	Scotland	Wales
Number of woods sold	185	220	253
Area of woods sold (hectares)	4,037	26,508	4,688
Number of public access agreements	6	1	16
Area covered by agreements (hectares)	136	20	350

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to publish a comprehensive guide for sale to the public of all woods owned by the Forestry Commission to which public access on foot is freely available. [37501]

Mr. Kynoch: The Forestry Commission already provides guides, leaflets and other publicity and it is considering ways of providing further information about those of its woodlands which are freely open to the public on foot.

Monklands District Council

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what further steps the Government are taking about the operation of Monklands district council. [36058]

Mr. Kynoch: The inquiry announced by the then Secretary of State, my right hon. Friend the Member for Galloway and Upper Nithsdale (Mr. Lang), on 28 June is under way and any follow-up action will be determined in the light of its conclusions.

Housing Stock (Berwickshire)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to be able to make a statement on the proposed transfer of Berwickshire district council's housing stock to Berwickshire housing association. [36045]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State approved Berwickshire district council's application for consent to transfer the stock on 30 August and the transfer has now been completed.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Contributions Agency

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will list (a) as at May 1994 and (b) as at the latest available date the addresses of bases of clerical staff of the Contributions Agency; [37221]

(2) what plans he has further to centralise the activities of the Contributions Agency; and if he will make a statement; [37222]

(3) to what extent the Contributions Agency office at Inverness is affected by plans to centralise activities of the Contributions Agency. [37223]

Mr. Heald: The administration of the Contributions Agency is a matter for Mrs. Faith Boardman, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Mrs. Faith Boardman to Mrs. Margaret Ewing, dated 17 October 1995:

As Chief Executive of the Contributions Agency, I have responsibility for answering questions about operational matters relating to the Agency. I have been asked to reply to your questions about the addresses of bases of the Agency's clerical staff, plans to centralise the Agency's activities and the effects on the Agency's office in Inverness of these plans. In view of the nature of the questions I have combined the responses.

The tables in Annex 1 show the offices with a clerical presence in the Agency's Field Operations in May 1994 while those at Annex 2 show the position at September 1995. In addition to our Field Operations, clerical staff were also based (both in May 1994 and September 1995) at our Centre in Newcastle and Civil Recoveries Sections in Bootle, Cardiff, Edinburgh and King's Lynn.

A recent business analysis of our Field Operations and a review of the pay and grading structure have recommended significant changes to the organisation.

In 1991, the Agency began to move towards a Field Operations network of some 184 Field Offices supported by 90 National Insurance Outsations. Current research has shown that there is a need to match more closely Contributions Agency outlets to customer requirements while still maintaining nationwide cover for the administration of the NI scheme. Information has been obtained about density of business, density of population and locations of the self-employed. This information has been incorporated into the design of a new network to consist of around 100–115 locations, comprising 70–75 Field Offices and 30–40 Inspector outstations, which will maintain the commitment to service delivery outlined in the Contributions Agency Contributors' and Employers' Charters. It is proposed to achieve the rationalisation of the Field Operations network within the next two to five years. There are no further plans to centralise beyond the current proposals.

In Scotland, it is proposed that clerical processing work which does not require face to face contact will be centred in the major cities. A network of National Insurance Inspector outlets will be developed to provide a local service to the Agency's customers by appointment at a local office of the Department of Social Security, or by visit.

Under these proposals the Contributions Agency office at Inverness will operate as a National Insurance outlet with clerical processing at either Aberdeen or Edinburgh.

I hope that my reply proves helpful. Please let me know if I can be of any more assistance.

Disclosure of Information

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the matters which staff of his Department are precluded by employment conditions from discussing with their Member of Parliament. [37101]

Mr. Burt: The rules of the disclosure of information by civil servants are set out in the civil service management code, a copy of which is in the Library. Additionally, staff in his Department are prohibited by the Social Security Administration Act 1992 from disclosing, without lawful authority, any information relating to individuals which they have acquired during the course of their employment and which has not officially been made public.

Unemployment Benefits

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what regulations apply in the case of those claimants who are deemed to be capable of some work as a result of the all-work test and have been continuously employed for two years or more. [37028]

Mr. Roger Evans: Claimants who are capable of some work and claim unemployment benefit have to satisfy the normal conditions for receipt, including the need to be available for and actively seek work. Claimants are allowed to restrict their availability if the restrictions are reasonable in view of their physical or mental condition. They need not relinquish their contract of employment in order to be unemployed, provided no earnings or retention fees are received, no work is done and there is no obligation to remain at the employer's disposal.

Travel Allowances

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of States for Social Security if he will list the total cost of travel expenses claimed by civil servants using their own vehicles for official business in each of the last five years in his Department; and what would have been the saving in the last year if the maximum rate that could be claimed was set at the lowest rate. [36620]

Mr. Burt: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Dr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what rates of travel allowance may be claimed by civil servants in his Department when using their own vehicles for official business. [36619]

Mr. Burt: The information is in the table.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what housing benefit exists in each EU country; and if he will make a statement. [36417]

Mr. Roger Evans: Information currently available on EU countries is as follows[1]:

Austria:

The federal provinces provide social assistance payments to cover some or all of the costs of public or private rented housing and associated heating costs.

Belgium

There is no separate, generalised system of housing benefit. Some social assistance payments may include a supplementary allowance towards housing costs.

Denmark:

A housing allowance is payable to those on low incomes and social assistance to meet housing costs above a level determined by the family circumstances of the claimant.

Finland:

The social assistance allowance may include a supplementary element the level of which is at the discretion of the local welfare office, to cover reasonable housing costs. Besides social assistance there are three income-related schemes paying housing allowances to people on low incomes, pensioners and students. Allowances may be granted for both owned and rented accommodation and may cover up to 80 per cent. of housing costs. Those in receipt of social assistance may receive additional help to meet the remaining 20 per cent. of costs.

France:

Income-related housing benefits are available to assist with mortgage interest payments and rents in social and private rented accommodation.

Germany:

Those claiming social assistance receive supplementary amounts to cover reasonable housing costs. Owner occupiers may receive payments of mortgage interest up to a specified level which varies according to local circumstances and, if they have no realisable savings, loans to cover capital repayments. An income-related housing benefit is payable to those living in private or social rented housing and to owner occupiers.

Greece:

Housing benefit is available to those aged over 65 without social insurance cover and whose only resources are the minimum pension allowance. The benefit covers rents in the private sector only and is paid directly to landlords.

Ireland:

Rent and mortgage supplements are available under the supplementary welfare allowance schemes. Rent supplements may be paid to people in privately rented housing and social housing provided by voluntary housing associations. Mortgage supplements to cover mortgage interest payments only may be paid to owner-occupiers.

Italy:

There is no housing benefit scheme.

Luxembourg:

Rent allowances, based on the difference between gross rent and 10 per cent. of the amount of the main income support benefit—RMG—payable to the claimant, up to a fixed monthly maximum are available as part of the RMG.

Netherlands:

A means-tested housing benefit is available to those claiming General Assistance whose rent or mortgage interest is above as specified level and below a set limit. The benefit is only available for flats and houses: people renting a single room are not eligible. Where the rent or mortgage interest is higher than the specified ceiling, a temporary housing cost supplement may be paid through general assistance.

Portugal:

A means-tested housing allowance is available for those in public, social and private rented housing. An emergency housing benefit is available for those in sudden need as a result of a death, unemployment or invalidity.

Spain:

There is no system of housing benefit. Discretionary one-off payments may be made to assist with housing costs in cases of particular need.

Sweden:

There are three forms of housing assistance: (i) people on social assistance may have reasonable housing costs (rent or mortgage interest) added to the social assistance standard from which their level of benefit is calculated; (ii) a general housing benefit, the level of which is dependent on the composition of the household, the income of the household and the cost of the accommodation, and which is counted as income when calculating social assistance; (iii) for pensioners, an income tested housing supplement, the level of which varies between municipalities.

Note:

1. International comparisons of housing benefit are complex and should be treated with caution. In many countries help with housing costs differs from that in the UK because of their different social, cultural and economic traditions and circumstances, including different social security and taxation systems and different emphasis on bricks-and-mortar subsidies as opposed to personal subsidies. In addition, housing standards and housing costs vary considerably, both between and within countries, and in some countries housing benefits form part of the system of social assistance.

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will bring forward proposals to equalise the subsidy effect of housing benefit between landlords with protected tenants and other landlords; and if he will make a statement. [36785]

Mr. Evans: We have no plans to introduce changes to the current arrangements for subsidising local authorities' housing benefit expenditure for rent allowances paid in respect of protected tenancies or other tenancies.

War Pensions (Nuclear Test Veterans)

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what benefits are available to ex-service personnel accepted by the War Pensions Agency as suffering chromosome damage attributable to service. [37504]

Mr. Heald: War disablement pensions or gratuities may be awarded to ex-service personnel for any disablement which is attributable to service in the Armed Forces.

The amount payable depends upon the medically assessed degree of disablement.

Supplementary allowances may be payable in addition to the basic pension or gratuity.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of the service personnel involved in the British nuclear test programme have been found to be suffering from chromosome damage attributable to service. [37505]

Mr. Heald: A pensions appeal tribunal has found, in one particular case, a claimant to be suffering from chromosome damage attributable to service.

The Secretary of State has applied for leave to appeal to the High Court on the ground that the tribunal's decision is wrong in law.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many war pensions have been awarded in (a) 1980 to 1985, (b) 1986 to 1990 and (c) 1991 to 1995 to ex-service personnel as a result of injury or medical conditions attributable to participation in the British nuclear test programmes in Australia and the South Pacific. [37506]

Mr. Heald: The information in the table relates to war disablement pensions or gratuities awarded to ex-service personnel who, during their career, participated in the British nuclear weapons tests programme. These records do not specify whether the accepted injuries or other medical condition are related to service at the test sites or to some other period of service.

TREASURY

Income Tax

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the total cost of tax-free allowances and other tax breaks to individuals; and if he will indicate the proportion of income tax which would not need to be levied if the allowances and breaks were not in place. [37073]

Mr. Jack: This depends on what the hon. Member considers a "tax break". Table 1.6 of Inland Revenue Statistics 1995, a copy of which can be found in the Library, shows the estimated cost of allowances, tax expenditures and structural reliefs against income tax.

A tax system without allowances, which charges tax from the first £1 of income would bring many more people into tax, including 7 million pensioners and the unemployed.

EC Budget Council

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the EC Budget Council meeting held on 24 July. [37743]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I represented the United Kingdom at the Budget Council on 24 July. The Council considered that Commission's preliminary draft budget for 1996. The draft budget established by the Council totalled 86.0 billion ecu or £71.8 billion in commitment appropriations and 81.4 billion ecu or £67.9 billion in payment appropriations. The draft budget would require own resources totalling 1.1885 per cent. of Community gross national product, compared with the existing own resources ceiling of 1.20 per cent. of Community GNP. The draft budget is within the financial perspective ceilings.

The Council also discussed a proposal by the French for an increase in transport Trans-European Networks of 100 mecu or £83.4 million. The Council agreed to accept an increase of 50 mecu or £41.7 million, with the United Kingdom and the Netherlands voting against. No other formal votes were taken.

The summary table compares the outcome of the Budget Council with the proposals in the Commission's amended preliminary draft budget by reference to the financial perspective ceilings.

[1] Throughout this reply the rate of £1=1.1984 ecu has been used—the rate notified in the Official Journal as prevailing on the last working day of last month, 29 September.

[2] As amended in letter of amendment No. 1 from the figure which appeared in the Commission's overview of the PDB for 1996 to take account of the higher bid for agriculture under category 1.

Note:

Further information is contained in the explanatory memorandum 9145/95 on the draft budget, which was deposited to Parliament on 5 October.

The European Parliament will consider the draft budget for 1996 at its plenary in October. The Parliament's amendments and modifications will be considered at the Second Budget Council in November. The European Parliament's Second Reading is likely to be in mid-December.

(2) if he will list his engagements for the first two weeks of October. [37625]

The Deputy Prime Minister: On each day, I had a number of meetings with ministerial colleagues and others.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) if he will list his engagements for August; [37623]

(2) if he will list his engagements for September. [37624]

The Deputy Prime Minister: On those days when I was in the office, I had a number of meetings with ministerial colleagues and others.

HEALTH

Winter Mortality

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information is held by his Department on excess winter deaths in (a) countries of the European Union and (b) other G7 countries over the last 10 years; what is the average temperature in the relevant four-month period in each of these countries; and if he will set out the information showing excess winter mortality in numerical and percentage terms. [37313]

Mr. Sackville: Information is not available centrally on either excess winter deaths or temperature in other countries. Data on temperature in England and Wales is held by the Meteorological Office and is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence.

The table shows excess winter mortality in England and Wales over the last 10 years.

Excess winter mortality, England and Wales

Period	Excess winter deaths	Percentage
1984–85	42,278	26.5
1985–86	49,446	27.7
1986–87	26,449	14.9
1987–88	33,098	18.4
1988–89	21,235	11.8
1989–90	47,083	26.3
1990–91	37,845	21.5
1991–92	24,845	19.9

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the success or otherwise of the private finance initiative in hospital capital works; and if he will make a statement. [37569]

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Dulwich (Ms Jowell) on 16 October and to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Attercliffe (Mr. Betts) on 28 June at col 594.

Read Codes

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will give details of the tendering procedure for the contract for the development of a Read codes system to apply to the national health service; what business case was presented before signing the contract; and if he will list any significant revisions to the contract subsequent to signing it; [37570]

(2) if the arrangements for the contract awarded to Loughborough university for the development of Read codes and its application to the national health service complied with European Commission rules on public sector tendering; whether variations in the conventional departmental and Treasury rules were required in the placing of the contract; and if he will give the value of the contract in year 1 and prospectively in years 2 and 3; [37571]

(3) if he will make a statement on the development contract for the introduction of Read codes as the basis for computerised coding in the national health service. [37572]

Mr. Sackville: In 1990 all rights to Read codes were purchased on behalf of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health from their inventor Dr. James Read. The purchase price was independently assessed at the time by experts from Hambros Bank Ltd. Further development of the codes was then given to the national health service for coding and classification, an NHS body located in Loughborough which was created for the purpose and is a part of the NHS Executive. There has therefore never been a development contract with Loughborough university or any other body and the questions of tendering and associated procedures do not apply.

Breast Cancer

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the Government intend to respond to the third report of the Health Committee on Breast Cancer Services, HC 324; and if he will make a statement. [38327]

Mr. Sackville: Copies of the Government's response to the Health Committee's third report on Breast Cancer Services have been laid before the House today. I warmly welcome the Committee's report, particularly its commendation of the achievements of the national health service breast screening programme and its support for the new strategic framework for the development of cancer services.

WALES

Modern Apprenticeships

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people under the modern manufacturing apprenticeships scheme enjoy employed status. [37020]

Mr. Richards: A total of 498 young people started modern apprenticeships in manufacturing engineering in Wales in 1994–95. Of these, 473 or 95 per cent. now have employed status.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are in receipt of a bursary under the modern manufacturing apprenticeship scheme and what proportion this is of the total number of such apprenticeships. [37019]

Mr. Richards: A total of 498 young people started modern apprenticeships in manufacturing engineering in Wales in 1994–95. Of these, 188 or 37.75 per cent., were in receipt of a bursary. All but a few have completed their first year of training and are now in employment. Figures for the 1995–96 apprentice intake are not yet available.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total Government expenditure to date upon the modern manufacturing apprenticeship scheme. [37023]

Mr. Richards: Modern apprenticeships in manufacturing engineering were introduced in Wales in 1994–95. Total Government expenditure, through Welsh training and enterprise councils, in support of modern apprenticeships in 1994–95 was £9.5 million.

Rates of Pay

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate his Department has made of the average hourly rate of pay for men employed in manufacturing (a) in Mid Glamorgan and (b) in Wales; and what percentage these represent of the United Kingdom average. [37244]

Mr. Richards: The available information covers Great Britain only and is shown in the following table:

(3) what estimate his Department has made of the average gross and net profits made by private residential and nursing homes. [37017]

Mr. Richards: The information requested is not held centrally.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate his Department has of the number of residential homes and nursing homes in Wales. [37014]

Mr. Richards: There were 681 residential care homes and 391 private nursing homes open on 31 March 1994.

Unemployment

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many men are currently out of work in Wales: how many of these have been unemployed for more than (a) six months and (b) 12 months and what percentages these are of the total numbers out of work; and what were the equivalent figures in 1979. [37403]

Mr. Richards: The number of men on the claimant unemployment count, not seasonally adjusted, in Wales at August 1995 was 83,118. The latest figures by duration of unemployment are for July 1995, when 46,007 men on the claimant count in Wales had been unemployed for more than six months and 30,167 had been unemployed for more than 12 months, representing 55 per cent. and 36 per cent. respectively of all men on the claimant count. Equivalent figures for 1979 are not available.

Student Grants

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the estimated average value of a maintenance grant for students in local further education made by each county council in Wales last year. [37217]

Mr. Richards: The information requested is in the following table.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of each Welsh TEC's budget is spent on training unemployed (a) adults and (b) 16 and 17-year-olds. [37056]

Mr. Richards: The percentage of each Welsh TEC's budget spent on training unemployed adults during 1994–95 financial year is shown in the following table. The figures include trainees who were without jobs prior to the start of their training but who acquired employed status on or during the course of that training. Comparable information for 16 and 17-year-olds is not available separately and is therefore provided for those young people, within the 16 to 24 age group who are eligible for youth training.

Cardiff Bay Opera House Trust

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date his Department first received representations in relation to the acquisition of land from Associated British Ports for the purposes of constructing the proposed Cardiff Bay opera house; on what date representations were received with particular reference to potential conflicts of interest; on what date the Cardiff Bay Opera House Trust transaction with Associated British Ports was completed; and on what date the conflict of interest issue was resolved. [35234]

Mr. Hague [pursuant to his answer, 18 July 1995, c. 1200-1]: I regret that there was an error in the original reply. The reference to the Cardiff Bay development corporation was incorrect and should have read the Cardiff Bay Opera House Trust. The parties to the heads of agreement were the Cardiff Bay Opera House Trust and Associated British Ports.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Intervention Board

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to publish a revised framework document for the Intervention Board executive agency. [38031]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I am pleased to say that a revised policy and resources framework document for 1995 has been published and copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Agriculture Council

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Agriculture Council held in Brussels on 25 September and if he will make a statement. [38030]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: At this meeting, the Council set the rate of rotational set-aside for arable crops to be harvested in 1996 at 10 per cent. It also set the rate for non-rotational set-aside at the same level. This compares with 1995 rates of 12 per cent. and 17 per cent.—12 per cent. and 15 per cent. in the United Kingdom—for the two types of set-aside respectively. The decision was taken by qualified majority vote, with Portugal voting against.

The decision is a good compromise between the aim of ensuring adequate supplies and avoiding a renewed build up of stocks with a risk of increased budgetary costs. A single set-aside rate will make the scheme simpler for farmers which I welcome as wholly in keeping with my desire for greater deregulation.

At my insistence, the Commission has promised, for the current marketing year as well as for 1996–97, to manage the market so as to ensure that cereals market prices are consistent with the aims of the 1992 reforms, and that priority in supply is given to consumers within the European Union in particular livestock farmers. I intend to make sure this undertaking is properly fulfilled.

The Council also adopted a directive which will impose licensing and registration arrangements on manufacturers and users of a range of non-medicinal additives in animal feed. I voted against, on the grounds that no adequate justification has been given, in terms of risk to animal or human health, for introducing these requirements.

The Council had an initial exchange of views on the Commission's proposals for changes to the support system for rice.

The meeting was joined for part of the time by nine Ministers of Agriculture from the countries of central and eastern Europe, including the Baltic states. These Ministers explained the aims of their existing agriculture policies and their expectations for the development of their farm sectors, as well as their views on the common agricultural policy in the light of their hopes for the eventual accession of their countries to the European Union.

Cropping Systems

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the letter of the Minister of State, 1349, of 30 June, if he will make a statement on the purpose of the less intensive farming and environmental project of non-intensive farming and the environment, SCARAB or pesticides and TALISMANS on the economic and agronomic effects of reduced input systems. [37278]

Mr. Boswell: SCARAB—seeking confirmation about results at Boxworth—and TALISMAN—towards a low input system minimising agrochemicals—and agrochemicals nitrogen—are complementary projects designed to determine whether the conclusions of the earlier Boxworth project of 1981 to 1988 are valid for different soils and crop rotations. These projects seek to compare the environmental, economic and agronomic effects, including yield penalties, of adopting cropping systems which use lower inputs of agrochemicals than conventional cropping systems. SCARAB focuses on environmental and ecological effects of pesticide applications on non-target invertebrates and soil micro-organisms, whereas TALISMAN primarily seeks to measure economic effects.

The less intensive farming and environmental research project—LIFE—aims to provide fundamental information on the effects, interactions and ecological implications of an integrated farming systems approach and to develop less intensive systems which are economically and ecologically sound and sustainable in the long-term.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Farm Sizes

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the number of farms of the size (a) 1–25 hectares, (b) 26–50 hectares, (c) 51–75 hectares, (d) 76–100 hectares, (e) 101–150 hectares, (f) 151–200 hectares and (g) 201 or more hectares for (i) the last available year and (ii) 1985. [36433]

Mr. Ancram: The information is given in the table:

Number of farms of size (hectares)	1985	1994 (hectares)
Less than 26	19,272	15,353
26–50.9	8,083	7,324

76–100.9	1,102	1,222
101–150.9	757	931
151–200.9	235	264
201 and over	215	251

Children (Northern Ireland) Order

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what were the reasons for the delay in bringing the Children (Northern Ireland) Order into force; and if he will make a statement. [37317]

Mr. Moss: I do not recognise that there will be any unnecessary delay in implementing the Children Order. As I told the House during the debate on the draft order on 8 February at column 427 we envisaged the order coming into operation during the 1996–97 financial year. It has been agreed with all agencies involved that the new legislation will come into operation in October 1996. Substantial preparatory work is necessary across all the statutory and voluntary agencies involved. This work, which includes the training of staff in a wide range of disciplines, the creation of a guardian ad litem service and the preparation of a considerable volume of regulations, guidance and court rules, is proceeding according to plan.

Working Mothers

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he made to the Secretary of State for Employment seeking a Northern Ireland input to the publication, "Mothers in Employment"; what was the response; and if he will make a statement. [37314]

Mr. Ancram: None. The former Department of the Employment took responsibility for providing input on behalf of the Government. I have nothing to add to those inputs or to the Government's final response which was also prepared by the Department of Employment.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what considerations underlie the differential in treatment of working mothers between Northern Ireland and the United Kingdom mainland. [37316]

Mr. Ancram: The reason why there are some differentials in administration and implementation is because of different financial priorities and organisational arrangements. There is, however, no differential in either legal provision or general policy.

Compensation Agency

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what date the revised framework document and the corporate and business plans for the Compensation Agency were published.

Sir John Wheeler: The documents were published on 2 August 1995. The framework document takes account of the recent triennial review of that agency. The prior options study, completed as part of the review, recommended that the agency should retain agency status from 1 April 1995. An evaluation of the agency which was also carried out under the review confirmed that the agency has been a success, realising benefits for both the public and Government. Copies of the framework document and evaluation report and of the agency's corporate and business plans have been placed in the Library.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Nursery Education

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on the progress of her plans for nursery education for four-year-olds. [36841]

Mr. Robin Squire: It was announced yesterday that phase 1 of the pre-school education voucher scheme would take place in Wandsworth, Westminster and Kensington and Chelsea.

My right hon. Friend is currently consulting on various elements of the new pre-school education voucher scheme. She will publish detailed proposals for implementation of the new scheme later in the year, after considering consultation responses.

Around 160 companies expressed interest in administering the voucher scheme. A shortlist of companies have been invited to tender for the contract, and the contractor will be appointed around the end of October.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the approximate additional cost for places per year for any local education authority entering the original pilot scheme for nursery school vouchers; which authorities have made firm applications to participate; and what are the net additional costs or financial benefits to each such authority. [37226]

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on recent progress in respect of implementing her policy of vouchers for pre-school nursery education; and if she will list participating local education authorities indicating in each case their political control. [37065]

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend is currently consulting on various elements of the new pre-school education voucher scheme. She will publish detailed proposals for implementation of the new scheme later in the year, after considering consultation responses.

It was announced yesterday that the local education authorities participating in phase 1 of the voucher scheme will be Wandsworth, Westminster and Kensington and Chelsea. These are all Conservative-controlled authorities.

The additional costs or financial benefit to each authority will depend on the level at which it currently funds places, decisions on the provision of new places in maintained schools and the operation of parental choice.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her oral statement of 6 July, Official Report, columns 517-19, if additional funding, above the value of the voucher, will be provided for children defined as at risk under the Children Act 1989. [36180]

Mr. Robin Squire: It will be for local authorities to continue to spend resources in addition to the value of the voucher on children defined as at risk under the Children Act 1989.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her oral statement of 6 July, Official Report, columns 517-19, where responsibility for planning the provision of pre-school places for all four year olds will rest. [36171]

Mr. Robin Squire: Pre-school places for four year olds will be provided by the maintained, private and voluntary sectors in response to parental demand expressed through the vouchers parents will receive.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her oral statement of 6 July, Official Report, columns 517–19, how she envisages that parents will make an informed choice between the providers available locally. [36153]

Mr. Robin Squire: Parents will be able to obtain information about all providers in their locality. To be eligible to redeem pre-school education vouchers, each institution will be required to publish information about its activities, which will allow parents to make an informed choice.

Surplus Places, Liverpool

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much capital allocation has been given to Liverpool city council since 1985 to remove surplus places in schools. [36438]

Mr. Robin Squire: This information is available only for the period from April 1990. Over that period, Liverpool education authority has been allocated some £12 million in annual capital guidelines for the removal of surplus places in its schools. A further £9 million in grant aid, representing 85 per cent. of governors' costs, has been approved for the removal of surplus places in voluntary aided schools. The total amount is therefore £21 million.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list each county's standard assessment funding per primary school pupil and per secondary school pupil and the average of all English and Welsh counties for this financial year. [36767]

Mr. Robin Squire: The allocations per pupil for the 1995–96 education standard spending assessment for each English county, and the average allocation of all English counties, are set out in the table. There are no standard spending assessments for education in Wales, where county councils' SSAs include provision for education.

Surplus Places

Mr. Matthew Taylor : To ask (1) the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if she will list the proportion of school places in each English and Welsh county that her Department has identified as surplus in each of the last three years in (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools; [36775]

(2) if she will list the proportion of surplus school places in each English and Welsh county in the last three financial years in (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools. [36770]

Mrs. Gillan: The most recent figures available for England are in respect of the position in January 1994. I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my hon. Friend gave the hon. Member for St. Ives (Mr. Harris) on 9 December 1994, Official Report, column 410–14, which gave for each local education authority the total number of unfilled places in schools where the number of places is greater than the number of pupils. Figures from the 1995 survey are currently being processed.

Matters in Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

School Budgets

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of funding has been delegated to the schools budget in this financial year in each English and Welsh county. [36769]

Mr. Robin Squire: The table shows the percentage of the potential schools budget delegated to schools in 1995–96 by each county local education authority in England. The funding of schools in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Complaints

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement about the rights of individual members of the public to make complaints to any of the appropriate ombudsmen about services or projects funded through the private finance initiative in her Department. [36834]

Mr. Robin Squire: The Parliamentary Ombudsman has, subject to the conditions of the Parliamentary Commissioner Act 1967, jurisdiction to investigate complaints from members of the public about the way in which they have been treated by Government Departments, other public sector bodies engaged in the work of central Government and those acting on their behalf. The ombudsman can investigate complaints about projects or services funded through the private finance initiative if they are carried out by or on behalf of a Department or public body within his jurisdiction—that is, those bodies listed in schedule 2 to the 1967 Act. The Department for Education and Employment falls within the scope of schedule 2, as does the Education Assets Board and the Office for Standards in Education.

I should stress that projects or services funded by the private finance initiative at individual universities, colleges and schools are unlikely to fall into the category of projects or services carried out by or on behalf of the DFEE, and therefore the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration has no role in relation to complaints about them.

Under section 25 of the Local Government Act 1974, the Local Commissioner for Administration may investigate complaints about local authorities and those acting on their behalf. The local ombudsman can therefore investigate complaints about projects or services funded through the private finance initiative if they are carried out by or on behalf of a local education authority in the exercise of its administrative functions.

Training Programmes

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what plans she has to relax the eligibility rule for entry into Government-funded training and jobsearch programmes in (a) Mid-Glamorgan, (b) Merthyr and (c) Rhymney; [37054]

(2) how many entrants to the job club programmes in Wales have entered employment in each year since the programme began; [37052]

(3) how many entrants to the job club programme in each district of Wales entered employment last year. [37053]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Ted Rowlands, dated 18 October 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions about Government funded training and Jobsearch programmes and Jobclub performance in Wales.

There are no plans to relax the eligibility rules for entry into Government funded training and Jobsearch programmes.

The information on Jobclub entrants who have entered employment since the programme began in 1987 is contained in the attached table 1.

The information on Jobclub entrants entering employment in each district in Wales in the last financial year is contained in table 2.

I hope this is helpful.

Modern Manufacturing Apprenticeship Scheme

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people under the modern manufacturing apprenticeship scheme enjoy employed status. [37022]

Mr. Paice: This is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people are in receipt of bursaries under the modern manufacturing apprenticeship scheme; and what proportion is that of the total undertaking apprenticeships. [37021]

Mr. Paice: This is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Fraud Detection (Mandatory Awards)

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what special measures have been put in place to detect fraudulent application for mandatory awards in respect of full-time students. [37067]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for making mandatory awards rests with local education authorities, and it is for them to ensure that adequate systems and controls for making payments are in place. The Department is currently providing funds to enable the universities and colleges admissions service to purchase a computer system which will help it to identify fraudulent applications for places at higher education institutions which are often made concurrently by those fraudulently applying for awards.

Disability Employment Advisers

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the changes in the role of disability employment advisers consequent upon the Jobseekers Act 1944. [37152]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Tom Clarke, dated 18 October 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the changes in the role of Disability Employment Advisers (DEAs) consequent upon the Jobseekers' Act 1994.

I do not expect the DEA role to change significantly as a result of the Act.

Like all Employment Service client advisers, DEAs will need to carry out their functions in accordance with the principles of the Act. However, they will retain responsibility for their existing client group - people who have complex employment barriers result from disability - and for the Job Seekers Allowance related processes affecting them.

Training Allowances

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the training allowance paid to unemployed 16 and 17-year-olds on youth training programmes in (a) 1988 and (b) in the last year for which figures are available in real terms. [37055]

Mr. Paice: The minimum levels of training allowance paid to 16 and 17-year-olds on youth training programmes were (a) £29.50 and £35 in 1988–89 and (b) £21.39 and £25.37 in 1995–96, at 1988–89 prices.

Figures are available only for the minimum level of allowance. Employers and training providers are encouraged to top up minimum levels of allowance and many do.

Career Development Loans

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate her Department has made of the number of post-graduate students that are in receipt of career development loans. [37253]

Mr. Paice: The number of career development loan-funded students currently in training on a post-graduate course is 3,290

Placement Successes (Jobcentres)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Educationa and Employment if she will list the placement success for each jobcentre office in Wales in the past financial year, expressed (a) as numbers of jobs and (b) as shares of the Welsh total. [37206]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Rhodri Morgan, dated 18 October 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the placement successes for jobcentres in Wales in the last financial year.

The information you have requested is contained in the attached table.

I am pleased to be able to report that total placings achieved in Wales in 1994–95 was 8.9% above target and showed an increase of 11% on the achievement in 1993–94.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what evaluation she has made of the relative success in job placements as between stand-alone jobcentres and integrated jobcentre and benefit offices; and if she will make a statement. [37204]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Rhodri Morgan, dated 18 October 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the relative success in job placements between stand alone Jobcentres and integrated Jobcentre and Benefit Offices.

I think it would be helpful to explain the background and rationale for the move from stand alone Jobcentres to integrated Jobcentres. Over the past five years we have worked to establish a new network of offices which bring Jobcentres and Benefit Office services together under one roof. By doing so, this provides an improved one stop service offering the full range of services to help people back to work.

In establishing this network we have, wherever possible, made use of our existing estate to ensure value for money for the tax payer and the minimum of inconvenience to our clients.

There has been no formal evaluation relating to job placements and the integration process. However, I am pleased to be able to tell you the Jobcentre placings of unemployed people rose from 1.39 million in 1990/91 to 1.87 million in 1994/95. We also take account of what users of our services tell us; our National Customer Satisfaction Survey has confirmed that there is a continuing high level of client satisfaction with integrated Jobcentres and a public preference for them rather than separate offices.

I hope this is helpful.

Employment Service (Resources)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what additional resources have been allocated to the Employment Service to conduct the additional work associated with the transfer of claimants from incapacity benefit to unemployment benefit. [37027]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Dr. Lynne Jones, dated 18 October 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about what additional resources have been allocated to the Employment Service to help people leaving Incapacity Benefit (IB).

We are keen to ensure that people no longer entitled to IB who make a claim for unemployment benefit (UB) and are given effective help with returning to work. We therefore provide a comprehensive package of additional help for them.

That help begins with the full advisory interview given to all ex-IB clients when they make their claim for UB. This interview provides the opportunity for a full discussion of the client's job goals and of the most appropriate means for achieving them.

In addition clients no longer entitled to IB are eligible for immediate entry to a number of our programmes. As a result a number of additional places on Jobplan Workshop (JPW), and Jobclub/Job Interview Guarantee (JIG) scheme are being funded, details of which are as follows.

Year	Places	Programme	Cost £
1995 to 1996	86,000	JPW	9,630,000
	70,000	Jobclub/JIG	13,230,000
1996 to 1997	66,700	JPW	7,837,000
	58,000	Jobclub/JIG	11,063,000
1996 to 1998	15,400	JPW	1,900.000
	14,000	Jobclub/JIG	2,683,000

Those people who are identified at an initial interview as needing specialist help are referred to Placing, Assessment and Counselling Teams, the number of additional places and costs are estimated as follows:

Year	Places	Cost £
1995 to 1996	40,000	11,840,000
1996 to 1997	29,000	8,787,000
1997 to 1998	15,000	3,266,000

I hope this information is helpful and assures you of our intent to provide clients who were previously claiming IB with practical advice and information which is geared to their individual needs.

I hope this is helpful.

School Playing Fields

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many school playing fields have been sold since 1979. [36221]

Mrs. Gillan: There is no reliable historical information on the level of school playing field disposals. The Sports Council's register of recreational land, which is not yet complete, is designed to ensure that better information is available in future.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what has been the total amount allocated to capital grant for grant-maintained schools; and in each case, how much has been allocated to (a) committed expenditure, (b) formula allocation, (c) basic need provision, (d) change of character proposals, (e) named projects and (f) other purposes in each financial year since 1990. [35808]

Mr. Robin Squire: These matters are now the responsibility of the Funding Agency for Schools. I have asked its chairman to write to the hon. Member with this information.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, what was the total sum paid in speakers' expenses to head teachers and governors of grant-maintained schools speaking at meetings on grant-maintained status; and, in each case, what was the number of meetings for which claims were received, and from how many individuals in the financial years 1993–94 and 1994–95. [36151]

Mr. Robin Squire: The total sum paid in GM speakers' expenses for the financial year 1993–94 was £33,488. The equivalent sum for 1994–95 was £27,947.

Records of the number of speaking engagements undertaken or the number of individuals to whom payment was made prior to April 1994 are no longer available. During the financial year 1994–95, claims were received from approximately 175 GM speakers who undertook over 450 speaking engagements.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is (a) the actual or estimated total value of cash protection included in the central annual maintenance grant of grant-maintained schools and (b) the number of grant-maintained schools actually or estimated to be in receipt of cash protection for each of the financial years 1993–94 to 1999–2000. [36159]

Mr. Robin Squire: The calculation and payment of annual maintenance grant to grant-maintained schools, including the cash protection element, have been the responsibility of the Funding Agency for Schools since 1 April 1994. It also holds grant information relating to previous financial years. I have asked the chairman of the funding agency to write to the hon. Member about the cash protection figures for the years up to and including 1995–96.

As the hon. Member is aware, we announced earlier this year, and have reaffirmed in a consultation paper issued in July, our intention to phase out cash protection over the four years 1995–96 to 1998–99, so that none remains in 1999–2000. It is not possible to provide realistic estimates of amounts of cash protection for 1996–97 onwards: these will depend on a number of unpredictable factors.

Further Education Colleges (Advertising)

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will publish the rules on use by further education colleges of public funds to advertise on television and radio in order to attract students to enrol. [36169]

Mr. Paice: Further education colleges may use public funds for anything which is within their powers. There are no specific rules or restrictions on the use of public funds by colleges for advertising. Any advertisements for colleges would be subject to the same rules as apply to all other advertisements under the Independent Television Commission code.

School Lavatories

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many schools currently use permanently constructed lavatories accessible only externally. [36187]

Mrs. Gillan: The information is not held centrally.

School Exclusions

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) secondary and (b) primary school children have been permanently excluded in each of the last five years. [35836]

Mr. Robin Squire: Returns made under the national exclusions reporting system showed that 2,190 pupils were permanently excluded between April 1990 and April 1991, and 3,883 between April 1991 and April 1992. Of these, 13 per cent. were primary pupils in year one, and 14 per cent. in year two. Figures for the academic year 1992–93 are not available centrally.

A survey published by the Department in July showed that, in the academic year 1993–94, 8,960 secondary and 1,230 primary pupils were permanently excluded in the 101 LEAs that responded; in addition 434 pupils were permanently excluded from special schools.

Schools Budget

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will show for each local education authority for the year 1995–96 the element of the potential schools budget which is not delegated to schools through the aggregated schools budget, expressed (a) as a percentage of the potential schools budget and (b) as a sum of money per pupil in schools covered by the local management of schools scheme. [25037]

Mr. Robin Squire [pursuant to his reply, 24 May 1994, c. 614-15]:

The following revised and updated table, setting out the percentage of the potential schools budget not delegated by each LEA for 1995–96, should be substituted for the table contained in the answer given to the hon. Member on 24 May.

School Premises Regulations

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when she will publish the review of the school premises regulations announced by her predecessor on 2 October 1990 and cited in "DES News", 318/90.

Mrs. Gillan: The Under-Secretary, my hon. Friend the Member for Hornchurch (Mr. Squire), outlined the conclusion of the review in a parliamentary announcement on 14 July 1995, Official Report, columns 829-837. Those conclusions are very fully explained in the draft School Premises Regulations and the accompanying draft circular that are currently out to consultation.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

National Lottery

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many grants of national lottery funding have been made to date to applicants from Ashfield; and how much money was awarded in each case. [37919]

Mr. Sproat: There has been one award to date to an applicant from Ashfield. The Millennium Commission has awarded £587,500 to Brierley Forest Park, a project which covers Ashfield and Mansfield. This award is for the reclamation of 125 hectares of derelict land to create woodland, landscape and wetland areas for recreation and education.

Millennium Commission

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what steps she, or any body accountable to her, is taking to ensure effective co-ordination of transport services within London serving permanent, or temporary, sites of millennium significance; [37258]

(2) what criteria in respect of the purpose, content and similarities or otherwise to its predecessors of 1851 and 1951 the Millennium Commission has been set by Her Majesty's Government or has been set for the applicants seeking to operate the site of the proposed millennium exhibition. [37331]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 16 October 1995]: This is a matter for the Millennium Commission. I shall reply to the hon. Member in my capacity as chairman of the commission and place copies of my reply in the Libraries of the House.

PRIME MINISTER

Government Policy

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what meetings he has had with the First Secretary of State since July to discuss the co-ordination of Government policy. [36748]

The Prime Minister: I have had regular meetings with ministerial colleagues since July.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Prime Minister which members of Her Majesty's Government met General Pinochet during his recent visit to London; and what effort was made to condemn the regime he presided over in Chile from 1973 to 1990. [37979]

The Prime Minister: No members of Her Majesty's Government met General Pinochet during his recent visit. Our views on the military regime of 1973 to 1990 are well known.

Conservative Party Leadership

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Prime Minister how many civil servants, including special advisers, were involved in the recent campaign in official time or in their own time for the election of the leader of the Conservative party and for which candidate; and what are the normal working hours of these civil servants. [38000]

The Prime Minister: Special advisers taking part in political activities, such as the election for the leader of the Conservative party, are required to do so during leave or in their own time in addition to fulfilling their normal duties. In these circumstances, it is not appropriate to give details of those involved. Special advisers normally work a five-day week of 41 hours including meal breaks, which is standard for civil servants in the London area.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Guatemala

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent actions have been taken by British representatives at the UN concerning the abuse of human rights in Guatemala. [37974]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The UK, together with our EU partners, co-sponsored a resolution at the UN General Assembly on 14 September to extend the UN human rights verification mission, MINUGUA, for a further six months. The vital role being played by MINUGUA was underlined by the mission's swift production of a preliminary report into the disturbing incident on 5 October in which an army patrol opened fire on a group of returned refugees. The independent expert of the UN Commission on Human Rights was also present in the country at the time; the UK has consistently supported extension of Ms Pinto's mandate at successive sessions of the commission.

The UK has consistently urged both the Guatemalan Government and the URNG guerrillas to reach a peaceful settlement to the dispute between them, which would help to bring an end to human rights abuses.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations have been made to the Government of Guatemala concerning human rights abuses, the operation of the Truth commission and legal processes against alleged perpetrators of human rights abuses. [37982]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The EU issued a statement deploring the massacre by Guatemalan troops of returned refugees in Alta Verapaz, Guatemala on 5 October. We have demanded an immediate investigation into the massacre and the punishment of those guilty of it.

The British ambassador in Guatemala takes every appropriate opportunity, individually or through the EU, to express to the authorities the concern felt by the British Government and people about abuses of human rights.

At a British suggestion, the EU raised with the Guatemalan Foreign Minister our unhappiness at the circumstances surrounding the death of Reverend Saquic Vasquez. We shall press for a satisfactory outcome to the work of the Truth commission when it is set up on the signing of a final peace agreement.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what meetings have been held with human rights groups in Guatemala by the British embassy in each of the past five years; and which groups were involved. [37973]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: So far this year, the embassy has held meetings with eight groups concerned with human rights. In several cases, more than one meeting has taken place. The groups include UNHCR—United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees—MINUGUA—United Nations observer force—Ninos Refugiados—refugee children—Christian Aid, Peace Brigades International, Casa Alianza and the Toybox charity—street children—Centre for Human Rights Legal Action and the Central American Human Rights Committee.

In addition, the embassy has taken part in EU discussions with a number of other human rights groups. The embassy maintains regular contact with the Guatemalan procurator for human rights as a matter of course. Meetings with these human rights groups and others have taken place at various times over the last five years.

General Pinochet

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what facilities were offered to General Pinochet of Chile during his recent visit to the United Kingdom. [37976]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: No special facilities were accorded General Pinochet during his recent visit other than the customary VIP courtesy facilities at the airport on arrival and departure extended to all Heads of Foreign Defence Service. Under the Chilean constitution, General Pinochet is commander in chief of the Chilean army.

ENVIRONMENT

Treasury Building

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) in which papers and which countries the Treasury building was advertised for sale; [37121]

(2) what restrictions have been put on the use of the Treasury building if it is sold; [37122]

(3) if he will list the expressions of interest in purchasing the Treasury building which have been received so far. [37123]

Sir Paul Beresford: Property Holdings advertised for a private sector partner for the refurbishment of the Treasury building internationally.

Outright sale of the freehold is not currently envisaged.

It would be inappropriate to list all the expressions of interest at this time, as the selection of a short list of candidates is currently taking place.

Plant and Machinery Rating

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment his Department has made of the cost implications for small businesses of the recommendations of the Wood committee report on the rating of plant and machinery. [36946]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Wood committee estimated that its recommendations would reduce aggregate rateable value by up to 0.5 per cent. in England and Wales. Their implementation, in the 1995 non-domestic revaluation, will have tended to increase rates bills for some properties and reduce them for others, but the effects are not distinguishable from those of the revaluation as a whole.

National Exhibition Facilities

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what applications he has had for financial assistance towards the development of national exhibition facilities in London's east end from private developers. [37579]

Sir Paul Beresford: None.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy in respect of the provision of financial assistance towards the development of national exhibition facilities in London's east end by private developers. [57580]

Sir Paul Beresford: I am aware of only one such proposed development for a site in the London docklands which is being pursued as a private finance initiative. There will be no public subsidy for this project. It will go forward only if the market considers it a viable proposition.

Mining Accidents

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment if he will make a statement on the accident that occurred at Thoresby colliery, Nottinghamshire on 12 October; what steps have been taken to identify the cause of the accident and lessons to be learned from it; and when the interim report of the mines inspectorate might be published. [37690]

Sir Paul Beresford: On 12 October 1995 an incident occurred leading to the death of a mine worker at Thoresby mine, Nottinghamshire. HSE officials attended the incident immediately on notification.

The investigation into the case(s) of the incident has already began. It is being undertaken by the HSE's inspectorate of mines. Until this is complete and the findings known it would be inappropriate to speculate. Any recommendations that are made as the result of the investigation will be acted upon.

Reports of investigations are not normally published and it is not planned to do so in this case. However, I will write to the hon. Member for Sherwood when the investigation has been completed.

The coroner will, of course, be conducting an inquest into the accident and this will be open to the public.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the accident records for each colliery for the first and second quarters of 1995. [37691]

Sir Paul Beresford: Information for individual mines is not produced. Statistics for the industry are produced as an aggregate figure and published in the Health and Safety Commission annual report, copies of which are placed in the House Library. Figures for the first quarter January to March 1995 have not been validated and will not be confirmed until HSC's annual report is published in November 1995 at which stage they will appear in an aggregate table for the year. Figures for the second quarter April to June 1995 will not be available until November 1996.

TREASURY

Customs and Excise

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the (a) public, (b) business and (c) community bodies which have been consulted regarding the strategic review of Customs and Excise offices in the north-west of Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [37229]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Customs has not consulted the public, business or community bodies regarding its strategic review of offices in the north-west of Scotland. Customs staff in these offices are largely involved in intelligence gathering and the prevention of drug smuggling and it would not be in the public interest for customs to discuss its plans in detail.

There is no intention to erode the current level of trade facilitation given to business and ports in north-west Scotland. There will be consultation on this once the review has been completed.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the Customs and Excise offices which have closed since 1 January 1990. [37230]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The offices listed were closed in the period between 1 April 1990 and 1 October 1995. Because records are kept on the basis of the financial year, data are not available for the three months from January to March 1990. The operational and administrative functions in the offices closed were relocated either to new accommodation acquired for these functions or to existing departmental accommodation.

Taxation Immunity

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what factors are taken into account when granting foreign nationals residing in the United Kingdom immunity from United Kingdom taxes. [37070]

Mr. Jack: Immunity from direct taxation is accorded to income and gains beneficially owned by foreign Heads of State and their Governments. This treatment has its origins in a principle of international law, which has been recognised by successive Governments in this country.

There is no immunity from Customs and Excise duties and taxes.

ECOFIN

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the informal Council meeting of the Economic and Finance Ministers and central bank governors of the European Union held in Valencia on 30 September. [37741]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Governor of the Bank of England and I represented the UK at an informal meeting of the Economic and Finance Ministers and central bank governors of the European Union held in Valencia 30 September.

The meeting was devoted almost exclusively to discussion of economic and monetary union and, in particular, to various issues that the Council was asked to consider by the Cannes European Council, including the reference scenario for the transition to a single currency. It was agreed that further work would be needed in the run-up to the Madrid European Council.

The Council also considered the terms of European investment bank lending to Palestine.

The Council discussed the US proposal to establish a middle east development bank and decided that it required more work.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the Council meeting of the Economic and Finance Ministers of the European Union held in Brussels on 18 September. [37742]

Mr. Clarke: I represented the United Kingdom at the Economic and Finance Council of the European Union in Brussels on 18 September.

The Council considered Sweden's convergence programme under article 103/3. It discussed the format of the report on employment to be submitted to the Madrid European Council.

The Council had a preparatory discussion about its meeting with Finance Ministers of the central and east European countries on 23 October, which will consider the financial services in those countries and the need for further report.

The Council considered the constraints imposed on Community lending to third countries by the loan guarantee fund. The guarantee fund covers the European investment bank, Euratom and macro-economic lending. I argued that there should be no relaxation of the budgetary discipline imposed by the mechanism. No decisions were made and the Council will return to this issue at a later date.

The Council adopted, by qualified majority voting, the cross-border payments directive, which seeks to improve the transparency and efficiency of payments made between member states. I made it clear that, although we support the principle of the directive, the UK opposed the proposed limits to the scope of the directive and the proposed separate limits on the level of payments which would extract the money-back guarantee in the event of loss. I noted that this weakened the protection which the directive would give to small businesses and private individuals when making cross-border payments. The UK accordingly abstained in the vote.

Over lunch with the Finance Ministers of the EFTA nations we discussed unemployment and in particular approaches to tackling youth unemployment.

North Sea Revenue

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total amount of revenue to the Exchequer from north sea oil and gas since 1979. [37912]

Mr. Jack: Total revenues to the Exchequer from north sea oil and gas production from 1979–80 to 1995–96 are expected to be £77 billion.

Privatisation Proceeds

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total sum received to date from the sale of privatised industries. [37913]

Mr. Jack: Between 1979–80 and 1994–95 privatisation proceeds totalled some £61.6 billion.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

ROPA Scheme

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the realising our potential award—ROPA—scheme. [38689]

Mr. Ian Taylor: I am pleased to announce that I have today placed in the Library of the House a copy of a report on the first two years' operation of the ROPA scheme.

It is clear from the report that the ROPA scheme is fully living up to expectations. It encourages academic researchers to collaborate with industry on strategic research, and it provides responsive-mode funding for them to carry out undirected, curiosity-driven research of their own choosing.

Over the two years, there has been an excellent demand for ROPA awards with a total of 1,521 applications, resulting in 719 awards having been made, worth a total of some £71.1 million over the lifetime of the projects.

ROPA scheme applicants have stated that they are involved in basic or strategic research projects funded by industry or commerce to the value of about £260 million. This in itself is a tribute to the excellence and relevance of much of the science and engineering based and industry's appreciation of it.

The Government are committed to the need to ensure excellence in research. ROPA awards have gone to some first-rate scientists and departments to fund some innovative research projects. An analysis in the report shows that across all research councils, of those ROPAs which went to university departments within the scope of the 1992 research assessment exercise, 67 per cent. went to departments rated 4 or 5—the top two ratings—compared to 65 per cent. for councils' other grants. It also shows that the success rates of applicants to ROPA was about 47 per cent. overall, which is consistent with the range of success rates for councils other schemes—some 20 to 60 per cent.

The scheme has been widely welcomed both by industry and by academics. The evaluation contained in the report shows that the scheme has been successful and has justified its introduction.

National Exhibition Facilities

Mr. Corbett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what applications he has had for financial assistance towards the development of national exhibition facilities in London's east end from private developers. [37581]

Mr. Eggar: None.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his policy in respect of the provision of financial assistance towards the development of national exhibition facilities in London's east end by private developers. [37582]

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment today.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Civil Servants (Salaries)

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many (a) civil servants and (b) other public sector employees now have gross salaries of £50,000 or more per annum. [37883]

Mr. Horam: The information available centrally covers 96 per cent. of the home civil service. Of these, on 1 April 1995 some 1,800 staff or 0.4 per cent. were in receipt of a full-time equivalent gross salary in excess of £50,000 per annum. Information for other public sector employees is not available centrally.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Community Psychiatric Nurses

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many community psychiatric nurses were working in north and west Belfast in each of the last five years. [37554]

Mr. Moss: The information requested is as follows:

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many community psychiatric nurses have been employed on temporary contracts in north and west Belfast in each of the past five years; [37555]

(2) how many community psychiatric nurses are currently employed on temporary contracts within north and west Belfast. [37556]

Mr. Moss: The information requested is as follows:

1992	2
1993	2
1994	0
1995[1]	1

[1] Most recent available date.

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the number of community psychiatric nurses currently working in north and west Belfast. [37552]

Mr. Moss: At 31 March 1995, there were 20 community psychiatric nurses working in north and west Belfast health and social services trust.

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the number of community psychiatric nurses currently working in south and east Belfast. [37558]

Mr. Moss: At 31 March 1995, there were 21 community psychiatric nurses working in south and east Belfast HSS trust.

Planning Permission (Mill Sites)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the replacement of water turbine machinery in existing mill sites require planning permission. [37529]

Mr. Moss: The need, or otherwise, for planning permission would depend on the nature of the proposal under consideration. Advice on specific cases can be obtained from the divisional planning office in whose area the site is located.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Development Divisions

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has for the future work of each of the development divisions of his Department; and what forecast he has made of the likely change in their activities consequent on planned changes in the aid budget. [37576]

Mr. Hanley: Decisions on the allocation of resources and future development priorities in countries where we give aid will be made in the light of the outcome of the public expenditure survey. Discussions on this year's survey are now under way.

Contingency Reserves

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what occasions the contingency reserve specified in table 30 "Breakdown of Aid budget" of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office's 1995 departmental report has been included in aid budgets in previous years; and if he will list the level of the contingency reserve incorporated in the 1994 plans for 1994–95 indicating how the money was eventually allocated to programmes; and if he will give equivalent information for the 1993 plans for 1993–94, the 1992 plans for 1992–93, the 1991 plans for 1991–92 and the 1990 plans for 1990–91. [37227]

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 18 October 1995]: It is standard practice for a contingency reserve to be set aside in the aid budget. The information requested, covering the period 1990–91 to 1994–95, is set out in the table.

TRANSPORT

Train Drivers

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements he is making for the future training and inspection of railway locomotive drivers following recruitment of those already experienced and qualified who will be transferred to Transrail or similar operating companies. [37575]

Mr. Watts: The Railways (Safety Critical Work) Regulations 1994 require employers to ensure that all railway staff who carry out work defined as safety critical, including train drivers, are competent and fit to carry out their duties safely.

The regulations are monitored and enforced by the Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate.

Cyclists (Islington and Haringey)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what considerations led his Department to advise cyclists not to use the A1 red route in Islington and Haringey during recent re-surfacing; and if he will make a statement. [37977]

Mr. Norris: For safety reasons, the Highways Agency felt it necessary to advise cyclists to find alternative routes while essential repairs were being carried out on the A1. To keep traffic moving and to protect the work force it was necessary to operate with very narrow lanes. With the Archway road being steep and with insufficient room for motorists to pass cyclists, it was considered that cyclists would be at risk from impatient drivers or those exercising poor judgment.

SCOTLAND

Sex Offenders

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons have been released from Her Majesty's prisons in Scotland since 1985, having served sentences for sexual offences, are subsequently known to have reoffended with the same category of offences. [36339]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not available.

Traffic Flows

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the legal upper limit for the daily flow of traffic on single carriageways in Scotland. [36409]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There is no legal limit to the level of traffic flow on a single carriageway. Capacity of a road can be influenced by factors such as the quality of the road, the percentage of heavy goods vehicles or how hilly the road is. Research by the Transport Research Laboratory suggests that the maximum sustainable two-way flow for a high-quality standard single carriageway could range between annual average daily traffic flows of 14,000 to 19,000 with 0 to 30 per cent. HGVs and 21,000 to 28,000 for a similar wide single carriageway with the same range of HGVs. These figures inform the design guidance on which the assessment of new roads is based.

A92

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has had made of whether the A92 north of Dundee to Arbroath and Montrose fulfils the requirements set out in paragraph 2.1 of "Shaping the Trunk Road Network" in respect of industry, agriculture, tourism and access to ports; and if he will make a statement. [36406]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The intention of "Shaping the Trunk Road Network" was to provide the road user with a coherent and continuous system of routes serving destinations of importance to industry, commerce, agriculture and tourism. It also sought to define nationally important routes which will be developed in line with strategic national transport demands while ensuring that those roads which are of predominantly local importance are managed locally. The Government's decision on who should manage a particular road related not only to the volume of traffic on that road but to the nature of that traffic and where the economic benefit derived from that traffic fell. Although there is heavy traffic on the A92 near Dundee, the majority of trips on this road are local in nature. On this basis, the Government decided that, in national strategic terms, the route north from Dundee to Aberdeen is best served by the recently upgraded A90, while the A92, having greater importance locally, should remain under local management.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average daily traffic flow on each 10-mile section of the A92 between Dundee and Arbroath and Montrose; what percentage of traffic consisted of heavy goods vehicles; what was the average journey time between Dundee and Arbroath at peak times; and what was the accident rate in the years (a) 1993–1994 and (b) 1994–1995. [36410]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Traffic data on the Scottish road traffic database are stored by "link" rather than on a "mile by mile" basis. It is therefore not possible to list these data in 10-mile sections. Information on the annual average daily flow and percentage of heavy goods vehicles by each such "link" for 1994 is set out in the table:

	Link number	Length (km)	AADF (number of vehicles)	Percentage of HGV
From Dundee	254005	5.9	11,561	11
	254010	6.4	9,176	13
	245015	7.2	9,439	10
To Arbroath	254020	0.9	9,357	10
From Arbroath	254030	0.5	10,351	6
	254035	9.3	5,089	11

	254045	1.1	7,459	11
	254050	2.3	11,764	10

The Scottish Office national roads directorate has no information on the average journey time between Dundee and Arbroath at peak times.

It is not possible to provide information on the accident rate—accidents per 1 million vehicle kilometres—as such data for local roads are not stored on a link basis and is therefore not consistent with that held by The Scottish Office to trunk roads. Information on the number of accidents on the A92 from Dundee to Montrose is stored by calendar year and is set out in the following table:

Road Section	Year	Accident Severity Fatal	Serious	Slight	Total
Claypotts, Dundee to Arbroath town centre	1993	2	6	21	29
	1994	1	5	19	25
Arbroath town centre to Ferryden, Montrose	1993	1	10	9	20
	1994	1	7	15	23

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish details and costings of feasibility studies for section of the A92, including (a) junctions leading to Monifieth and Carnoustie, (b) bypasses at Muirdrum and Marywell, (c) the Montrose bridge, (d) the bridge over the north Esk and (e) trunk road spurs leading to Arbroath and Montrose. [36411]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office national roads directorate has carried out no such feasibility studies on the A92. The section of the A92 from the roundabout with the A972 Kingsway east in Dundee to the junction with the A90 at the south end of the Stonehaven bypass is a local road and the responsibility for improvements rests with the local roads authorities.

Trunk Roads

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the average daily traffic flows on trunk road spurs leading to Fraserburgh, Peterhead and Wick for (a) 1993–94 and (b) 1994–95; and what are the accident rates on these roads. [36412]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on the annual average daily flow for such trunk roads is as follows:

Trunk road	AADF 1993	1994
A92 (south of Peterhead)	3,338	3,505
A952 (south of Peterhead	7,501	5,113
A952 (north of Peterhead)	5,019	5,358
A92 (south of Fraserburgh)	6,215	6,420
A98 (west of Fraserburgh	2,036	2,074
A9 (south of Wick)	1,288	1,312

The accident rate—average for 1992 to 1994—on these roads is as follows:

Trunk road	Accident rate (Accidents per 1 million vehicle kilometres)
A92/A952 Aberdeen-Fraserburgh (via Peterhead)
Dual Carriageway	0.174
Single Carriageway	0.343
A9 Tore–Wick	0.173

[37150]

Mr. Kynoch: The information is as follows:

Source: GRO (Scotland).

Mr. Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the electorates of the electoral divisions of each region and islands area; and what were the electorates of the wards in each of the new council areas in Scotland, as of 16 February. [37151]

Mr. Kynoch: I will arrange for the information to be placed in the Library.

Council House Sales

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will amend the Tenants Rights etc. (Scotland) Act 1980 so that tenants of council houses whose titles disclose rights of pre-emption to superiors or prohibitions against sub-division are entitled to the right to buy. [37191]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson [holding answer 16 October 1995]: The Department is currently considering what action, including legislative change, may be needed to enable tenants in these circumstances to exercise the right to buy. We will announce the outcome as soon as possible.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations have been received and from which bodies that the Tenants Rights etc. (Scotland) Act 1980 should be amended in order to ensure tenants have a statutory right to purchase properties whose titles contain rights of pre-emption or prohibition against sub-division. [37192]

Mr. Robertson [holding answer 16 October 1995]: Since March, representations to this effect have been received from four Members of Parliament, from Moray, Badenoch and Strathspey and Ross and Cromarty district councils, the Society of Directors of Administration in Scotland and the Association of Chief Housing Officers, northern area.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Trials (Press Reports)

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on his policy and guidance framework for members of the judiciary facing similar circumstances in future, in respect of the suspension of the trial Regina v. Mr. Geoffrey Knights by Harrow Crown court as a result of advance press reports. [37693]

The Attorney-General: When a broadcast, press report or other publication which might prejudice a fair trial is brought to my attention I consider whether to bring proceedings for contempt of court against those responsible before the divisional court.

I apply the statutory test under the Contempt of Court Act 1981—namely, whether such a broadcast or publication has given rise to a substantial risk of serious prejudice to the administration of justice in the relevant case and have regard to the public interest. In so doing, I am exercising my function as guardian of the public interest in the enforcement of the criminal law.

I do not, however, give guidance to the judiciary. This is a matter not for me but for the higher judiciary.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many public interest immunity certificates his Department has issued in each year since 1986. [36686]

Mr. Boswell: No central record has been kept of the number of public interest immunity certificates issued by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food since 1986, and this could be drawn up only at disproportionate cost. However, a recent search of the files going back to 1992 has identified one certificate which has been issued since that date.

Case	Minister	Date

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what money has been given by the European Union to finance environmentally sensitive areas for each year since 1992; and if he will break down the figures for each of the nations of the United Kingdom. [36457]

Mr. Boswell: The following sums were paid by the EU towards the UK's environmentally sensitive areas schemes:

£ thousands

	1 January 1992 to 15 October 1992	16 October 1992 to 15 October 1993	16 October 1993 to 15 October 1994	16 October 1994 to date
England	—	4,150	4,404	9,689
Scotland	217	451	540	513
Wales	414	395	374	582
Northern Ireland	231	271	374	302
Total	862	5,267	5,692	11,086

The ESA schemes are funded under the European agriculture guidance and guarantee fund. As part of the CAP reform, funding for these schemes switched in 1993 from the guidance section of the EAGGF, which reimbursed the UK annually in arrears, to guarantee funding, which funds expenditure in-year. In some cases, therefore, the total reimbursement relates to more than one year's expenditure.

Fishing Vessels (Decommissioning)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what sums are being made available for decommissioning of inshore or medium distance fishing vessels in the years 1995–96 and 1996—97; what conditions are placed on the disposal or future use of craft where hulls are of (a) wooden and (b) metal construction; and what is the legislative basis for paying these sums. [37321]

Mr. Boswell: Some £12 million pounds is available for decommissioning in 1995–96 under the Fishing Vessels (Decommissioning) Scheme 1995. The scheme applies to vessels over 10 m in length. A further £12 million will be available in 1996–97 under a scheme to be laid in due course.

Grant is paid for the surrender of all licences issued in respect of a vessel by fisheries departments and for the vessel to be rendered permanently unseaworthy. The majority of vessels have been scrapped, although a limited number have been presented to museums and other charitable institutions after the above conditions have been met. No distinction is made in respect of the material of construction.

Copies of the application form and explanatory leaflet for the 1995 scheme, which set out in full the conditions for disposal of vessels, have been placed in the Library of the House.

European Funding

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list those projects which he has agreed to fund in partnership with the European agricultural guarantee and guidance fund in England; and if he will list the amounts involved in each case; [37685]

(2) when he will announce the level of matching funding for the European agricultural guarantee and guidance fund in England; [37686]

(3) how much matching funding will be available from his Department for European agricultural guarantee and guidance fund financed projects in cash and percentage terms in this and the next five years in England. [37688]

Mr. Baldry: Programmes which are co-financed by the European agricultural guarantee and guidance fund with this Department are as follows:

Guarantee Section

- Environmentally Sensitive Areas
- Nitrate Sensitive Areas (Environmental Protection (nutrients))
- Moorland Scheme
- Countryside Access Scheme
- Conservation, Habitat Scheme and Access
- Organic Farming
- Farm Woodlands

Guidance Section

- Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances
- Farm Grants
- Improved Marketing

Details of expenditure on these programmes, including planned expenditure for the next three years, and the amounts funded by the relevant section of the EAGGF, can be found in chapters 3 and 4 of the 1995 departmental report of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Intervention Board, copies of which can be found in the Library of the House.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Allowances

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of state for Social Security (1) if he will consult (a) mothers and (b) hon. Members and right hon. Members about the nature and value of cash allowances for children; [36969]

(2) what changes to the child benefit system of cash allowances for children he is considering. [36968]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The Government have a clear manifesto commitment to maintaining child benefit as the cornerstone of our policy for all families with children. We will continue to honour this.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about the rights of individual members of the public to make complaints to any of the appropriate ombudsmen about services or projects funded through the private finance initiative in his Department. [36826]

Mr. Burt: Complaints about projects or services carried out on behalf of the Department and its agencies and funded through the private finance initiative remain within the jurisdiction of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration, the parliamentary ombudsman. Members of the public have the same rights of complaint to the ombudsman as for complaints directly against Government Departments.

Unemployment

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the estimated cost of male unemployment in 1979; and what is the current annual cost. [37402]

Mr. Burt: Benefit expenditure on the unemployed was previously published in Government expenditure plans and is now given in the annual departmental report. Copies of both are held in the Library. The available information does not provide for an estimate of the cost of male unemployment.

Share Options

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will introduce proposals to outlaw companies using share options as a means of payment to low-paid employees unless such payments count for national insurance purposes. [37075]

Mr. Heald: Payments made by way of share options do count for national insurance contributions purposes. The exception is where employees are paid by the way of shares or share options in their own company. This policy helps employers to give employees a direct stake in their employing business and promotes wider share ownership.

We do not wish to prevent low-paid employees from benefiting from share options and therefore have no plans to change our policy.

Nuclear Test Veterans

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many outstanding claims are with the War Pensions Agency from ex-service personnel related to participation in the British nuclear test programme. [37503]

Mr. Heald: This is a matter for Mr. John Sheppard, the acting chief executive of the War Pensions Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Sheppard to Mr. Jeff Rooker, dated 18 October 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the number of outstanding War Pension claims from ex-service personnel who participated in the British nuclear test program.

The information requested is shown below and is broken down into those claims relating to the test in 1. The South Pacific and 2. Australia.

Outstanding claims

	South Pacific	Australia	Total
First claims to War Pension	22	11	33
Claims for further conditions	6	3	9
Totals	28	14	42

I hope you find my reply helpful.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Identity Cards

10. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the possible introduction of ID cards. [36515]

Mr. Howard: I published a consultation document on identity cards in May and asked for comments by the end of September. Some 3,000 replies have been received and I will be looking very carefully at all these responses before we consider whether and, if so, how an identity card should be introduced.

Young Offenders

20. Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total annual cost of dealing with young people in the judicial and custodial systems; and if he will make a statement. [36525]

Mr. Maclean: Including the costs to the courts, police, Crown Prosecution Service, legal aid and Prison Service of dealing with defendants aged 10 to 20, the total cost in 1993–94 was about £650 million.

Life Sentences

21. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received in relation to the tariff system for remission of life sentences. [36526]

Miss Widdecombe: I have received various representations about the tariff system for mandatory life sentence prisoners.

Private Security Industry

22. Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce statutory regulation of the private security industry. [36527]

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given earlier today to the hon. Members for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) and for Newham, North-West, (Mr. Banks).

Private Detective Agencies

23. Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to issue guidelines on the use of private detective agencies by Government Departments. [36528]

Mr. Maclean: We have no such plans.

Probation Service

24. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received regarding the probation service. [36529]

Mr. Kirkhope: Recent representations have included comments on the proposed arrangements for the recruitment and qualifying training of probation officers; the resources available for probation work; and changes to the boundaries of certain probation areas.

Police Grant Settlement

25. Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the police grant settlement. [36530]

Mr. Maclean: Representations about the police grant settlement for 1995–96 were received from 21 chief constables. Correspondence was also received from hon. Members, police and local authorities and members of the public.

Victims Helpline

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many calls the victims helpline has received since its inception; what has been the cost to date of the helpline to the public purse; and if he will make a statement on the feedback callers receive about action taken on their calls. [37692]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 19 October 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the Victims Helpline.

From its inception on 5 December 1994 to 4 October 1995 the Helpline had received 230 calls. The total cost over the same period is estimated to be in the region of £26,000 including the start-up cost of £8,400.

The Helpline passes the victims' concerns on to the relevant prison or young offender establishment and the caller is informed of the referral. At establishments, the nature of the action taken and feedback to callers will depend on the circumstances of the individual case.

Minority Languages

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the expected effect of the European Council of Ministers' decision to end funding for European minority languages and cultures (a) in total cash terms (b) on projects which currently are in receipt of European aid; [37682]

(2) what discussions he has had with his colleagues in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland concerning future European funding for minority languages and cultures; [37683]

(3) what decision the Council of Ministers has reached on the European funds for the promotion and safeguarding of minority languages and cultures from next year's European budget; and when that decision was taken; [37684]

(4) what discussions he has had with colleagues concerning the proposal by the European Council of Ministers to end European funding for minority languages and cultures. [37680]

Mr. Kirkhope: I am also replying on behalf of the Secretary of State for Wales.

At the First Reading of the 1996 European Budget on 24 July 1995, the Budget Council of the European Union reduced all budget lines for which it was agreed that there was no legal base, including this one, to a token entry to cover existing commitments only. This budget line has therefore been reduced from 3.5 mecu to zero.

The European Parliament will have its First Reading of the European Budget on 26 October and, as the expenditure is not compulsory, it remains open to the Assembly to reinstate the budget line as in previous years.

As the European Union Budget Council accepts that there is no legal base for this budget line, there is no case for holding discussions at ministerial level on the substantive merits of the expenditure.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has reviewed the use of public interest immunity certificates following judgments of the Court of Appeal in the Ordtech case. [36749]

Mr. Howard: No. The Court of Appeal upheld in full the certificates signed by the former Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, me and the deputy assistant commissioner for the Metropolitan police. As regards the material in respect of which public interest immunity certificates were made, the court ruled that the public interest immunity claims were well-founded and directed disclosure only of such parts of the material—or summaries thereof—as the signatories of the certificates had proposed and had volunteered for disclosure.

Public interest immunity certificates are one of the subjects under consideration by Sir Richard Scott. The Government will take careful note of any conclusions and recommendations in his report.

Police Horses

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police horses are currently in service with the Metropolitan police; what were the figures (a) one and (b) two years ago; what costs were involved in each case; and if he will make a statement. [36842]

Mr. Maclean: I am advised by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis of the information set out in the table.

	In service	Annual cost per horse[1] £
Current	160	3,000 to 4,000
As at 31 March 1994	193	3,000 to 4,000
As at 31 March 1993	190	2,000 to 3,000

[1] The annual cost is an average figure and does not include staff costs.

Air Weapons

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out the legislation which applies to age limits on owners of air weapons; and what plans he has to review this legislation. [37507]

Mr. Maclean: The acquisition, possession and use of air weapons are regulated by the Firearms Act 1968 which prohibits their sale or hire to anyone under the age of 17. Young people under 14 may not buy, hire, be given, or own an air weapon and may use one only if they are supervised by someone who is 21 or over. Those air weapons which are classified as "specially dangerous" under the Firearms (Dangerous Air Weapons) Rules 1969 are subject to firearm certificate control.

In its second annual report, the Firearms Consultative Committee, the independent statutory body established to advise Government on the firearms legislation, concluded that the existing law was adequate to deal with levels of misuse. The committee has this year re-examined the legislation surrounding the use of all firearms by young people generally, including air weapons. It has concluded that the existing provisions, while adequate, are complex and recommended that consideration should be given to simplifying them. This recommendation is currently under consideration.

General Pinochet

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what identity General Pinochet recently visited Britain; and what special protection he was offered. [37980]

Mr. Howard: I have no reason to believe that General Pinochet visited in other than his own name. It is not practice to comment on matters bearing on the security of individuals.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what entry requirements were made of General Pinochet during his recent visit to the United Kingdom. [37981]

Mr. Kirkhope: General Pinochet was admitted to the United Kingdom as a visitor in accordance with the immigration rules.

Guatemalan Military Visitors

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many visas to visit Britain have been granted to representatives of the Guatemalan military in each of the past five years. [37983]

Mr. Kirkhope: The available information shows that entry clearances have been issued under the Foreign and Commonwealth United Kingdom military training assistance scheme to three serving Guatemalan officers in 1995 to attend military training courses in the United Kingdom. In addition, five teachers working for the Guatemalan military authorities have been issued with entry clearances in 1995 to attend short English language training courses in the United Kingdom, under a scheme linked to UKMTAS. No entry clearances for journeys to the United Kingdom for this purpose were issued prior to 1995.

Prisoners (Early Release)

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received with regards to the early release of prisoners convicted for terrorism. [36509]

Mr. Howard: I have received a number of representations from Members of the House, members of the public and others arguing for and against the early release of terrorist prisoners.

Prisoners (Visits)

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes he proposes in the visiting arrangements for prisoners. [36510]

Miss Widdecombe: The Learmont report into prison security makes a number of recommendations to improve the supervision of visits for prisoners. As my right hon. and learned Friend indicated to the House on 16 October, Official Report, columns 30–33, he accepts the broad thrust of Sir John Learmont's analysis and shall give the House a full response in due course.

Youth Crime

Ms Hodge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what new initiatives he intends to take to tackle youth crime. [36531]

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend announced last week the setting up of an important new ministerial committee on preventing juvenile crime. The committee will ensure the effective co-ordination of the wide range of measures that are already being taken across Departments as well as initiating new steps to strengthen these.

Ethnic Minorities (Manchester)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has had from Manchester city council in relation to section 11 funding to meet the special needs of minority ethnic communities; what reply he is sending; what action he is taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kirkhope: The leader of the council wrote to my right hon. and learned Friend on 6 October. We are considering the points made and a reply will be sent shortly.

Circus Animals

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the legislation concerning the use of animals in circuses. [37509]

Mr. Kirkhope: None. I have received no evidence to suggest that the current law provides inadequate safeguards for circus animals.

Crime Prevention

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish details of those local authorities which have established designated units with a specific responsibility to reduce the fear of crime and improve crime prevention measures, reporting directly to the chief executive, by party of control. [37524]

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Bail

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many persons aged (a) 10 to 16 years, (b) 17 to 21 years and (c) over 21 years were on magistrates court bail at the latest date available; how many in each age group were the subject of a bail condition; what were those bail conditions; and for each age group, how many were re-arrested and subsequently charged with an additional offence; [37177]

(2) how many of those persons bailed from magistrates courts in England and Wales were bailed (a) unconditionally, (b) with a condition of residence, (c) with a condition of reporting to the police, (d) with a condition of loss of passport, (e) with a condition of a hostel and (f) with any other condition at the latest date available; and what percentage of each group were subsequently re-arrested and charged; [37175]

(3) how many persons were subject of (a) police bail and (b) magistrates court bail at the latest date available; and to how many were conditions attached; [37174]

(4) what percentage of all persons granted magistrates court bail was re-arrested and subsequently charged with a further offence. [37176]

Mr. Maclean: The available statistics are published annually in chapter 8 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", particularly tables 8.5 and 8.6. Information by age group for indicatable offences is given in table 1. Information of persons found guilty or cautioned for absconding after release on bail is given in table 2.

Information on bail conditions imposed by magistrates courts is not routinely collected. Provisional figures from a sample survey for the proportion given any bail condition are given in table 3. Information on the use of different types of bail conditions is given in a report published by the Institute of Local Government Studies for the Home Office in July 1995, "Conditional Bail or Bail with Conditions: the use and effectiveness of Bail Conditions", a copy of which is in the Library.

Information on offending on bail was given in Home Office research paper No. 65 "Offending while on bail: a survey of recent studies". More up-to-date figures are given in a 1994 report of the Hampshire police and probation service and show that 14 per cent. of persons given bail committed an offence during a period of police or court bail.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Home Office last carried out a comprehensive review of the Bail Act 1976; to what extent the review compared the effectiveness of different bail conditions; and if he will publish the results. [37178]

Mr. Maclean: Bail provisions are kept under review in various ways. Work on analysing the bail process in a number of areas took place in 1993 and 1994 and a first report was published by the Home Office research and planning unit in December 1994, RPU paper 90. A further report is expected next year.

A separate research report undertaken for the Home Office on the effectiveness of bail conditions was published earlier this year by Birmingham university.

Copies of both reports have been placed in the Library.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many bail information schemes are currently operating in (a) courts and (b) prisons; and what assessment he has made of their impact in respect of avoiding remands into custody. [37184]

Mr. Kirkhope: The most recent available information is that in March 1995 there were 235 schemes, most court based. Studies have shown that schemes have typically led to a reduction of about 10 per cent. in the proportion of relevant cases in which a custodial remand took place.

Police Officers (Assaults)

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the latest level of recorded assaults upon police officers. [37081]

Mr. Maclean: The information provided by Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary shows that there were 17,950 assaults on officers during 1993, the latest year for which figures are currently available. The corresponding figure for 1992 was 18,108. Figures for the financial year 1994–95 are expected to be published later this month.

Police Cautions

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many juveniles and young persons were informally cautioned by the police for each of the last three years; [37181]

(2) how many juveniles in England and Wales were known to have received (a) one informal caution, (b) two informal cautions, (c) three informal cautions, and (d) four or more informal cautions for the latest available data. [37182]

Mr. Maclean: No information is collected centrally on the extent of any police informal action. Some results from a sample of police forces on the method of police disposal of cases—prosecution, caution and "other means"—are being collected and will be published in due course.

Victim Support

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the delays in agreeing an automatic referral policy from the police to Victim Support arising from data protection considerations. [37077]

Mr. Kirkhope: Following meetings with the Data Protection Registrar, the police and Victim Support, it was agreed earlier this year that the police could continue to operate the automatic referral arrangements under which they routinely passed information about victims of crime to local victim support schemes. Police forces and victim support schemes were notified accordingly.

Electoral Registration

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what new initiatives his Department undertook to improve electoral registration for the recent annual registration process. [37083]

Mr. Kirkhope: We continue to give general guidance to electoral registration officers and to advise them on best practice based on annual research which we commission. We also run an annual publicity campaign to coincide with the canvass. This year, a new television advertisement with associated posters was commissioned and produced at a cost of £800,000.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will bring forward changes to election law to allow challenges to be made to the use of a vote by a person who is falsely registered. [37076]

Mr. Kirkhope: We are examining ways in which the possible risk of fraudulent electoral registration might be reduced and hope to reach conclusions soon.

Recorded Crimes

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many crimes were recorded in each borough by the Metropolitan police within each category of crime in the year to June 1995; how many incidents of theft or unauthorised taking of a motor vehicle and of theft from a motor vehicle were recorded in each borough; and how many of the burglaries recorded in each borough were (a) in a dwelling and (b) in another building. [37167]

Mr. Maclean: The information requested has been supplied by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis and is contained in the table. These figures have been revised since the publication of the recorded crime figures.

Immigration

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will specify the rules presently relating to permanent entry into the United Kingdom by British subjects resident in the various dependent territories, excluding Hong Kong; and what proposals he has to enable entry on the lines of that granted by France to French overseas department residents. [37283]

Mr. Kirkhope: With the exception of the Falkland Islands and Gibraltar, citizens of British dependent territories seeking permanent entry into the United Kingdom must meet the requirements of the Immigration Rules (HC395). I have no plans to enable entry similar to that operated by France in respect of residents of French overseas departments.

Asylum

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for asylum were made by individuals facing deportation from the United Kingdom in each of the last three years; how many applications for asylum are waiting to be determined; how many of those refused asylum used the appeals procedure in each of the last three years; how many cases were determined in the last six months; and how many of those refused asylum are known to have left the United Kingdom in the current year. [37416]

Mr. Kirkhope: Information on asylum applications and appeals from 1992 to 1995 is given in the table. The number of outstanding applications for asylum as at 31 August 1995 was 62,900. The number of decisions on asylum applications in the last six months—April to September 1995—was 10,600. A total of 1,465 persons who had been refused asylum were removed during January to August 1995. This figure includes those who had departed voluntarily during this time.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set out the total number of new homes started by (a) local authorities and new towns and (b) housing associations in Wales in each year since 1974 and his estimate of the likely number of starts in 1995 and 1996. [37491]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is given in the following table. Estimates for 1995 and for 1996 are not available.

Training for Work

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has of the number of people in training for work in (a) Merthyr Tydfil, (b) Rhymney, (c) Mid Glamorgan and (d) Wales; and what were the equivalent figures prior to the new training for work programme. [37549]

Mr. Richards: The information requested is collected on a training and enterprise council basis by the Department and is therefore shown only for Mid Glamorgan and Wales in the following table:

Miners (Morriston Hospital)

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many seriously injured miners from private mines have been admitted to Morriston hospital in the last year; and if he will make a statement. [37612]

Mr. Richards: The information requested is not available centrally.

Welsh Language and Culture

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list projects promoting and safeguarding the Welsh language and culture that have received European funding in the last five years. [37681]

Mr. Richards: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the member of the European Commission responsible for the environment concerning the report of the Worldwide Fund for Nature in relation to the provision of alternative feeding grounds for wading birds displace by the Cardiff bay barrage. [37815]

Mr. Hague: None.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place a copy in the Library of the Worldwide Fund for Nature report on the alternative feeding grounds required by the terms of the Cardiff Bay Barrage Act 1993. [37812]

Mr. Hague: The alternative feeding grounds were not a requirement of the Cardiff Bay Barrage Act but, during the passage of the Bill, an agreement was reached between the Government and conservation interests about bird reserve measures.

A copy of the WWF report was received by my Department on Wednesday 18 October which I have not seen. I understand that a response is being considered.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposal he has to acquire land for the provision of alternative feeding grounds for wading birds displaced by the Cardiff bay barrage by (a) compulsory purchase and (b) voluntary means; and if he will make a statement. [37818]

Mr. Hague: A site option studies report has been concluded by Cardiff Bay development corporation on the advice of the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds, the Countryside Council for Wales and the Land Authority for Wales. The final report was submitted to my Department on 16 October.

I will consider the report and make an announcement about land acquisition following detailed discussions between my officials and the European Commission.

The land acquisition procedures are matters for CBDC to pursue with the Land Authority for Wales.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to amend the grant in aid level to the Welsh Development Agency, following the discussions with the regional development directorate of the European Commission. [37813]

Mr. Hague: None, European funding is not a factor in determining the level of grant in aid to the Welsh Development Agency.

Public Bodies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what instructions he has issued to the non-departmental public bodies in Wales with respect to the supply of cars, either under executive car leasing schemes or by direct provision for chairmen, deputy chairmen and chief executives; if he will list for each quango which of the (a) chairmen, (b) deputy chairmen and (c) chief executives have an officially provided car; and under what type of scheme. [37817]

Mr. Hague: Non-departmental public bodies in Wales were reminded in spring 1994 of the conditions for the provision of cars. The fundamental principle is that a car should be made available to a member of staff or of the board only where this is the most cost-effective means of transport for official journeys. NDPBs' attention has also been drawn to guidance on various aspects of car provision produced by Her Majesty's Treasury's central unit on purchasing. Information on the provision to individuals within NDPBs' approved car schemes is not held centrally.

DEFENCE

Low Flying

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 20 December 1994, Official Report, column 1186, if he will list the date, location, type and nationality of aircraft involved, and circumstances of each of the breaches of low flying regulations over Wales in 1992, 1993 and 1994; and if he will provide similar details for the period since his previous reply. [37609]

Mr. Soames: Details of breaches of military low flying regulations over Wales confirmed by RAF police investigations are as follows:

Information for 1995 is not yet available.

The total of seven breaches in 1992 is one lower than identified in the answer to the hon. Member on 20 December 1994, Official Report, column 1186. The latter answer incorrectly included one incident involving flight through an area notified as a warning to aircrew rather than as a mandatory avoidance.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 20 December 1994, Official Report, column 1186, if he will make a statement on (a) the disciplinary actions taken against aircrew involved in each of the breaches of low flying regulations over Wales during 1994 and (b) the lessons learned from each incident. [37610]

Mr. Soames: None of the confirmed breaches by United Kingdom aircrew resulted in court martial or summary proceedings under the service discipline Acts. Such action is rare and is generally appropriate only if a breach of regulations resulted from negligence, indiscipline or a disregard for the rules. However, where formal disciplinary action is not appropriate, aircrew who have breached regulations may be interviewed by their station commander or other appropriate senior officer. Such action could be recorded on individual's career records and affect flying status and promotion prospects. It is not our policy to release details of such action. It is also the responsibility of senior officers to ascertain what lessons there are to be learnt from such incidents; central records are not maintained.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the locations and dates of periods of covert monitoring of low-flying operations conducted by Royal Air Force police since 30 April 1993. [37535]

Mr. Soames: Since 30 April 1993 the RAF police have carried out covert surveys of military low flying at the following locations:

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the NATO authorities concerning the potential use of the airspace of Partnership for Peace countries for low-flying training by the Royal Air Force. [37538]

Mr. Soames: There have been no such discussions.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many complaints were received about disturbance from military aircraft at the national eisteddfod in summer 1995. [37542]

Mr. Soames: My Department received one complaint about disturbance from military aircraft at the royal national eisteddfod between 5 and 12 August 1995.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many operational low-flying movements were authorised into each of the three tactical training areas in each month from September 1993 to the latest available date. [37546]

Mr. Soames: The number of operational low-flying movements authorised into each of the three tactical training areas in each month from September 1993 to August 1995, inclusive, is set out in the table:

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures are taken to ensure that information on equestrian events, with particular reference to horse race meetings, is obtained by his Department for onward transmission to aircrew planning low-flying sorties. [37536]

Mr. Soames: My Department does not seek to obtain information on such events. The organisers may, however, apply for a temporary avoidance area and, given reasonable notice, we make every effort to accommodate such requests.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the minimum permitted altitude for Royal Air Force aircraft flying in Danish airspace (a) on routine training sorties from bases outside Denmark, (b) on routine training sorties conducted during deployments to Danish air bases and (c) during NATO exercises. [37540]

Mr. Soames: Royal Air Force aircraft may, with the prior approval of the Danish authorities, fly in Danish airspace down to an altitude of 2,000 ft over populated areas and down to 1,000 ft over non-populated areas; flying down to 500 ft may also be authorised within designated exercise areas.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many complaints were received by his Department from addresses in (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) Scotland in each month since January 1994. [37543]

Mr. Soames: The numbers of inquiries and complaints relating to military low flying received by my Department since January 1994 from addresses in England, Scotland and Wales were as follows:

Month	England	Wales	Scotland
1994
January	237	27	31
February	129	19	55

June	523	78	188
July	670	91	190
August	482	75	165
September	359	105	104

In addition, my Department has received a number of inquiries and complaints about other matters, details of which are not held centrally.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his current policy on the retention in departmental records of the minutes of meetings of the military low flying management group; and what changes in that policy have taken place since 1979. [37537]

Mr. Soames: The minutes of the military low flying management group are placed on registered departmental files which are then reviewed in accordance with the provisions of the Public Records Acts of 1958 and 1967 and selected for retention or destroyed. Given that the group deals with short-term management issues, the minutes of its meetings do not record the discussion of issues which would justify their permanent retention. There has been no change in this policy since 1979.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the crew of the Tornado involved in the infringement of the Welshpool airport avoidance area on 16 July 1993 were found (a) to have been using a low flying chart marked with the January 1993 western extension to low flying area 9 and (b) to have obtained an authorisation to fly in low flying area 9. [37545]

Mr. Soames: The low flying chart current on 16 July 1993 reflected the westward extension to low flying area 9. The RAF police investigation did not establish whether the aircrew involved in the infringement of Welshpool airport were using a current chart. The aircrew had not planned to fly in low flying area 9 and had not obtained authorisation to do so.

Anti-tank Missile, Hayes

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the outcome of investigations into the discovery of an anti-tank missile at Hayes, west London, on 25 September 1994. [37530]

Mr. Soames: An investigation by the Army's special investigation branch concluded that the missile had probably been fired in the course of an exercise on Salisbury plain, picked up in its inert state by a member of the public and subsequently disposed of in the field at Hayes where it was later discovered. It was a practice version of the tube-launched optically steered wire guided—TOW—anti-tank missile, which does not have an explosive warhead. Having been fired, it contained no propellant or any other explosive or combustible substance.

Training Exercises

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the squadrons whose crews have participated in Flag, Air Warrior, Cope Thunder and similar exercises in north America since February 1992, giving in each case (a) the date and name of the exercise, (b) the number and types of aircraft involved and (c) the location of the squadron's work-up training prior to the exercise. [37544]

Mr. Soames: The information requested is provided in the table.

Service Deaths

Sir Anthony Durant: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the armed services were injured or killed on duty between 1 January 1992 and 1 January 1995. [37496]

Mr. Soames: The numbers of armed forces personnel injured or killed on duty between 1 January 1992 and 1 January 1995 are as follows:

Deaths	Army	Navy	Royal Air Force	Total
1992	43	7	16	66
1993	29	15	12	56
1994	44	11	10	65
	116	33	38	187

Injuries	Army	Navy	Royal Air Force	Total
1992	3,066	671	866	4,603
1993	2,387	519	762	3,668
1994	2,464	337	657	3,458
Total	7,917	1,527	2,285	11,729

The figures include all major and minor injuries requiring medical treatment. The injuries cover all aspects of duty including exercises, training and sport.

RAF Squadrons

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to complete the increase in the unit establishment of Nos. 3 and 4 Squadrons Royal Air Force from 12 to 18 aircraft; and if the numbers of pilots assigned to these units will be increased proportionately to the numbers of aircraft. [37539]

Mr. Soames: On 14 July 1994 the then Secretary of State for Defence announced our intention to increase RAF operational force levels by moving 12 Harrier GR7 aircraft from the reserve fleet to the front line. The aircraft establishment of Nos. 1, 3 and 4 Squadrons RAF will increase from 12 to 15 aircraft, and each of these squadrons will receive a further additional aircraft to provide an in-use reserve. This will be completed by 1 April 1996. Aircrew numbers in these squadrons will increase in line with these enhancements.

Tactical Training Areas

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if more than one squadron is permitted to book into a tactical training area at one time. [37547]

Mr. Soames: Aircraft from different squadrons are permitted to book into a tactical training area concurrently when taking part in joint exercises. Approval for such bookings is conditional upon all participating aircrews being briefed together to ensure that their movements are safely deconflicted.

TIALD Equipment

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many RAF Tornado squadrons are currently operational with the TIALD equipment; and what is the total planned number of such squadrons. [37534]

Mr. Soames: The thermal imaging airborne laser designation capability is a specialist role, which requires some aircraft modifications. One Tornado squadron is currently TIALD capable; it is planned that a further Tornado squadron will be proficient in the TIALD role in 1996. A further two squadrons will start TIALD training in 1997. Further opportunities to extend the RAF's TIALD capability will be possible when Tornado GR4 comes into service in 1988, since all these modified aircraft will be TIALD capable.

Eurofighter

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the Spanish authorities concerning the establishment of a multinational training facility for Eurofighter crews in Spain. [37541]

Mr. Soames: Discussions between the Eurofighter 2000 partner nations about the provision of training facilities are at an early stage. The possibility of a multinational aircrew training facility located in one of the partner countries is one of a number of questions which are being considered.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy concerning the Eurofighter 2000; and if he will make a statement. [37784]

Mr. Arburthnot: My Department remains fully committed to the development of the Eurofighter 2000 which it expects to provide the cornerstone of the RAF's future front-line capability.

Stealth Technology

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is his Department's policy regarding the sharing of stealth aeroplane technology with other countries; [37798]

(2) what discussions he has had with his French counterpart concerning the development of stealth technologies. [37724]

Mr. Arbuthnot: My Department recognises that collaboration with other countries on defence equipment projects can help to achieve better value for money and provide opportunities for British industry. We are therefore willing to share military technologies with other countries where it appears to be in the United Kingdom's defence interests to do so, subject to national and international security constraints and obligations. The position with aircraft stealth technology is kept under close review. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has held no discussions with his French counterpart concerning the development of such technologies.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of stealth technology for use in future RAF aircraft. [37725]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The need for stealth technology for any future RAF aircraft will be assessed on a case-by-case basis as part of the requirement formulation process.

WE177 Free-fall Bombs

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what procedures his Department will adopt to destroy WE177 nuclear free-fall bombs when they have been taken out of service. [37896]

Mr. Arbuthnot: A programme for the disposal of WE177 weapons is already in hand, relying upon well-established and controlled procedures.

Nuclear Submarine Bases

Dr. David Clark: to ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide a breakdown of the total annual security costs at (a) Faslane and (b) Coulport. [37895]

Mr. Soames: The total annual security costs for 1994–95 for Faslane were £15,400,000 for personnel and £500,000 for maintenance of security equipment and infrastructure. For Coulport they were £12,900,000 and £1,200,000 respectively. Additionally, there was a total cost of £2,100,000 for Royal Marines covering both sites; this figure cannot be readily allocated to individual bases.

NATO Joint Exercises

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the financial cost resulting from the lack of interoperability of the equipment used by NATO members on joint exercises during the last year. [37795]

Mr. Arbuthnot: We do not believe that the costs resulting from a lack of interoperability can be quantified in financial terms.

Anti-personnel Land Mines

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans his Department has to purchase anti-personnel land mines. [37893]

Mr. Arbuthnot: We are currently considering our future requirements for anti-personnel land mines, but have reached no decisions. Any new mines introduced into service would have a self-destruct capability and would fully meet the requirements of the international laws of armed conflict.

Computer Software Packages

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the British companies involved in the supply of software packages for the operation of his Department's equipment in each of the last 10 years; [37791]

(2) what is the financial value of contracts placed for the supply of software packages for the operation of his Department's equipment in each of the last 10 years. [37808]

Mr. Arbuthnot: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Commitments-Resources Balance

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what policies his Department is preparing to implement to improve the balance between the commitments and the resources and personnel of the armed services. [37807]

Mr. Soames: We remain committed to ensuring that our armed forces are properly resourced and manned to undertake the tasks which are placed upon them. The balance between commitments, capabilities, manpower and resources is continually monitored.

Fraud

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what actions he has undertaken to reduce fraud in his Department. [37889]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I refer the hon. Member to the answer he was given by the Minister of State for the Armed Forces on 28 February 1995, Official Report, column 516. Since then the Ministry's code of procurement ethics has been widely disseminated.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the private sector concerning methods to reduce fraud within his Department. [37890]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The Ministry of Defence fraud unit has had a range of contacts on fraud prevention with outside bodies including the unit for the study of white collar crime at Liverpool John Moore's university. On 20 January 1994 a contract was let to Control Risks Group to carry out a fraud risk assessment of the royal naval hospital, Haslar and to provide a methodology for use elsewhere. Its report was delivered on 18 March 1994.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he has given to further proposals which will eliminate fraud within his Department. [37898]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Measures already taken can be expected to have a developing impact. They will be reinforced as and when feasible and cost-effective.

Nuclear Test Ban

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made of the benefits to international security of a comprehensive test ban treaty; and if he will make a statement. [37897]

Mr. Arbuthnot: An effectively verified, global comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty would make a valuable contribution to the international non-proliferation regime.

Guatemala (Military Exercises)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what joint activities, conferences or manoeuvres have been undertaken with any of the Guatemalan military in each of the past five years. [37984]

Mr. Soames: A very small number of Guatemalan students have attended UK military training courses in the UK in 1995 and last year a UK training team based in Puerto Rico trained a Guatemalan contingent preparing to take part in the multinational force in Haiti.

Fire Engines (Merseyside)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the cost of providing his Department's fire engines for civilian duties on Merseyside on 17 August. [37779]

Mr. Soames: The fire engines provided on Merseyside belong to the Home Office. Military manpower and equipment is being provided, for which additional costs—which include such items as subsistence and accommodation, transport, fuel and other consumables—will be recovered. The costs identified to date for the deployment on 17 August are in the order of £5,000.

Royal Navy (Personnel and Pensions)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of comments received from interested parties as part of the prior options study concerning his Department's proposals for defence agency status for the Royal Navy's manning and pay and pensions organisations. [37783]

Mr. Soames: Careful account has been taken of the one expression of interest received as part of the prior options study into defence agency status for the Royal Navy's manning, pay and pensions activities.

Injunctions (Published Material)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many injunctions against the publication of material related to his Department were sought in the last year; and what was the total cost of this action. [37793]

Mr. Soames: One injunction against publication has been sought by my Department in the last year. The total cost of this action has yet to be determined.

Compensation Payments

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement concerning his Department's criteria for compensation payment. [37775]

Mr. Soames: The Ministry of Defence pays compensation in accordance with its obligations.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department has planned financial provision for the payment of compensation claims for (i) financial year 1995–96 and (ii) financial year 1996–97. [37778]

Mr. Soames: Yes.

Canada (Training Facilities)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with his Canadian counterpart regarding the potential usage by his Department of Canadian air force and army training facilities. [37716]

Mr. Soames: The UK armed forces make extensive use of the low flying training facilities at Goose Bay and the army training facilities at Wainwright and Suffield. My meeting with the Canadian Minister of National Defence on 21 September included discussions on the future continued use by the UK of these facilities.

Surface Ship Torpedo System

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the financial value for British companies of the joint US-UK surface ship torpedo defence system; and if he will make a statement. [37718]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Up to £60 million of the total project cost of £80 million is expected to be placed with UK industry. A contract for the current phase of demonstration and validation has been awarded to a consortium led by Westinghouse and a number of British firms, including Ultra, BAeSEMA, Ferranti Thomson Sonar Systems and GEC Ferranti Systems, will benefit.

Privatisation

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what proposals he is currently considering regarding the future privatisation of activities and services currently conducted by his Department's personnel; and if he will make a statement; [37720]

(2) which services and activities conducted by his Department are currently the focus of prior options studies. [37782]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The Ministry of Defence continues to play a full part in the Government's competing for quality initiative, which provides a framework of technique and processes for delivering cost-effective and high-quality defence support through the increased use of competition and private sector involvement. Under the Department's CFQ programme all defence support activities are subject to continuous review by senior managers and budget holders under the prior options process. This process considers privatisation, strategic contracting-out or market testing, the objective in each case being to gain maximum efficiency through exposure to competitive pressures. The projects and activities which are considered for review under the CFQ programme are published in "Government Opportunities", available from the Library of the House.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he is considering for the privatisation of weapons and ammunitions transportation; and if he will make a statement. [37728]

Mr. Soames: The Ministry of Defence is considering the market testing of its freight distribution service as part of the Government's "Front Line First" initiative. Contractors are being invited to bid in competition with existing military organisations. The transportation of weapons and ammunition is a small part of this overall task. Private companies and manufacturers themselves already move ammunition and explosives on a regular basis. Safety and security will be paramount considerations in the proposed market test. The transportation of freight in the forward operational areas will, however, remain in-house.

Unmanned Air Vehicles

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the development prospects and potential of unmanned air vehicles. [37789]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The Army has a requirement for an unmanned surveillance system which, subject to the satisfactory completion of an additional programme of work to resolve remaining technical difficulties, is to be met by Phoenix. I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my predecessor on 5 April 1995, Official Report, column 1142, and on 21 April 1995, Official Report, column 308.

My Department monitors developments in unmanned air vehicles in order to aid assessment of their suitability to meet other future requirements.

Memorandum of Understanding

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the terms of the memorandum of understanding signed with the United States in December 1994 concerning the development and procurement of defence equipment; and if he will place a copy of the memorandum in the Library. [37809]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my predecessor on 16 December 1994, Official Report, column 822. It is not our policy to place copies of MOU in the Library of the House.

Early Retirement and Redundancy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of early retirement and redundancy packages for armed forces personnel for each of the last 10 years. [37781]

Mr. Soames: During the period from the financial year 1984–85 to 1991–92 there were only a small number of armed forces personnel who left the service on redundancy. The costs incurred would have been relatively minor and are not separately identifiable from the overall pension totals.

The "Options for Change" redundancy programme began in financial year 1992–93. In that year, redundancy payments of £232 million were made. In 1993–94 and 1994–95 the payments totalled £509 million and £453 million respectively.

These payments include special capital payments, and early payment of terminal grants, commuted pension payments and the first year's payment of immediate pensions.

Defence Agencies

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which services and activities conducted by his Department are currently being considered for defence agency status. [37785]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The information requested is contained in the "Next Steps Review 1994", Cm 2750, pages xiv and xv, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Since that document was published, the Army Base Storage and Distribution Agency, the Defence Transport and Movements Executive, the Naval Recruiting and Training Agency and the Army Technical Support Agency have been launched.

Equipment Interoperability

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy regarding equipment and force interoperability between (a) NATO countries and (b) "Partnership for Peace" countries. [37796]

Mr. Soames: Our policy is to maximise interoperability with the armed forces of our allies through participation in NATO's training and exercise programmes and by aiming to ensure that equipment purchased for the British armed forces meets agreed NATO interoperability standards, where they are consistent with our operational requirements.

One of PFP's declared objectives is the development, over the longer term, of forces that are better able to operate with NATO allies. Within the PFP planning and review process, partners have agreed specific goals for improving interoperability with alliance forces of units identified for PFP missions and activities.

US-UK Defence Trade

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals for securing a more level playing field in defence trade with the US his Department is currently considering; [37804]

(2) what assessment he has made of the balance of defence trade with the United States of America. [37786]

Mr. Arbuthnot: We make every effort to promote a two-way street in defence trade with the US where we assess the average ratio over the past five years has been 2:1 in favour of the United States. A level playing field is crucial to this aim and a memorandum of understanding on co-operation in R and D, production, procurement and logistics support of defence equipment is in place to help achieve this.

Military Exercises

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what international military exercises the British armed forces have carried out with (a) NATO members and (b) former members of the Warsaw pact in each of the last three years. [37894]

Mr. Soames: The following details cover exercises at company level, or equivalent, or above:

1 April 93 to 31 March 94

(a) Number of exercises carried out with NATO members: 227

(b) Number of exercises carried out with former Warsaw Pact: Nil

1 April 94 to 31 March 95

(a) Number of exercises carried out with NATO members: 203

(b) Number of exercises carried out with former Warsaw Pact: 8

1 April 95 to 31 March 96

(a) Number of exercises carried out with NATO members: 173

(b) Number of exercises carried out with former Warsaw Pact: 10

Computing Devices of Canada

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the financial value of the contract placed with Computing Devices of Canada to supply a software package for the multiple launch rocket system fire control system. [37792]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Computing Devices of Canada is one of Royal Ordnance's main subcontractors for the development and production of a reduced range practice rocket for use with the Army's multiple launch rocket system. Details of Royal Ordnance's contract with CDC are a matter for the companies.

Future Offensive Aircraft

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department has defined a requirement for the future offensive aircraft to replace the Tornado GR1/4; and if he will make a statement. [37800]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Work to define the requirement for a future offensive aircraft is under way and preliminary studies into relevant technologies are in progress.

Joint Rapid Deployment Force

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current operational capability of the joint rapid deployment force; when it will take part in a full-scale exercise; and what elements will deploy as part of this exercise. [37774]

Mr. Soames: Our intention is that the joint rapid deployment force should be operational by 1 August 1996. It will bring together the existing operational capabilities of the units assigned to it to best, joint effect in responding to future short-notice contingencies. It is too early to say when it will take part in a full-scale exercise or which units will be involved.

Office Furniture, Keynsham

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who is the supplier of the office furniture for the new Ministry of Defence Procurement Executive headquarters in Keynsham; what is the value of the contract; when it was advertised in the contracts supplement of the Official Journal of the European Union; and which is the country of origin of the furniture concerned. [37816]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Contracts for the supply of office furniture for the new Ministry of Defence Procurement Executive headquarters at Abbey Wood, north Bristol, were recently awarded to Haworth UK Ltd., a central London-based company, and Herman Miller, a Bath-based company. Haworth is contracted to supply office and ancillary chairs at a value of £1.8 million, ex VAT; Herman Miller will be supplying office workstations, containers and ancillary furniture at a value of just under £6.4 million ex VAT. Requests for expressions of interest for the Abbey Wood furniture package were sought following an advertisement placed in the contracts supplement of the Official Journal of the European Union during November 1993. Seventy-five per cent. of the furniture being supplied by Herman Miller is being manufactured and produced in the UK. The majority of the remaining furniture is being sourced from various locations within the EU.

Redundant Military Sites

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the cost of decontaminating his Department's land in each of the last 10 years. [37780]

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my right hon. Friend the then Minister of State for Defence Procurement on 18 April 1995, Official Report, column 126.

ASTOR Surveillance System

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are his Department's procurement plans for the ASTOR surveillance system; and if he will state the proposed in-service date. [37788]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Two consortia are currently undertaking parallel project definition studies to identify the most cost-effective procurement option for the ASTOR surveillance system. These studies are expected to be completed by mid-1996. Once these studies have been evaluated, and subject to the necessary approvals, it is the intention to select a prime contractor, through competition, to carry out full development, production and initial in-service support. It is expected that the contract would be let in 1998. The in-service date for the full system is 2003.

Defence Diversification

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about his Department's policy regarding defence diversification. [37794]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Defence diversification is a matter for individual companies. It is for them and not for Government to decide what industry should produce, and how to respond to changing markets. My Department's role is to keep companies as well informed as possible about our future requirements to enable them to make soundly based commercial decision about their future strategy.

Upholder Submarines

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his assessment of the financial cost of maintaining the four Upholder class submarines in their current status. [37715]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The residual costs of the Upholder programme, pending sale, are of the order of £6 million for 1995–96.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with his (a) Canadian, (b) Chilean and (c) Portuguese counterparts concerning the transfer or sale of four Upholder class submarines; and if he will make a statement. [37717]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Since our decision in 1993, announced in Command Paper 2270, to withdraw the four Upholder class submarines from RN service, the Defence Export Services Organisation has offered the submarines for sale or lease to friendly countries.

It is not MOD policy to release information on discussions with any prospective customer without its express agreement. However, I can confirm that a fully costed proposal is being considered by the Canadian Cabinet on whether to acquire the submarines, and a decision is expected before the end of the year.

Commercial Espionage

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the incidence of commercial espionage conducted by other countries against his Department with regard to contract bid information. [37719]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Threats to my Department are kept under constant review, including the one outlined by the hon. Member.

Road Accidents

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many accidents on public roads involving vehicles owned by his Department have been recorded in each of the past five years; and if he will state in each instance the (a) date and time, (b) location and (c) cause of accident. [37721]

Mr. Soames: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Tornado

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement of the results of his Department's study into the replacement of the Tornado F3 aircraft by the US F16 aircraft. [37723]

Mr. Arbuthnot: No such study has been undertaken. We are considering a proposal to upgrade the Tornado F3's weapon systems and, as a routine part of our evaluation process, the comparative costs of other options are being looked at.

Hercules Transport Aircraft

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Hercules C-130J transport aircraft will enter service. [37727]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The formal roll-out of the first C-130J took place at Lockheed Aeronautical Systems Company Marietta, Atlanta, on 18 October. On current plans the Hercules C-103J transport aircraft will enter service in July 1998.

Extended Range Ordnance

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the projected in-service dates of the 155 mm/52 calibre extended range ordnance and the modular charge system for the AS90. [37790]

Mr. Arbuthnot: On present plans we expect the first AS90 howitzers to be converted to extended range ordnance with modular charge system by the turn of the century, which would be consistent with the current in-service dates.

Mr. David Hart

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date he appointed Mr. David Hart as his independent advisor. [37888]

Mr. Portillo: I invited Mr. Hart to continue as an unpaid independent adviser to the Secretary of State for Defence when I took up my appointment.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what current procurement contracts Mr. David Hart provides advice. [37887]

Mr. Portillo: Mr. David Hart is currently providing advice to me on the following equipment projects

EF 2000
ASTOR
Phoneix
Tornado F3 upgrade
Long Range Conventionally Armed Stand Off Missile

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if Mr. David Hart provides advice on procurement decisions. [37803]

Mr. Portillo: I have invited Mr. Hart to provide advice on a small number of procurement issues.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when Mr. David Hart was given security clearance for work in his Department; if he holds a Ministry of Defence pass; and what access he has to classified MOD papers. [37801]

Mr. Portillo: Following his appointment as an unpaid independent adviser by the former Secretary of State for Defence, Mr. Hart was subject to the checks necessary to permit him to have, from time to time, access to classified information. He holds a Ministry of Defence pass.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if Mr. David Hart has (a) an office and (b) a secretary within his Department's main building. [37891]

Mr. Portillo: No. The limited administrative support so far required to enable him to fulfil his role has been provided on a "de minimis" basis.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assurances have been requested from Mr. David Hart concerning his access to confidential information relating to the British defence industry. [37886]

Mr. Portillo: Mr. Hart fully accepts his duty to the Crown to safeguard all information, documents, or other articles given to him by the MOD; and knows that, like any other individual, he is subject to provisions of the Official Secrets Act 1989. In addition, he owes me a personal duty of confidence.

Mr. Hart also knows that he must declare any conflict between his private interests and his role as my independent adviser, so that I could then decide how to proceed.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what capacity Mr. David Hart attends departmental meetings. [37802]

Mr. Portillo: As my unpaid independent adviser.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with Mr. David Hart concerning the situation in the former Yugoslavia. [37892]

Mr. Portillo: I have discussed various aspects of the situation in the former Yugoslavia with Mr. Hart.

HEALTH

Hypothermia

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many death certificates mentioned hypothermia as (a) main cause of death or (b) contributory cause of death in each year and in each month for the past five years; [37312]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 20 January, Official Report, column 1125, how many people died of hypothermia in (a) 1993 and (b) 1994, by regional health authority and in Wales. [37352]

Mr. Sackville: The coding of causes of death in England and Wales was changed in 1993. Though the results from this are generally satisfactory, the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys has identified significant problems in the coding of external causes of death. Certifications of deaths in 1993 and 1994 which could have been due to external causes are all being examined and re-coded as necessary. More reliable data, comparable to that for previous years, will be available in 1996. These problems may have affected the results for hypothermia in 1993 and 1994.

Deprivation Payments

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what budgets have been available for deprivation payments to GPs in each year since the scheme was introduced; and what relationship exists between nationally assessed patterns of deprivations and changes in his Department's budget for such payments. [37420]

Mr. Malone: General practitioners' deprivation payments are not made from a cash-limited budget, but depend on the number of patients living in under-privileged areas as classified by the Jarman index. These payments are adjusted each year for population movements. Areas were reclassified this year to allow for the use of 1991 census data in the index. The table gives the annual payments in England since the scheme was introduced.

GMS expenditure deprivation payments England

England	£000s
1990–91	28,759.606
1991–92	30,906.801
1992–93	33,063.471
1993–94	34,129.284

Prescribing

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, in what circumstances general practitioners are required to contribute towards the full cost of treatment prescribed for patients. [37583]

Mr. Malone: General practitioner fundholders are expected to meet their prescribing costs from allocated budgets. However, health authorities hold contingency reserves for exceptional, uncontrollable or unforeseeable changes in prescribing expenditure.

Trade Union Meetings

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many meetings there have been since 1 September

1993 between the Secretary of State for Health or another Minister and a representative of a trade union; and if he will indicate the subject matter of each meeting. [37379]

Mr. Malone: Ministers regularly meet health service and other trade unions about a wide range of issues. The full information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

GP Lists

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Heath, pursuant to his answer of 21 June, Official Report, column 259, how many patients have been deregistered by their general practitioners or by family health services authorities at the request of the doctor in each three-month period for which figures are available. [37374]

Mr. Malone: Data on patient movements, including those removed from a general practitioner's list at the request of the doctor, are collected on an annualised basis. The information requested is not available centrally.

Management Costs

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the difference between the findings of the Audit Commission report on expenditure on management trusts and information provided through parliamentary questions on expenditure on general and senior managers. [37427]

Mr. Malone: My right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State for Health confirmed on 7 June 1995 that national health service trusts would publish information about their management costs, based on the Audit Commission's M1 definition, in their annual reports and accounts. These management costs in trusts relate to the salaries of all those managers, excluding clinicians, earning over £20,000 per annum, those in a few specified posts regardless of salary, and the cost of management consultancy. In its report "A Price on their Heads: Measuring Management Costs in NHS Trusts", published on 7 June, the Audit Commission gave the average figure for senior management costs in trusts in England and Wales for 1993–94 as 4 per cent. of their net revenue expenditure. We shall be publishing later this year figures for all trusts for 1994–95.

Comparable figures have not been provided before in answers to parliamentary questions. Information on NHS management costs has previously been provided in terms of the salaries and wages of all staff paid on general and senior manager terms—regardless of what function they discharge—in regional, district, special health authorities and trusts. Total salary costs for such staff in England in the financial year 1993–94, the latest year for which figures are available, were 4.4 per cent. of the total pay bill.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health announced on 11 October that he was seeking a 5 per cent. cash reduction—8 per cent. in real terms—in the costs of running health authorities and in NHS trust management costs is 1996–97 compared with planned spending in 1995–96. The savings from reducing these costs, which amount to some £140 million in real terms, will be available for patient care.

In the case of health authorities, we shall require nationally the costs of new authorities to be contained within a ceiling of £450 million. NHS executive regional offices will be responsible for agreeing cost figures for individual authorities.

For NHS trusts, the target will relate to the Audit Commission's M2 definition of management and administration costs which extends to include the salary costs of all staff in corporate functions. We shall be looking to each trust to set out in its business plan its cost limits on this basis and to publish these costs in its annual report in future.

General and Senior Managers

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 19 July, Official Report, column 1289, what is his Department's estimate of the increase in general and senior managers between 1991 and 1992 and between 1992 and 1993. [37409]

Mr. Malone: For the number of general and senior managers in the national health service in England in 1991, 1992 and 1993, I refer the right hon. Member to the statistical bulletin for NHS hospital and community health services non-medical staff in England for 1982 to 1992 and 1983 to 1993, copies of which are in the Library.

Private Sector Health Care

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 22 June, Official Report, column 260, what has been the average expenditure per district health authority and per family health services authority on purchasing care from the private sector in each year since 1990–91; and what proportion of such expenditure is estimated to be purchases from the voluntary or non-profit sector. [37426]

Mr. Sackville: The information is not collected centrally.

Ambulance Services

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many ambulance services have motor cycle paramedics; how many are currently being trained; what information has been gathered about their performance; what plans are in train for London; and if he will make a statement on their contribution to the ambulance service as a whole. [37234]

Mr. Sackville: The information is not available centrally. It is for ambulance services to decide on the value of motor cycle paramedics in their area. The London ambulance service, along with other services, considers motor cycle paramedics to be a valuable first response service for the seriously ill and injured.

Bed Occupancy

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information about occupancy rates within different types of bed, defined as acute, geriatric and mentally ill, the Department collects; and what has been the change in occupancy rate over the past five years; and if he will make a statement on occupancy rates of over 100 per cent. [37235]

Mr. Sackville: Information on bed occupancy rates is not collected centrally. Information on bed days—completed episodes by clinical speciality in national health service hospitals in England is published each year in "Hospital Episode Statistics, Volume 1". Information for the years 1988–89 to 1993–94 are available in the Library.

Winter Deaths

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the excess winter death rates were in England in 1993–94 and 1994–95; and if he will make a statement on factors influencing the rate and what initiatives the Government have undertaken in the last five years to affect the rate. [37376]

Mr. Sackville: The excess winter death index for 1993–94 in England and Wales is 14.2. The figure for 1994–95 is not yet available. The index expresses the number of excess winter deaths as a percentage of the average of the number of deaths in the preceding autumn and following summer periods. Excess winter mortality is a complex phenomenon which cannot be directly correlated to cold weather.

The Government have continued to fund the highly successful "Keep Warm, Keep Well" campaign, which provides a freephone advice line throughout the winter months. The accompanying brochure, which is available in 11 languages, provides information on financial help, home insulation, heating, and other measures to combat the effects of cold weather, including vaccination against flu.

Ministerial Visits

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 20 March, Official Report, column 40, how many (a) locality or joint commissioning projects and (b) fundholding practices he or his Ministers have visited in the past 12 months. [37377]

Mr. Malone: Ministers visited around 50 general practitioner premises in the past 12 months. Visits to fundholding and non-fundholding practices are not recorded separately. Ministers also met general practitioners in a wide range of meetings organised by health authorities and national organisations of various kinds, as well as at conferences, some organised by specialist GP organisations. There is no standard definition of locality or joint commissioning projects.

Ministerial Meetings

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 24 April, Official Report, column 322, how many meetings there have been since 31 March between the Secretary of State or another Minister and representatives of private health insurance companies; and if he will make a statement on the discussions. [37378]

Mr. Sackville: One such meeting has taken place. My hon. Friend the Minister for Health met representatives of Private Patients Plan—PPP—on 13 July 1995.

Beta-interferon

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will detail the guidelines and financial arrangements he is making to ensure that the drug beta-interferon can be prescribed to patients suffering from multiple sclerosis who are assessed as likely to benefit from it. [37578]

Mr. Malone: No beta-interferon drug has been licensed for use in the United Kingdom. A licence application for one such drug is currently being considered within the European centralised licensing procedure. The Department of Health is developing guidance to help the national health service plan for the introduction of the drug, subject to the outcome of the licence application.

Specialist Medical Training

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made with the implementation of the specialist medical training reforms recommended by the chief medical officer's working party on specialist medical training. [38730]

Mr. Dorrell: In November 1993, my right hon. Friend the then Minister for Health announced that the Government accepted in principle the recommendations made by the working party on specialist medical training chaired by the chief medical officer. In accordance with the time scale set out in the report, the new specialist registrar grade will be launched on 1 December 1995 in the two vanguard specialties of general surgery and diagnostic radiology. The main specialty commissioning date will be 1 April 1996 and I envisage that all specialties will have begun the transition process to the new grade by 1 April 1997. Detailed guidance will be issued to the national health service shortly to enable the regional deans of postgraduate medicine to spearhead the changes in training programmes needed to deliver the specialist training curricula recently formulated by the medical royal colleges.

Training standards will be overseen by the new specialist training authority of the medical royal colleges, shortly to be established. As well as maintaining standards, the specialist training authority will be responsible for awarding the new certificates of completion of specialist training. These will for the first time provide the defined end point for specialist training required to ensure that all those competing for NHS consultant posts have completed their training properly. Obtaining the CCST will entitle the fully trained doctor to be admitted to the specialist register, which will be kept by the General Medical Council. There will be other routes to the specialist register, for existing NHS consultants as part of the transitional process and for doctors who have followed an unconventional but acceptable training pathway, possibly via research or academic medicine involving a high degree of specialisation at an early stage of training. The GMC will continue to have the statutory duty of co-ordinating all stages of medical education.

I have considered the resource implications of these changes carefully; while there is no need for any overall increase in NHS funds to pay for them, I am considering the need for some short-term investment in additional training programmes to enable trusts to be able to recruit extra consultants. Decisions will be announced later at the appropriate point in the general NHS allocation process.

Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to review the functions of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority. [38731]

Mr. Sackville: It is Government policy that all non-departmental public bodies should be reviewed after five years in existence. The Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority held its first meeting on 4 October 1990 and became fully operational on 1 August 1991. A full review of the authority by the Department of Health has started. A copy of the terms of reference has been placed in the Library.

NHS Early Retirement

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the answer of 18 July, Official Report, columns 13–14, if he will make a further statement about the numbers of NHS staff who took early retirement. [38732]

Mr. Sackville: I regret that there were errors in the previous reply. The correct information is as follows:

The number of people taking early retirement age 50 and over, except those retiring because of ill-health in each of the last three years is:

1991–92: 2,818
1992–93: 3,313
1993–94: 5,837

National health service employers meet the full cost of paying these benefits early, including any compensation amounts. The total costs in each of the last three years are:

1991–92: £19,222,371
1992–93: £27,065,579
1993–94: £42,522,384

The cost of ill-health retirement is not charged to NHS employers. The number of people taking ill-health retirement in each of the last three years is:

1991–92: 7,323
1992–93: 8,327
1993–94: 9,520

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Schools (Fire Safety)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment she has made of the continuing adequacy of the current regulations made under the Education Act 1944 for ensuring the safety of schools and their occupants in case of fire. [37761]

Mrs. Gillan: A number of requirements relating to fire safety in school buildings are set out in the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981, which are made under section 10 of the Education Act 1944. These requirements have been retained and repeated in the revised version of those regulations, which subject to the approval of Parliament, will enter into force from next January. Buildings which comply with the requirements will provide an adequate level of protection against fire.

Detailed guidance about fire and the design of educational buildings appears in the Department's "Building Bulletin 7."

Teacher Absences

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will set out the average days lost per year per teacher for each of the last 10 years; and if she will make a statement. [37643]

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is not available.

Pupil Exclusions

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the total number of pupils permanently excluded from (a) grant-maintained schools and (b) LEA-maintained schools in each of the last five years. [36644]

Mr. Robin Squire: Returns made under the National exclusions reporting system showed that 2,910 pupils were permanently excluded from maintained schools between April 1990 and April 1991 and 3,833 between April 1991 and April 1992. A survey published by the Department in July showed that, in the academic year 1993–94, 8,960 pupils were permanently excluded from secondary schools, 1,230 from primary schools and 434 from special schools within the 101 LEAs that responded. Separate data for grant-maintained and LEA-maintained schools are not available centrally.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) secondary and (b) primary school children who have been permanently excluded have received tuition (i) at home and (ii) in a pupil referral unit in each of the last five years. [35838]

Mr. Squire: Information for each of the last five years is not available centrally.

A survey published by the Department in July showed that, during the autumn term 1994, 3,032 permanently excluded secondary and 212 primary pupils were attending pupil referral units, and 2,122 secondary and 338 primary pupils were receiving home tuition. These figures represent responses from 101 of the 109 LEAs.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) secondary and (b) primary school children have been permanently excluded in each local education authority in each of the last five years; and if she will give the figures as a proportion of the total school roll. [35837]

Mr. Squire: This information is not available centrally.

Expenditure (Calderdale)

Sir Donald Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will set out the increases in real terms for education spending for each education sector in Calderdale since 1980. [36786]

Mr. Robin Squire: The increase or decrease in expenditure by Calderdale local education authority on pre-primary and primary education and secondary education, between 1979–80 and 1993–94, the latest year for which outturn figures are available, is shown in the table:

Calderdale LEA: Net recurrent expenditure, real terms

Year	Pre-primary and primary education £000	Secondary education £000
1979–80	21,880	24,630
1993–94	33,366	22,833
Increase or decrease	11,486 (34.4 per cent.)	–1,797 (–7.9 per cent.)

Note:
These figures exclude spending by GM schools.

Free School Meals

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of (a) primary school children and (b) secondary school children have been eligible for free school meals in the last three financial years in each English and Welsh county. [36772]

Mrs. Gillan: Information on pupils known to be eligible for free school meals in each local education authority area in England in 1993, 1994 and 1995 (provisional) is shown in the table.

Information on pupils in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

[1] Day pupils known to be eligible for a free school mean as a percentage of day pupils on roll

Student Loans

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of students applied for student loans in each academic year since the inception of the student loan scheme; how many former students have started to repay their loans; and how many former students have refused to repay any of their loan although able to do so. [37154]

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what is the total amount of loans outstanding under the student loan scheme; and how much has been repaid to date; [37252]

(2) how many students have now received loans under the students loan scheme. [37251]

Mr. Forth: This is a matter for the Student Loans Company. I have asked the acting chief executive to write to the hon. Members.

Modern Manufacturing Apprenticeship Scheme

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the total Government expenditure to date upon the modern manufacturing apprenticeship scheme. [37247]

Mr. Paice: This is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what changes she proposes to the rules regarding sale of assets by grant-maintained schools. [37063]

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced on 12 September 1995 that, as from next April, grant-maintained schools will be able to retain the full proceeds from the disposal of surplus assets. We are consulting widely on the proposed change and it is, therefore, too early to say how the new arrangements will work.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the total number of pupils in grant-maintained schools eligible to bid for capital grant for named projects in each financial year from 1990–91 to 1995–96; and what was the total number of pupils in local education association maintained schools at the same time. [55807]

Mr. Squire: Schools which have become grant-maintained by January of a given calendar year are eligible to bid for grant for the financial year commencing the following April. The figures in this table give the total number of pupils in grant-maintained and local authority maintained schools each January from 1990 to 1995.

Year	Total pupils (GM)	Total pupils (LA)
1990–91	13,731	6,926,487
1991–92	36,445	6,955,710
1992–93	108,995	6,978,421
1993–94	243,023	6,979,743
1994–95	556,699	6,712,078
1995–96[1]	663,100	6,734,000

[1] Provisional data.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the total amount paid to grant-maintained schools in special purpose grant (restructuring); and in each case, (a) how many schools received grant, (b) how many head teacher posts were affected, (c) how many teaching posts were affected and (d) how many other posts were affected for each of the financial years 1989–90 to 1994–95. [36150]

Mr. Squire: The Funding Agency for Schools assumed responsibility on 1 April 1994 for the calculation and payment of special purpose grants to grant-maintained schools. It also holds data for previous years. I have asked the chairman of the Funding Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how may copies have been produced and, in each case, at what total cost of (a) "Going GM: A Brief Guide" and (b) the updated edition of "How to become a Grant-Maintained School". [36185]

Mrs. Gillan: A total of 40,000 copies of "Going Grant Maintained: A Brief Guide" have been produced at a cost of some £15,800—39p per copy. A total of 15,000 copies of "How to Become a Grant-Maintained School", 1995 edition, have been produced at a cost of some £27,200, or £1.81 per copy.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her answer of 4 May, Official Report, column 286, if she will list, in chronological order, the "Going GM" conferences held by her Department on grant-maintained status since 14 March giving in each case (a) the date, (b) the location, (c) the number of schools invited, (d) the number of schools represented, (e) the number of representatives attending and (f) the cost. [35776]

Mr. Squire: The information requested is set out in the table below:

Date	Location	Number of Schools Invited[2]	Number of Schools Represented	Number of Delegates	Cost[3] £
13.05.95	Cambridge	405	9	26	3,660
19.05.95	Bournemouth[1]	1,440	63	135	6,072
05.06.95	Bristol	1,089	59	135	7,951
09.06.95	Newcastle	1,710	28	49	4,046
22.06.95	Scarborough	1,446	34	72	4,011
11.07.95	Milton Keynes	1,437	69	131	6,365
Total					32,105

[1] An earlier conference in Bournemouth on 14 March 1995 was heavily over-subscribed. This second conference was largely for delegates who were unable to gain a place at the first.

[2] A number of schools were invited to more than one conference in order to give headteachers and governors more choice over date and location.

[3] Costs listed are those attributable to specific conferences. In addition there is an on-going contract for support services which for the above six conferences has totalled £41,642.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, what plans her Department has to hold further "Going GM" conferences; and what financial provision has been made for further conferences.

Mr. Squire: Departmental officials are planning to hold another eight "Going GM" conferences before the end of December, at an estimated total cost to the Department of about £100,000. Plans for conferences after that date have not yet been decided.

South Thames TEC

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what decision has been reached on whether to forward to an independent body the bill submitted by the Department of Employment to the administrative receivers for South Thames TEC. [37339]

Mr. Paice: The receiver for South Thames TEC has not requested that the Department submits its bill for independent scrutiny.

Calculators

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will introduce measures to defer the use of calculators within the national curriculum until pupils have become fully adept in basic arithmetic processes. [37064]

Mr. Forth: The revised mathematics national curriculum, introduced in schools from September, has increased the emphasis on the acquisition of basic skills in the primary years, in both mental and written arithmetic. Once the basics have been mastered, calculators enable more ambitious exploration of numbers, and therefore offer an opportunity to increase standards of attainment. Under the moratorium announced by the Secretary of State, there are to be no substantial changes to the curriculum for the next five years.

Head Teachers

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what responsibilities the Teacher Training Agency will have for the training of head teachers. [36273]

Mr. Robin Squire: The Teacher Training Agency is responsible for the head teacher's leadership and management programme which supports the training and development of newly appointed head teachers. In addition, my right hon. Friend announced on 11 October 1995 that she has asked the TTA to establish a new national professional qualification for head teachers.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what qualification those who have undertaken head teacher training will receive; and which institutions will validate this qualification. [36272]

Mr. Squire: I will ask the chairman of the Teacher Training Agency to write to the hon. Member about the qualifications received by those undertaking HEADLAMP training. Information about other courses which may be taken by head teachers is not centrally collected.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) which local education authorities conduct in-service training specifically for the needs of head teachers; and if these courses are continuing; [36278]

(2) what institutions provided courses for head teacher training prior to Headlamp; and which of those will continue to provide training under Headlamp. [36277]

Mr. Squire: This information was not collected centrally. A number of LEAs and other institutions are registered to provide courses under the Headlamp scheme. The register will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what surveys her Department has carried out into the training background of head teachers in the last five years; [36286]

(2) what surveys her Department has commissioned into the training background of head teachers in the last five years; [36286]

(3) which bodies commissioned and carried out the survey of secondary schools needs, "Developing Senior Managers"; and what use of this study has been made by her Department; [36269]

(4) what studies commissioned or carried out by local education authorities into the training background of head teachers her Department has evaluated in the last five years. [36288]

Mr. Squire: "Developing Senior Managers" was commissioned by the Understanding British Industry's national education programmes unit, with support from Unilever, Ofsted and the Department for Education.

The research was undertaken by a private consultant. The findings of the survey have helped inform the Teacher Training Agency's development and implementation of the Headlamp scheme.

Other DFE-funded research projects, notably those reported in the school management task force publication "Effective Management in Schools", and the evaluation report of the head teacher mentoring programme, have provided information on head teachers' training and development needs. The Department funded through the task force a number of small projects undertaken by regional consortia of local education authorities which are outlined in "Project Reports 1989–1992: An Annotated Bibliography". Copies of these publications will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what advice she took in deciding to fund head teacher training on a voucher basis; [36276]

(2) with which organisations her Department consulted before initiating the Headlamp scheme for the training of head teachers. [36285]

Mr. Squire: The Headlamp scheme was announced following discussions with the Secondary Heads Association and the National Association of Head Teachers, and with advice from Ofsted. The then Secretary of State decided that, in order to secure the availability of adequate funding to newly promoted head teachers, a ring-fenced sum of £2,500 should be available to governing bodies with eligible head teachers. This funding can be claimed only against evidence of actual expenditure on eligible training and development activities.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her oral statement of 6 July, Official Report, columns 517-19, if there will be any requirement on new providers to be able to cater for children with special educational needs. [36154]

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend will make clear the responsibilities of institutions which redeem vouchers for pre-school education on completion of the consultation which she initiated with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health on 4 September.

School Playing Fields

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many school playing fields have been sold since 1979. [36221]

Mrs. Gillan: There is no reliable historical information on the level of school playing field disposals. The Sports Council's register of recreational land, which is not yet complete, is designed to ensure that better information is available in future.

School Building Projects

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what changes are planned to the approval system for new maintained and grant-maintained building projects. [36189]

Mrs. Gillan: None.

Grants

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the current level of expenditure per pupil through (a) the special purpose grant (development) scheme in the grant-maintained school sector and (b) the grant for education support and training scheme in the local education association maintained school sector. [35809]

Mr. Robin Squire: For the current financial year 1995–96, each GM school can apply for up to £42.50 per pupil, or the part-year equivalent, for special purpose grant (development). LEA-supported expenditure under the grants for education support and training programme averages £37.27 per pupil in LEA-maintained primary, secondary and special schools. The two figures are not wholly comparable because of additional administrative costs and liability for VAT in the GM sector.

School Sport

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what information she has about the proportion of total school hours in secondary schools devoted to sport in Britain, Germany and France. [36224]

Mr. Forth: The Department's 1992 secondary school staffing survey showed the proportion of pupil periods devoted to PE in secondary schools in England as:

	Year group
	7	8	9	10	11
Percentage	8.9	8.7	8.2	7.6	7.2

The Department has no reliable information for Germany or France.

Under-five Provision

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her oral statement of 6 July, Official Report, columns 517–19, if local education authority under-fives funding will be reduced as a result of local parents opting for voluntary or private sector provision. [36170]

Mr. Robin Squire: The proposed funding mechanism will remove only a part of what local education authorities spend on under-fives. The amount removed will be the product of the number of four-year-olds presently in maintained schools and the voucher value. To the extent that fewer parents choose to send their four-year-olds to LEA-maintained schools, the funding will decrease by the voucher value for each child. In contrast, if more parents so choose, the funding will increase correspondingly.

Sanctuary Buildings

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what was the total cost of fitting out Sanctuary buildings, Great Smith street for use by her Department; [35812]

(2) what was the total cost of the transfer of her Department to Sanctuary buildings, Great Smith street. [35778]

Mr. Robin Squire: It is not possible to identify separately removal and fitting-out costs. The Department kept within a total project costs of £13.7 million.

School Accommodation

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment has been made of the space required in individual schools to teach the national curriculum. [36186]

Mrs. Gillan: The accommodation needed in a school to teach the national curriculum effectively depends on the way the curriculum is delivered, the size, shape and organisation of classrooms and on the teaching styles of individual teachers as much as on overall floor area.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment she has made of the effect on the delivery of the national curriculum of the proposal to abolish minimum space standards in the revised Education (School Premises) Regulations 1995. [37729]

Mrs. Gillan: Our aim is that decisions about the use of space in schools should be made at local level by local authorities and school governors. The Government are confident that they will take full account of the requirements of the national curriculum in making those decisions.

Disabled People

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many physically disabled people have applied to their local education authority for support for their education; and how many have been refused in the last three years for which figures are available. [36142]

Mr. Forth: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Schools (Capital Expenditure)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the total sum available for capital expenditure in local education authority maintained schools through credit approvals and grants; and what additional capital provision was made available from local education authorities' own resources in each of the financial years 1990–91 to 1995–96. [35806]

Mr. Robin Squire: The total sum made available for capital expenditure in schools through credit approvals was:

£ million

1990–91: 361
1991–92: 426
1992–93: 493
1993–94: 383
1994–95: 379
1995–96: 397

and for voluntary aided schools for capital and repair grant was:

£ million

1990–91: 106
1991–92: 132
1992–93: 147
1993–94: 130
1994–95: 114
1995–96: 96 planned.

Additional capital provision from LEAs' own resources is estimated at:

£million

1990–91: 274
1991–92: 232
1992–93: 172
1993–94: 312
1994–95: not available

These figures include credit approvals and capital grant available to technology and language colleges.

Small amounts of capital expenditure are also supported through grants such as the grants for education support and training.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress WESTEC, Dudley TEC and West London TEC are making in meeting the criteria for the award of a three-year licence. [38733]

Mr. Paice: I am pleased to announce the award of three-year licences to WESTEC, Dudley TEC and West London TEC, which have now completed the process of meeting the rigorous standards we set.

Social Affairs Council

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on the outcome of the EC Social Affairs Council held on 5 October. [38734]

Mr. Forth: I attended the Council on 5 October in Luxembourg with the Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Chesham and Amersham (Mrs. Gillan).

There was a broadcast discussion on follow-up to the fourth UN world conference on women. My hon. Friend noted that much progress had been made in the UK and indicated the Government's intention to take forward the results of the conference. The presidency announced a conference to be held at the end of November in Madrid to take stock of progress since Peking and suggest strategies for the future.

There was an orientation debate but no attempt to reach a decision on the fourth equal opportunities action programme. Several delegations, including the UK, called for greater clarity about the structure, content and management of the programme. My hon. Friend also made clear the UK view that there was no justification for further legislation in this field.

The draft Council decision on the fourth programme to combat social exclusion was, once again, discussed without agreement, and the Commission reported progress on the consultation of the social partners under the other member states agreement on social policy on the reconciliation of professional and family life.

Resolutions on the image of men and women in the media, the fight against racism and xenophobia, and on co-operation with third countries in the field of youth were all agreed without discussion.

Education Expenditure

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the total education spending in (a) 1992–93 and (b) 1993—4; and what is the forecast for 1994–95. [32948]

Mr. Robin Squire: Total education spending for 1992–93 was £25.4 billion. For 1993–94 the provisional outturn is £27 billion. For 1994–95 the estimated outturn is £28.4 billion.

School Premises Regulations

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has to make public the conclusions of the consultation session on the revised Education (School Premises) Regulations 1995; and if she will make a statement. [37730]

Mrs. Gillan: Once the responses to the consultation have been analysed, a summary of their contents will be made available in the usual way.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment which bodies she intends to consult concerning her proposals to amend the regulations for school buildings, and what evidence has been presented to her and from whom claiming that those extant are too stringent or too permissive. [37335]

Mrs. Gillan [holding answer 16 October 1995]: We have consulted all organisations which are under a statutory duty to implement the school premises regulations, including local education authorities and the governing bodies of grant-maintained schools. We have also consulted a wide range of representative organisations with an interest in school buildings matters, including the local authority associations, governors' organisations and teachers' associations.

The revised school premises regulations were produced following a review conducted by the Department and the Welsh Office. We have taken the view, in the light of that review, that some of the provisions of the regulations should be removed. We shall, of course, take careful note of responses received from consultees which bear on that and other points.

Lecturers (Recruitment)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what assessment she has made as to whether the recruitment and selection of lecturers through the new employment agency, ELS, is in conformity with the Sex Discrimination Acts; and if she will make a statement; [37806]

(2) what assessment she has made of the checks which the employment agency ELS is making on lecturers it supplies to further education colleges; [37805]

(3) what assessment she has made of whether the lecturers supplied by the employment agency ELS will meet the quality requirements of the FEFC; and if she will make a statement. [37811]

Mr. Paice: My right hon. Friend is not responsible for these matters. It is for ELS itself to ensure that it acts in accordance with the law, and for colleges to ensure that staff working in them are suitable in all respects for the job.

Mr. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has to ensure the inclusion of the number of agency lecturing staff employed as a ratio to lecturers employed directly by the corporation, as part of the charter on service standards published by each further education college; and if she will make a statement. [37787]

Mr. Paice: My right hon. Friend has no plans to require the publication of such information in college charters.

Mr. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many part-time lecturers are employed directly by further education corporations and how many are provided by the employment agency ELS; and how many of the latter are self-employed. [37810]

Mr. Paice: The most recent date for which information is available is January 1993. In full-time equivalents, there were 14,206 part-time teachers paid at hourly rates, employed in further education institutions which were transferring to the Further Education Funding Council on 1 April 1993. The FEFC has since collected staffing information from EC colleges relating to November 1994, before ELS was set up. This information is not yet available in publishable form.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Finance

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into a comparison of amounts awarded to authorities in the south-east through the area cost adjustment with the actual additional costs for those authorities; and what that comparison showed. [38172]

Sir Paul Beresford: The group of officials and officers of the local authority associations who discuss possible changes in standard spending assessments reported in September on this subject. Their report showed that there remains a wide divergence of views as to both the nature and the scale of the additional costs faced by authorities in London and the south-east, if they were to provide similar standards of service to those in other parts of the country.

My hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government, Housing and Urban Regeneration has therefore proposed to the local authority associations that an independent review of the area cost adjustment should be carried out. We anticipate that research will be commissioned to assist the review in its work. It will be for the review team to consider whether research of the kind to which my hon. Friend refers would be of assistance to it.

Mrs. Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list to one decimal place the percentage of total standard spending assessment received by area cost adjustment for the financial years 1990–91 to 1995–96.

Sir Paul Beresford: The information requested is set out in the table.

Year	Contribution of area cost adjustment factor £ million	Total standard spending assessment £ million	Area cost adjustment as percentage of total Percentage
1990–91	837	29,805	2.8
1991–92	1,152	35,587	3.2
1992–93	1,315	37,993	3.5
1993–94	1,332	36,622	3.6
1994–95	1,536	37,848	4.1
1995–96	1,658	38,743	4.3
(1995–96 excluding Metropolitan police)	(1,556)	—	(4.0)

Notes:

1. The apparent increase in share in 1995–96 is because the SSA for the Receiver for the Metropolitan police was previously based on his budget, as approved by the Home Secretary. This included those extra costs which, from 1995–96, are reflected in the area cost adjustment. Excluding this effect, the share fell slightly in 1995–96 from 4.1 per cent. to 4.0 per cent.

2. The 1995–96 figures exclude a small element of area cost adjustment which is incorporated within the indicator "Pension Expenditure" in the police SSA.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what contracts qualify for operations under the provisions of section 70 and schedule 13 of the Finance (No. 2) Act 1992 in respect of the enterprise zone operated by the London Docklands development corporation, stating the nature of each contract and the date of commencement of any building completed or planned. [37577]

Sir Paul Beresford [holding answer 19 October 1995]: I am unable to supply the information requested because the types of contract referred to result from detailed discussions between the individual developers and the Inland Revenue. Neither the Department nor the London Docklands development corporation is privy to those discussions.

TREASURY

Investors Compensation Scheme

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current status of the Treasury's guarantee of the borrowings of the investors compensation scheme. [38905]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The Treasury has today withdrawn the guarantee of borrowing by the investors compensation scheme of up to a maximum of £17 million. The purpose of the guarantee, which was granted on 5 July, was to enable the ICS to continue to operate normally, pending the outcome of a judicial review made by Sun Life. Because of the uncertainty created by the review, neither the personal investment authority nor the ICS considered it prudent to levy PIA's members to fund the ICS. The judicial review is now resolved, and the Personal Investment Authority has levied its members. The need for the guarantee has consequently ceased and has accordingly been withdrawn.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Television

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the number of households and the percentage of the total number of households which is currently receiving (a) terrestrial television, (b) satellite television and (c) cable television. [37915]

Mr. Sproat: Of the 24 million households in the United Kingdom, from currently available data it is estimated that 23.47 million or 97.8 per cent. currently receive terrestrial television, 3.5 million or 14.6 per cent. receive satellite television and 1.05 million 4.4 per cent. receive broad band cable television.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Science, Engineering and Technology

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he will respond to the final report of the ad hoc committee chaired by Sir Arnold Wolfendale set up to review the contribution of professional scientists, engineers and research students to improved public understanding of science, engineering and technology. [38961]

Mr. Lang: The Government are grateful for the work of Sir Arnold and the committee, and welcome the final report, which I am publishing today.

The report make a number of important recommendations aimed at improving the contribution made by professional scientists, engineers and research students to improving the public understanding of science, engineering and technology.

Recommendations 7.12 and 7.14 are addressed to the Office of Science and Technology and will be implemented as soon as possible. Other recommendations are longer term. I have drawn to the attention of colleagues in the Department for Education and Employment, the Scottish Office, the Welsh Office and the Northern Ireland Office the recommendations addressed to the universities and funding councils which fall within their areas of responsibility.

Small Business (Ministers)

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many additional Ministers will be necessitated by his recent proposals for small business Ministers. [37771]

Mr. Lang: Existing Ministers in the Departments identified will take on the additional responsibility in ensuring that small firms are considered in the formulation of policy and the Department's activities.

Business Links

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will provide an update on the progress of the establishment of business links. [37760]

Mr. Lang: Progress with establishing business links is encouraging. There are now 142 business link outlets open, offering services to 70 per cent. of VAT registered businesses in England. By the end of the year, more than 200 outlets will be open.

EU Funding

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the Government will undertake an assessment of matching funds available and forecasted to ensure the effective draw-down of European Union funds. [38043]

Mr. Eggar: The European structural funds make grants of only part of the cost of any project. It is the responsibility of the applicant for grant to find the remainder of the cost.

I know of no evidence of a shortage of such "matching" money to ensure full take-up of the United Kingdom's allocations from the funds. These are being substantially over-subscribed.

Water Board Merger

Mr. Parry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will now refer the proposed merger between North West Water and Norweb to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission; and if he will make a statement. [38181]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The Director General of Fair Trading is currently investigating the proposed merger and will advise my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade in due course. A decision on whether or not it should be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission will be taken once that advice is received.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Preparation of Probate Papers

Mr. Byers: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he plans to implement section 55 of the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990; and if he will make a statement. [38177]

Mr. John M. Taylor: While I am not aware of any substantial public concern at the delay in implementation, it remains the Government's intention to bring the section into force when the appropriate resources are available.

PRIME MINISTER

Breast Cancer Campaign

Sir David Steel: To ask the Prime Minister how many postcards he has received from the National Postcard Campaign for Breast Cancer since 7 June. [37929]

The Prime Minister: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Members for Falkirk, West (Mr. Canavan) and for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Dr. Jones) on 16 October 1995, Official Report, column 23.

DEFENCE

Ministerial Advisers

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what position Mr. Hart had in his Department; and if he will list the duties he undertakes, the hours and days in the weeks he is involved in such work and the salary paid to him. [38092]

Mr. Portillo: Mr. Hart continues to be my unpaid independent adviser.

RAF Stornoway

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the market testing feasibility study regarding RAF Stornoway to be completed. [38309]

Mr. Soames: An announcement on the findings of the feasibility study on the care and maintenance task at RAF Stornoway is expected to be made by the end of the year.

Metric and Imperial Measures

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those areas of defence procurement in which specifications for manufacture are in (a) metric and (b) imperial measurements. [37611]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Defence procurement covers a wide range of product areas from clothing to guns, ships and battle tanks. In each of those areas there is a mix of metric and imperial specifications. Generally it has been MOD practice to use metric measurements since the early 1970s for all procurement. However, spares procurement to maintain some older in-service equipment may still use imperial measurements.

Search and Rescue Helicopters

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all incidents in the past five years in which vessels have declared emergencies in the vicinity of the United Kingdom to which British military search and rescue helicopters were unable to respond due to inadequate range; what was the date, location and vessel's name in each case; and if he will indicate those incidents in which United States air force H-53 helicopters came to the aid of the vessel. [37532]

Mr. Soames: It is for the Coastguard Agency to decide which SAR assets to deploy to incidents in the UK SAR region, and where refuelling facilities are available the Coastguard may request military SAR helicopter assistance at an incident outside the helicopter's normal base operating range. My Department does not keep detailed records of search and rescue incidents to which military helicopters did not respond. Our records show that a United States air force CH-53 helicopter assisted at a maritime incident in the UK SAR region on 21 August 1991 involving the recovery of a crewman from the weather ship Cumulus at 57°00N 020°00W.

Hazardous Waste (Dumping at Sea)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the total quantities of (a) toxic chemical wastes, (b) surplus explosives, (c) redundant biological and chemical weapons stores and (d) radioactive wastes disposed of into the North Atlantic, Irish sea and English channel. [37661]

Mr. Soames: Complete records of past sea dumping operations are not available. In particular, it is not possible to identify the total tonnages or precise natures of conventional munitions which were disposed of by this means. However, surviving records indicate that approximately 120,000 tonnes of UK-manufactured chemical warfare munitions and some 17,000 tonnes of captured German aerial bombs containing the nerve agent tabun were dumped in sealed hulks scuttled in deep water in the North Atlantic, and 14,000 tons of phosgene-charged munitions were disposed of in Beaufort dyke in the north channel. There are no records of biological agents having been disposed of at sea. Details of the UK's sea disposal programme for low and intermediate-level radioactive wastes, including wastes generated by MOD establishments, were contained in a report commissioned by the Department of the Environment titled "Report of the Independent Review of Disposal of Radioactive Waste in the Northeast Atlantic" published by HMSO in November 1984.

FOA and JAST Programmes

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of possible conflict between the FOA and JAST programmes. [37799]

Mr. Arbuthnot [holding answer 19 October 1995]: Work is in progress to define our requirement for a future offensive aircraft—FOA—for the Royal Air Force. JAST—joint advanced strike technology—is a US programme to develop a family of common-based aircraft for the US services. There is no conflict between the two programmes.

Tornado Aircraft

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with United Kingdom defence industry representatives concerning the replacement of the Tornado GR1 aircraft. [37726]

Mr. Arbuthnot [holding answer 19 October 1995]: My officials have had a number of preliminary discussions with representatives of the UK defence industry about possible procurement options and relevant technologies.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Upper Waiting Hall (Exhibitions)

Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the work of the Loughborough college of art and design. [38798]

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 11 December to Friday 15 December 1995.

WALES

Road Casualties

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people were (a) killed and (b) injured in Wales in road accidents in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [37987]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Road casualty statistics are published annually by the Welsh Office. Casualties by severity can be found in table 9.1 of "Road Accidents: Wales No. 15 1994", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairmen of the North East Wales and TARGED training and enterprise councils concerning merger proposals; and if he will make a statement. [38420]

Mr. Hague: None, although my officials are being kept informed by both of the prospective merger partners about the progress of their discussions. These discussions are still at an early stage and it would therefore be inappropriate for me to make any comment at this time.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the principles by which the present geographical areas of the training and enterprise councils may be varied by way of (a) merger, (b) break-up and (c) total redrawing of boundaries. [38419]

Mr. Hague: Under the terms of the operating agreement between the Welsh Office and each of the TECs in Wales, I recognise the TEC as the body able to perform the functions of a training and enterprise council for the operational area set out in the TEC's corporate plan. Any changes to the operational area brought about by boundary adjustment or merger can be recognised on annual renewal of the agreement.

Earlier this year, TECs were invited to review their operational areas, taking into account the boundaries of the new unitary authorities. As a consequence, it is expected that some adjustments to TEC operational areas will be proposed. I understand that discussions between the TECs—and with other local interests as appropriate—are proceeding.

If these discussions give rise to proposals to the adjustment of TEC operational areas, the Department is able to give effect to such adjustments via the recognition provision in the operating agreement.

Sewage Treatment

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the European Commission concerning the derogation application to cover the period between the year 2000 and the completion of the secondary treatment facilities at the proposed new sewage treatment works serving the western valleys of Gwent, central and eastern Cardiff and the present Ystradyfedwg and Pontypridd trunk sewer catchment area; on what date the application was made for derogation; and on what date he estimates receiving a decision on approval. [38418]

Mr. Hague: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my predecessor my right hon. Friend the Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood) on 20 October 1994, Official Report, column 313.

Brecon Jazz Festival

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Wales tourist board concerning the withdrawal of the offer of grant to the Brecon jazz festival following receipt of an offer of assistance from the millennium fund; and if he will make a statement. [38417]

Mr. Hague: None. However, my officials have discussed this matter with the Wales tourist board.

Toddington's Ltd.

Mr. Stephen Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much was paid under the various schemes of the common agricultural policy to Toddington's Ltd. of Pembrokeshire, south Wales in the latest year for which information is available. [38176]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Pembroke, (Mr. Ainger) on 19 July 1995.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Nursery Education Vouchers

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many authorities have undertaken to pilot the nursery voucher scheme. [37986]

Mr. Robin Squire: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Hazel Grove (Sir. T. Arnold) on 17 October 1995, Official Report, column 129.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many times during the academic year nursery vouchers will be issued to parents. [37985]

Mr. Squire: Nursery vouchers will be issued termly to parents of eligible children.

Grant-maintained Status

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is her policy in respect of whether all schools will have to ballot parents on opting out. [37989]

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has no present plans to require all schools to hold a ballot of parents on the question of grant-maintained status.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what target she has set for the number of schools opting out by the end of the present academic year. [37935]

Mr. Squire: My right hon. Friend does not, and never has had, a target for the number of schools to be grant-maintained by the end of this academic year, or by any other date.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many extra assisted places she is planning to make available; what is the estimated cost of the extra places; and what will be the timetable for implementation. [37934]

Mrs. Gillan: Over time, we plan to double—to some 70,000—the number of assisted places available, starting next year. The rate of expansion will depend on parental demand and the supply of high quality places. Financial provision and other detailed arrangements will be announced later, in the context of the Government's public expenditure plans for 1996–97 onwards.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what plans she has to change the income threshold for the eligibility for the assisted places scheme; [38089]

(2) what plans she has to change the administrative arrangements for the assisted places scheme. [38090]

Mrs. Gillan: The income threshold and administrative arrangements for the assisted places scheme are governed mainly by the Education (Assisted Places) Regulations 1995, made under the Education Act 1980. These are reviewed and revised annually.

Teachers' Pension Scheme

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list, in respect of the teachers' superannuation scheme, for each of the four years 1 April 1991 to 31 March 1995 (a) the amount of net new money in the scheme, (b) the market value of the notional fund at 31 March in each year and (c) the book value of the notional fund on 31 March each year. [38088]

Mr. Robin Squire: The notional fund of the teachers' superannuation scheme is an accounting device which is used to determine the level of employers' contributions. There is no real fund, and in reality payments to and from the fund are payments to and from the Exchequer. It is not therefore meaningful to speak of there being new money in the scheme. However, the difference between the opening and closing balances on the notional teachers' superannuation account for each financial year is given in table 1. The value of the notional fund, as measured by the closing balance on the teachers' superannuation account at 31 March is given in table 2. This is the book value of the notional fund; there is no market value since the fund does not exist. The figures for 1993–94 have been produced only recently, and are subject to audit. Figures for 1994–95 are not yet available.

Departmental Stationery and Livery Costs

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the cost of changing (a) the stationery and (b) the livery of the former Departments of Education and of Employment when they were merged. [38091]

Mr. Robin Squire: In the initial period following the merger, the estimated cost of changing the stationery and livery of the two former Departments was approximately £32,000.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the total cost to date to consultants for advice relating to the provisions contained within the Jobseekers Act 1995; and what is the estimate of the final costs. [38178]

Mr. Forth: To date, the jobseeker's allowance implementation project has spent £979,000 on private sector consultancy support. It is anticipated that a further £1,168,000 will be spent on this item through existing contracts. The implementation project is currently considering tenders for management consultancy support after October 1995. At this state there is no firm figure for the costs of this additional support.

TRANSPORT

Licence Plates

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport to what extent the new car licence plates in the Federal Republic of Germany incorporating the Euro-emblem result from EU legislation; and under what legislation United Kingdom licence plates would incorporate this emblem. [38421]

Mr. Norris: The new German number plate format does not result from EU legislation. The relevant UK legislation is the Road Vehicles (Registration and Licensing) Regulations 1971. We have no plans to make a similar change.

Road Casualties

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people were (a) killed and (b) injured in road accidents in England for each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [37988]

Mr. Norris: The information is as follows:

Year	Killed	Injured
1990	4,423	293,053
1991	3,854	266,988
1992	3,549	268,210
1993	3,228	266,059
1994	3,077	274,424

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the number of heavy goods vehicle drivers dying as a result of road traffic accidents in each of the last five years. [38165]

Mr. Norris: The information requested is shown in the following table:

Number of HGV drivers killed in road accidents in Great Britain

1992	62

King's Cross Underground Station (Escalators)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated cost of the escalator works at King's Cross underground station. [37754]

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for London Underground.

Harbour Revision Orders

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport who may promote a harbour revision order other than the harbour commissioners responsible for the particular port. [37904]

Mr. Norris: Section 14 of the Harbours Act 1964 allows an application for a harbour revision order to be made to the Secretary of State by the harbour authority or "by a person appearing to him to have a substantial interest or body representative of persons appearing to him to have such an interest".

Crossrail

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library at an appropriate time a copy of the Montague report on the route of the new crossrail project in London. [37713]

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friend the Member for Peterborough (Dr. Mawhinney) asked for a study on several aspects of the crossrail project, including its structure and ownership under the railway privatisation arrangements, the central London employment forecasts on which the case for it depends and the advantages and disadvantages of possible small-scale alternatives to it. I will consider how best to inform hon. Members of the results of the study when it has been completed and I have had an opportunity to consider it.

Pay Bargaining

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide in respect of his plan for pay delegation submitted to the Treasury (a) a description of the staff in each bargaining unit covered by the plan, distinguishing staff in headquarters functions, agencies and agency candidates, and in other identifiable business units and (b) proposals for trade union recognition in each bargaining unit and the negotiating machinery to be put in place in each bargaining unit. [38273]

Mr. Norris: Three delegation plans were submitted to the Treasury: for the Central Transport Group—which included the Vehicle Certification Agency—for the Marine Safety Agency and for the Coastguard Agency. CTG and VCA will form a single bargaining unit; MSA and TCA will be separate bargaining units.

(a) The staff covered by the plans, which exclude those who will join the senior civil service on 1 April 1996, are as follows:

CTG: 2,130 and VCA 76,

TCA: 563.

(b) The existing patterns of trade union recognition—the Civil and Public Service Association, the Institution of Professionals, Managers and Specialists, the National Union of Civil and Public Servants and the Association of First division Civil Servants—will continue for all three bargaining units except where the union has no members in that particular organisation. Negotiations on the bargaining machinery for each unit are currently taking place with the recognised unions.

Lower Thames Crossing

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will make a statement on the lower Thames crossing study. [37642]

Mr. Watts: The consultants completed the feasibility study for the lower Thames crossing late last year and its findings are being considered by Ministers. This was a wide-ranging study looking at the need for a crossing, possible locations east of the present Dartford crossing and the suitability of the project for attracting private sector finance. Also particular attention had to be given to the sensitive environmental features of the Thames estuary and the impact on it of such a project.

Since the completion of the study, the former Secretary of State has initiated the transport debate following the publication of the royal commission report on environmental pollution and the Standing Advisory Committee on Trunk Road Assessment report on traffic generation. All of these issues need to be taken into account on a project such as this before any decisions can be taken on whether or not to take the project forward.

An announcement on the study will be made when all of these issues have been considered.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

EU–ACP Meetings

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the cost of the twice yearly meetings between Members of the European Parliament and colleagues from African, Caribbean and Pacific countries during each of the past five years. [37626]

Mr. David Davis: According to European Commission development directorate figures, the total cost to the European development fund of EU–ACP joint assemblies and preparatory meetings under the fourth Lomé convention is around £1,400,000, converted at the current exchange rate £1:1.984 ecu.

A more precise breakdown is as follows:

1991: 340,000 ecu

1992: 497,492 ecu

1993: 580,000 ecu

1994: 219,750 ecu

The European development fund covers the costs of the ACP participants only. Figures for other costs are not available.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the British High Commissioner to Sri Lanka on the present conflict in Sri Lanka. [37648]

Mr. Hanley: I discussed the conflict in Sri Lanka with the British High Commissioner during my visit to Sri Lanka from 8 to 10 October.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the British high commissioner to Sri Lanka last visited Jaffna; and if he will make a statement on the report he made following his visit. [37649]

Mr. Hanley: Since a trip which he made to the Government-held areas of Palaly and Karaitivu in 1992, the British high commissioner has been unable to visit Jaffna. But a member of the high commission visited from 6 to 8 March, with a group of diplomats from aid donor countries, to evaluate the requirements for relief and rehabilitation in the event of a peace settlement.

Iraq

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Her Majesty's Government received a copy of the United Nations special commission on Iraq report, made public on 11 October, on the scope of Iraq's biological and germ warfare programme and missile delivery system programme; and whether the report identified the involvement of any British companies in these programmes. [37662]

Mr. David Davis: The UNSCOM and IAEA reports were received on Wednesday, 11 October 1995. No British companies are identified in either of the reports.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the referendum held in Iraq. [38093]

Mr. Hanley: The so-called referendum which the Iraqi Government held on 15 October was a farcical attempt by Saddam Hussein to claim democratic legitimacy. The system of brutal oppression in Iraq makes it impossible to express opposition to Saddam. We hope Iraqis will one day be able freely to decide their own future, although it is hard to imagine how this could be possible while Saddam is in power. We support the efforts of the Iraqi National Congress to form a united, representative opposition to Saddam's regime.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken further to publicise the amount of oil that the Iraqi regime is allowed to sell abroad under United Nations sanctions policy; and what estimate he has made of the revenue accruing to the Iraqi Government from the sale of oil. [38094]

Mr. Hanley: We take every opportunity to urge Iraq to implement United Nations Security Council resolution 986, which would allow Iraq to export substantial amounts of oil in return for much-needed humanitarian supplies. Saddam Hussein must shoulder the responsibility for the suffering of the Iraqi people caused by his failure to do so. If the scheme were implemented, we estimate that Iraq could purchase approximately $2.5 billion of humanitarian supplies per annum. This compares with $5 billion spent on all civilian goods in 1989.

French Nuclear Tests

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration has been given by Her Majesty's Government to invoking articles 142 and 192 of the Euratom treaty in regard to French nuclear tests and France's compliance with the treaty. [37679]

Mr. David Davis: None. The Euratom treaty does not apply to military applications of nuclear energy, including nuclear weapons tests.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to his letter of 29 August to the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) concerning a constituent reference GV100/28008/SB. [38095]

Mr. Hanley: The migration and visa correspondence unit replied to the hon. Member's letter of 29 August on 18 October. The delay in replying is regretted.

High Commission Building, Kenya

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who were the consultants for the new British high commission in Nairobi; what was the estimated cost of the new building; and what are the total costs to date. [38180]

Mr. Hanley: The following consultants were commissioned:

Cullum and Nightingale—Design Architects
Hughes and Polkinghorne—Executive Architects
GTMS—Project Managers
Howard Humphreys—Structural and Mechanical and Electrical Engineers
D.G. Jones—Quantity Surveyors
Carnell Green—Interior Designers

The estimated cost of the new building, including two staff houses, staff amenities, fees and furnishings, was £6,974,000 in October 1992. Total costs to date are £6,300,000.

SCOTLAND

Down's Syndrome

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, how many children have been born in Scotland with Down's syndrome in each of the past 15 years. [36338]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Number of babies recorded with Down's syndrome[1,2]
1980	58
1981	48
1982	44
1983	55
1984	46
1985	51

Year	Number of babies recorded with Down's syndrome[1,2]
1986	39
1987	61
1988	62
1989	51
1990	58
1991	70
1992	43
1993[3]	42
1994[3]	52

[1] Live and still births.
[2] Recorded on the Scottish Morbidity Record (SMR)11.
[3] Provisional.

The coverage of the SMR11 statistical inquiry from which information on Down's syndrome babies is derived has increased over the period from 75 per cent. of all live births in 1980 to 98 per cent. of all live births currently and interpretation of the data should be made against that background.

Artificial Limbs and Appliances

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will specify his latest proposals for the supply and fitting of artificial limbs and appliances under the national health service; and if he will make a statement. [37516]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Artificial limb and appliance centres are funded centrally by the national services division of the Common Services Agency. Proposals to devolve responsibility for purchasing this service to health boards are currently being considered and a decision will be announced shortly.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Care Costs

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many families have taken up the offer of up to £40 a week in child care costs since October 1994; and what is the average per family and the total cost of the scheme to date. [37008]

Mr. Roger Evans: At 30 June 1995, 23,000 families had received higher family credit awards as a result of the help with child care charges with an average gain of £14.63 family credit per week. The benefit cost of the provision to that date was £6.6 million. No information is yet available as to families receiving help through housing and council tax benefits.

Source:

One in 20 sample of family credit awards made between 1 October 1994 and 30 June 1995. Figures do not include families who had their child care charges allowed but receive no extra benefit because they are already in receipt of their maximum family credit.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many asylum seekers who have appealed against a refusal of asylum are in receipt of income support. [37163]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the latest estimate of the annual cost of social security and housing benefits paid to asylum seekers; and how many have been in receipt of those benefits in each of the last three years. [37417]

Mr. Evans: The latest estimate of the annual amount of income support and housing benefit paid to asylum seekers is £200 million. Numbers of asylum seekers receiving income support are shown in the table:

Income support	Number of cases
May 1993[1]	37,000
May 1994[1]	42,000

Note:
[1] Includes an estimated 1–2 thousand cases of former asylum seekers who are now entitled to Income Support under the normal rules.
Source

Claims from asylum seekers were not identified separately before May 1993.

Information about other benefits paid to asylum seekers and the numbers receiving them is not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Habitual Residence Test

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the estimated public savings in income support, housing benefit and council tax benefit arising from the number of British citizens excluded from income-related benefits as a result of the habitual residence test during the first year of its operation. [37735]

Mr. Roger Evans: The public savings are broadly estimated to be £15 million in the first 12 months of operation, from August 1994 to July 1995.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants for income support have been subjected to the habitual residence test in each of the months since its inception; and how many failed it. [37695]

Mr. Evans: The habitual residence test applies to all income support claimants. I refer the hon. Member to the replies that I gave to the hon. Member for Newham, North-East (Mr. Timms) on 18 April 1995, Official Report, column 43, and on 10 July 1995, Official Report, column 449, in respect of refusals and on 21 April 1995, Official Report, column 314, in relation to the availability of these figures.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people who failed the habitual residence test, and who are neither British citizens nor other European Economic Area nationals, were awarded income support under regulation 70(3) of the Income Support (General) Regulations (Urgent Cases). [37696]

Mr. Evans: This information is not readily available and could be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many decisions were made by adjudication officers in the year April 1993–94 within the Employment Service concerning the habitual residence of a person claiming unemployment benefit in the United Kingdom. [37697]

Mr. Evans: Decisions on contribution conditions, including the habitual residence of a person claiming unemployment benefit in the United Kingdom, are made by the Secretary of State. In the period January to April 1994 there were 201 decisions. Figures for the period April to December 1993 are no longer available.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many appeals against the disallowance of income support under the habitual residence test were decided at the Benefits Agency district offices in Euston, Ealing, Kensington, Tottenham, Westminster, Wandsworth, Neasden, Hounslow and Slough in each of the latest four quarters; and those decided, how many were successful. [37698]

Mr. Evans: The information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the relationship between the figures for estimated public expenditure savings arising from the habitual residence test given in the answers of 2 March 1995, Official Report, column 706, and 12 July 1995, Official Report, column 621. [37733]

Mr. Evans: The public expenditure savings arising from the habitual residence test given in the answer of 2 March, Official Report, column 706, were based on an initial estimate that 5,000 EEA work-seekers would be adversely affected by the test. This estimate was based on the best information available prior to the actual implementation of the test. The public expenditure savings arising from the habitual residence test given in the answer of 12 July 1995, Official Report, column 621, were based on revised estimates of the actual impact of the test after it had been in operation for eight months.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what extra resources have been given to the independent tribunal service to fund appeals against the habitual residence test. [37737]

Mr. Evans: The independent tribunal service is funded according to the projected work load for all types of appeal. Resources for hearing appeals against the habitual residence test are included in the current year's allocation, but are not identified separately from other types of social security appeals.

Income Support (Appeals)

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the latest estimated cost of processing an income support appeal to (a) the Benefits Agency and (b) the independent tribunal service. [37736]

Mr. Roger Evans: The separate information is not available in the precise format requested. The latest estimated costs of processing an appeal to a social security appeal tribunal to (a) the Benefits Agency and (b) the independent tribunal service are £79 and £236 respectively.

Widow's Benefit

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will amend regulation 35 of schedule 9 to the Social Security (Claims and Payments) Regulations 1987 to include widow's benefit as a specified benefit; and if he make a statement. [38173]

Mr. Heald: No. We have no plans to extend the scope of this regulation, which allows for direct payment of income support to third parties, to other benefits.

Direct payments take away people's responsibility to manage their own affairs and are expensive to administer. For both reasons, they ought to be kept to a minimum. There is, however, a provision which allows a person's benefit, or part of it, to be paid to another person—but not to a local authority or corporate body—in cases of budgeting difficulty.

HEALTH

Deprivation Payments

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria have been employed by family health services authorities in determining reductions in deprivation payments to general practitioners; how often such payments are reviewed; and what transitional arrangements have been put in place to prevent hardship. [37419]

Mr. Malone: Family health services authorities do not have discretion in determining deprivation payments for general practitioners. Payments are made on the basis of the Jarman index and are reviewed annually in the Doctors' and Dentists' Review Body round. We estimate that the use of the 1991 census data this year will deliver some £5 million extra to the profession as a whole. In addition some £3.7 million will be paid out in England to protect the income of individual GPs losing from the change.

Children in Care

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will undertake a study into the number of children taken into care as a direct result of their mothers receiving custodial sentences for fine defaulting. [37518]

Mr. Bowis: I have no plans to do so.

Consultancy Costs

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what moneys have been spent on the services of outside consultancy firms by each regional health authority in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [37622]

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Buckland Hospital

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure the continuity of paediatric services at Buckland hospital, Dover. [37908]

Mr. Sackville: East Kent health authority is currently working on proposals to strengthen and improve paediatric services across the whole of the district, including the Buckland hospital. The aim is to provide excellent clinical services for patients while meeting the requirements for junior doctor training.

Drug Side Effects

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to include drug side effect and interaction information with all drugs dispensed by a pharmacist. [37236]

Mr. Sackville: There is a statutory requirement for manufacturers of medicines to fulfil United Kingdom regulations for labelling medicines and providing patient information leaflets. A leaflet provides information on all aspects of a medicine including side effects and interactions. All newly authorised medicines require leaflets; for those medicines already on the market, leaflets are being phased in over the next three years through the introduction of patient packs for medicines containing a quantity of medicine appropriate for a course of treatment.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to ensure that all general practitioners and hospitals have access to computer systems which give warnings of drug side effects and interactions. [37237]

Mr. Sackville: Requirements for accreditation of general practitioner computer systems have been developed and publicised to general practitioner computer suppliers. These set out standards for a drug database listing side effects and interactions.

Computerised prescribing systems are at an early stage of development within hospitals. However, information on drug side effects and interactions is widely available through free issue of the British national formulary, product data sheets, and other local prescribing publications to all hospital doctors and pharmacists. Hospital pharmacists provide a further check by reviewing prescriptions prior to dispensing medicines.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he has for the issuing of a steroid warning card to patients on steroid treatment. [37238]

Mr. Sackville: Department of health guidance that steroid warning cards should be issued to patients on steroid treatments has been in issue for many years. In addition, the British National Formulary, published every six months jointly by the British Medical Association and the Royal Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain, contains advice on the need for and use of the card. Copies of the British National Formulary are issued free of charge to all national health service doctors and community pharmacists.

Mental Health Act

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will consider the need for district health authorities to ensure adequate cover in their areas of medical practices approved for the purposes of section 12 of the Mental Health Act 1983 in provision of timely attendance to patients requiring examination consequent to sections 2 and 3 of the Act. [37584]

Mr. Bowis: Regional directors of public health are currently responsible for ensuring that there are sufficient suitably trained and experienced doctors approved under the Act. We are satisfied that these requirements are being properly met. From April 1996 the responsibility will pass to health authorities. We will be issuing guidance on the new arrangements shortly.

Employment of Children

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to publish his Department's consultation document on the employment of children. [38174]

Mr. Bowis: Soon.

NHS Consultants

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines are issued to NHS consultants in respect of voicing matters of public concern to the media; and in what circumstances trusts are authorised to take disciplinary action. [38360]

Mr. Malone: The national health service executive's "Guidance for staff on relations with the public and the media EL(93)51" clearly indicates the manner by which staff concerns about health care issues should be raised.

Decisions about disciplinary matters are entirely for NHS employers. Copies of EL(93)51 are available in the Library.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many days were lost in sickness in the last 12 months by employees in his Department (a) in total and (b) as a proportion of the number of days worked; and what was the cost of this absence. [34600]

Mr. Sackville [pursuant to the reply, 14 July 1995, column 825]: I regret that the previous reply contained an error. The figure for estimated days lost through sickness was given as 69,363, representing 6.23 per cent. of working days. The original figures were incorrect because they included all absences, for example staff on maternity leave. New figures from the Occupational Health and Safety Agency show that 48,031 days were lost due to sickness in 1994, some 4 per cent. of working days. This is below the average for the civil service.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners in each of the last three years were remanded in custody for more than 52 weeks before sentencing. [36745]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking how many prisoners in each of the last three years were remanded in custody for more than 52 weeks before sentencing.

The available information relates to the length of time since first reception into a Prison Service establishment in England and Wales and is given in the attached table. Information for 1993 and earlier years is published in "Prison statistics, England and Wales" (tables 2.3 and 2.4 of the 1993 edition, Cm 2893), a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Crime Prevention (Advice to Women)

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those crime prevention initiatives and publicity campaigns which have been directly targeted at women in the last five years. [37528]

Mr. Maclean: The Home Office runs an on-going campaign providing people with advice on crime prevention. Almost 20 million copies of the original crime prevention handbook were distributed between 1988 and 1994, and 1.75 million copies of the revised edition "Your Practical Guide to Crime Prevention" have been distributed to date. The guide provides detailed advice on how everyone can reduce the risk of assault and make themselves feel safer in their everyday lives, as well as advice on what men can do to help women feel more secure.

In addition, more than 300 crime prevention schemes targeting women's safety have been supported by Government grants totalling £1.3 million under phase 1 of the safer cities programme.

The Government also launched a domestic violence awareness campaign on 24 October 1994 called "Domestic Violence—Don't Stand For It". The campaign emphasised that domestic violence is a crime and that everyone had the right to live their life free of fear and abuse. It also encouraged victims to seek the help and assistance that is available.

The Home Office continually evaluates its crime prevention strategy and recently commissioned an independent survey of women's attitudes to personal safety. The results showed that women did not support a personal safety campaign directed specifically at them. It was considered unnecessary and deemed likely to increase the fear of crime.

Police Deaths and Injuries

Sir Anthony Durant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers have been killed or injured on duty between 1 January 1992 and 1 January 1995. [37495]

Mr. Maclean: The following is the readily available information for England and Wales:

Fear of Crime

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of police forces which have conducted a fear of crime survey in accordance with the Home Office guidelines, together with the results of such surveys. [37523]

Mr. Maclean: I regret that this information is not held centrally and is available only at disproportionate cost. However, the Home Office monitors fear of crime in England and Wales through its biennial British crime survey. The results are published regularly and provide a national benchmark against which the findings of local surveys can be compared.

Supermarket Car Parks (Security)

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he is giving to crime prevention advice to shoppers using supermarket car parks and to the proprietors of supermarkets about improved security. [37527]

Mr. Maclean: The Home Department takes the lead in the provision of crime prevention advice. To date, 1,750,000 copies of the revised handbook "Your Practical Guide to Crime Prevention", have been distributed. Although the guide does not contain advice aimed specifically at users of supermarket car parks, much of the advice is relevant.

Advice for motorists using car parks is included in a new Home Office car crime prevention leaflet which I shall be launching at the Earls Court motor show next week.

We are also encouraging all owners and operators of car parks to improve security on site. To this end, we have endorsed the Association of Chief Police Officers' secured car parks scheme under which awards are made to car parks meeting strict design criteria. These criteria are currently being re-examined with a view to achieving greater take-up of the scheme.

Advice for proprietors of supermarkets is available in the form of a series of crime prevention booklets produced by the retail action group, a sub-group which was set up in 1993 by the original National Board for Crime Prevention. In January 1994, advice on the prevention of robbery and of burglary was published; advice on the prevention of violence to staff, customer theft and external fraud will be published shortly.

Obscenity Laws

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the topics which have been discussed at the last two meetings of the working group on obscenity. [38169]

Mr. Kirkhope: The group has met three times so far. The main topics discussed have been the use of computer networks for the importation and dissemination of obscene material; the enforcement of laws against child pornography; the display of indecent material in newsagents; and research to compare what is considered indecent and obscene in other countries.

Mrs. Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions and convictions there were under section 2 and section 3 of the Obscene Publications Act 1959 in (a) 1970, (b) 1975, (c) 1980, (d) 1985, (e) 1990 and (f) 1994; and how many of these did not involve pornography. [38167]

Mr. Maclean: The available information is given in the table. Data before 1979 are not available and the statistics cannot separately identify cases which involve pornography. The 1994 data are provisional.

The number of offenders prosecuted and the number found guilty at all courts for offences of possessing obscene material for gain[1]

Armley Prison

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when it is now estimated the practice of slopping out will be eliminated in Her Majesty's prison Armley, Leeds. [38166]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. John Battle, dated 20 October 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the elimination of slopping out at Leeds prison.

It is planned that C and D wings will be closed for refurbishment (including installation of in-cell sanitation) in February 1996. Prisoners will be moved to accommodation on A wing, which is being refurbished at present. Once this is completed there will be no prisoners at Leeds without 24 hour access to sanitation.

Young Prisoners

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, how many 15 and 16-year-olds were held in adult prisons (a) in London and (b) nationally awaiting trial in each of the last five years. [33807]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 12 July 1995]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 20 October 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question on how many 15 and 16 year olds were held in adult prisons (a) in London and (b) nationally awaiting trial in each of the last five years.

Daily Sport

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions have taken place between the Home Office and the National Federation of Retail Newsagents and the British Retail Consortium on the positioning of the Daily Sport; and if he will place a copy of advice to newsagents in the Library. [38168]

Mr. Kirkhope: Officials have corresponded with the National Federation of Retail Newsagents and the British Retail Consortium about the display of The Sport newspapers. Following that correspondence, both organisations decided to recommend to their members that copies of The Sport newspapers should be displayed only on the "top shelf". We understand that the NFRN has, however, delayed the issue of its recommendation pending further discussions with the publishers of The Sport newspapers.

Sentencing

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if paragraph 1 of schedule 5 to the Criminal Justice Act 1993 has been implemented. [38849]

Mr. Maclean: This technical provision should have been included in commencement order No. 8. It was brought into force on 14 August by means of commencement order No. 9.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Common Agricultural Policy

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the draft CAP budget expenditure published by the EU for 1996; what is the legal limit of such expenditure; and what was the actual expenditure in each of the past 10 years. [37631]

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 19 July 1995]: The 1996 draft budget for common agricultural policy expenditure has been set at the level of the guideline—the legally binding ceiling on CAP expenditure—of 40,828 million ecu or £34,069 million. Initial indicators are that 1995 expenditure will be about 35,000 mecu or about £28,000 million, some 3,000 mecu or £2,418 million below the guideline. This is 1,047 mecu or £838 million within the EU guideline of 37,944 mecu or £30,375 million. Expenditure in 1994 was 32,970 mecu or £25,264 million, some 3,495 mecu or £2,678 million below the guideline. Details of expenditure on the common agricultural policy in previous years are contained in the annual financial reports on the European Agricultural guidance and guarantee fund, guarantee section, copies of which have been deposited in the Library of the House. The latest available report relates to 1993.

ENVIRONMENT

New Homes

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the total number of new homes started by (a) local authorities and new towns and (b) housing associations in England in each year since 1974, and his estimate of the likely number of starts in 1995 and 1996. [37490]

Mr. Clappison: The number of new-build homes started in England between 1974–75 and 1994–95 by housing associations, local authorities and new towns is shown in the following table.

Number of new-build dwellings started, by tenure

Year	Housing associations	Local authorities and new towns	Total
1974–75	12,300	109,569	121,869
1975–76	22,020	131,015	153,035
1976–77	25,481	106,566	132,047
1977–78	26,076	86,334	112,410
1978–79	16,713	69,068	85,781
1979–80	14,275	54,588	68,863
1980–81	11,051	28,781	39,832
1981–82	13,005	23,499	36,504
1982–83	14,191	32,210	46,401
1983–84	12,259	27,469	39,728
1984–85	10,751	20,496	31,247
1985–86	10,465	18,284	28,749
1986–87	10,619	17,001	27,620
1987–88	10,073	14,517	24,590
1988–89	11,973	12,263	24,236
1989–90	11,516	11,731	23,247
1990–91	14,183	5,362	19,545
1991–92	20,072	2,018	22,090
1992–93	30,361	1,571	31,932
1993–94	33,107	841	33,948
1994–95	30,946	441	31,387

This is, however, not the whole picture. In addition, new social lettings are provided through purchase and rehabilitation of existing properties, and released through home ownership grant schemes, which assist existing tenants to move on to their own properties.

In 1995–96 we estimate that scheme starts will be made on over 50,000 new social lettings, to be provided by housing associations and local authorities through new build, purchase or rehabilitation, or released by home ownership grant schemes.

We estimate that some 70,000 new social lettings, or completions, will be provided in 1995–96.

Plans for 1996–97 and beyond are under consideration as part of the current public expenditure round.

Water Meters

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of domestic premises are fitted with water meters in each of the English regional water companies. [37995]

Mr. Clappison: In 1995–96 the proportion of metered water customers of the 10 water and sewerage companies is as follows:

	Households Percentage [1]
Anglian	16.8
Dwr Cymru	2.8
North West	4.9
Northumbrian	0.6
Severn Trent	8.2
South West	9.1
Southern	11.8
Thames	5.4
Wessex	9.7
Yorkshire	6.0

[1] Company estimates.

Mr.Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the policy of each of the English regional water companies on the use of water meters for domestic premises. [37996]

Mr. Clappison: Companies are developing their policies on the metering of domestic premises in the light of their particular circumstances. Most companies meter new and substantially converted properties. All companies operate voluntary schemes, which provide meters for those customers who are prepared to pay for their installation.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's policy on using water meters as the basis for charging domestic customers for their water supply. [37994]

Mr. Clappison: It is for water companies to decide the basis on which they charge customers. However, the Government believe that metering is, in the long term, the best basis for paying for water in many circumstances and it is consistent with the sustainable use of our water resources. It is also fair and equitable in that it relates charges directly to the amount of water used, and provides an incentive to customers to use water efficiently. For water companies, metering can form an important part of a cost-effective approach to reducing imbalances between supply and demand. The Government wish to encourage companies and customers to consider switching to meters, but we are not forcing them to do so.

Improvement Grants

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people are waiting for (a) improvement grants and (b) disabled improvement grants as a percentage of the population for each county in England. [37905]

Mr. Clappison: This information is not readily available.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many sites of special scientific interest in England have been de-notified since 1981 on the grounds of a decline in their scientific interest. [38358]

Mr. Clappison: The information is not available in the form requested. Between 1 April 1984 and 31 March 1991 statistical information on damage on SSSIs in Great Britain is set out in the annual reports of the former Nature Conservancy Council. Since 1 April 1991 similar detail for England is contained in English Nature's annual reports. Copies of annual reports are in the Library.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) on what basis the company Instafibre was chosen as the sole vehicle for dealing with the discount voucher scheme operated under the Energy Efficiency Office's energy efficiency scheme; [38151]

(2) what consideration and assessment was made of the impact of the discount voucher scheme operated under the energy efficiency campaign upon those companies who were not able to benefit from the discount vouchers; [38152]

(3) if the operation of the discount voucher scheme under the energy efficiency campaign was awarded on a lowest-tender basis; and if she will list (a) the details of the dates of the tender documents, (b) the number of respondents and (c) the way in which such tenders were invited and through which publications. [38154]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The voucher book scheme being run as the current part of "Wasting Energy Costs the Earth" is a welcome contribution by business to encouraging action on energy efficiency among domestic householders. It involves the provision of discounts or special offers by manufactures, suppliers and trade associations at their own expense to complement the Government's own spending on the campaign.

The discount relating to cavity wall insulation is no longer to be provided solely by one company. It covers the major designers of fibre-based systems and installers who are members of the industry guarantee scheme or the National Cavity Insulation Association.

In supporting the voucher scheme the Government took full account of the long-term benefits to all sectors of the energy efficiency industry from a stimulation of the market, and decisions on individual contributors were taken on a value-for-money basis throughout.

Drilling Wastes

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he will be putting forward in June at the North sea ministerial conference of the problems caused for wildlife by hydrocarbons in drilling wastes discharging from rigs. [37298]

Mr. Clappison: The next North sea conference will not be until a date in the period 2000–2002. The fourth North sea conference on June 9 1995 asked the Oslo and Paris commissions to introduce by 1997 a ban on the discharge of oil-contaminated cuttings except in exceptional circumstances and to investigate the need for, the environmental impact from and possible means of cleaning up seabeds contaminated by oily cuttings.

Tenants

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the protection afforded to tenants who have signed what otherwise is a legally binding contract for a set period of tenure but who, in the event of a landlord defaulting on his mortgage payments, can be given two weeks' notice to quit by a mortgage company, following repossession of the property. [38096]

Mr. Clappison: I sympathise with tenants whose landlords default on their mortgages and who face eviction at short notice through no fault of their own. However, I do not believe that legislation is the appropriate solution to this problem. Granting such tenants statutory rights to occupation would lead to lenders restricting mortgage loans. It would also reduce the supply of properties available in the private rented sector.

Following our discussions with the Council of Mortgage Lenders, it is now a condition of granting a lender an order for possession that a letter has been sent to the occupier to forewarn tenants that they will have to leave.

Sea Birds

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what financial assistance has been offered to the RSPCA for decontamination of oiled sea birds following the dumping of oil off the Yorkshire coastline in September. [38494]

Mr. Clappison: My Department's scientific advisers, English Nature, worked closely with the RSPCA in monitoring the effects of this off-shore oil slick. No financial assistance was provided to decontaminate oiled sea birds.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has of the (a) species and (b) numbers of each species involved as sea bird victims in the Yorkshire coastline oil slick of September. [38495]

Mr. Clappison: My Department's scientific advisers, English Nature, advise that between 21 and 26 September the numbers of sea birds recovered were as follows.

1138 Guillemot, 98 Razorbill, 12 Puffin and 4 other birds were recovered alive; 201 Guillemot, 29 Razorbill and 2 other birds were recovered dead.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Departmental Work

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the work of his Department since 1990. [38078]

Mr. Hanley: I refer my hon. Friend to the departmental reports produced by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office each year for the last five years, which are available in the Library of the House. Their reference numbers are as follows:

1991: Cm 1502

1992: Cm 1902

1993: Cm 2202

1994: Cm 2502

1995: CM 2802

Sudan

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the governing authorities in Sudan about progress towards peace and democracy; and if he will make a statement. [38144]

Mr. Hanley: On 13 September the Secretary of State raised with the Sudanese ambassador our concerns about Sudan's alleged support for extremist groups, its human rights record and the continuing civil war.

Pay Bargaining

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will provide in respect of his plan for pay delegation submitted to the Treasury (a) a description of the staff in each bargaining unit covered by the plan, distinguishing staff in headquarters functions, agencies and agency candidates, and in other identifiable business units and (b) proposals for trade union recognition in each bargaining unit and the negotiating machinery to be put in place in each bargaining unit. [38288]

Mr. Hanley: (a) The Foreign and Commonwealth Office envisages a single bargaining unit to cover all 5,440 headquarters staff and the 32 staff of the FCO's only agency, Wilton Park, at grades DS5S and below and their home civil service equivalents.

(b) The FCO proposes to recognise the Civil and Public Servants Association—CPSA—the National Union of Civil and Public Servants—NUCPS—the Institution of Professionals, Managers and Specialists—IPMS—and the Diplomatic Service Association—DSA—for pay bargaining purposes and to conduct negotiations with them through a single table structure.

Zimbabwe

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British citizens are currently resident in Zimbabwe. [38017]

Mr. Hanley: The estimated size of the British community, which includes British nationals of all categories, is 20,000. Of these, about 6,000 are British citizens.

Bermuda

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has to change Bermuda's constitutional status. [38012]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: There are no plans to change Bermuda's constitutional status.

Belarus

Mr. John D.Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to visit Belarus; and if he will make a statement about relations with that country. [38013]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: I last visited Belarus in July and have no further plans to do so at present. Regular contacts take place at official level and help to develop further our good bilateral relationship.

Ireland

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the annual cost in each of the last five years of maintaining the diplomatic mission to the Republic of Ireland. [38014]

Mr. Hanley: Total operating costs of the British embassy in Dublin, including rented staff accommodation, for the last five financial years are as follows:

1990–91: £2,117,098

1991–92: £2,197,640

1992–93: £2,284,956

1993–94: £2,514,718

1994–95: £2,702,525

Former Yugoslavia

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs at what level the United Kingdom is represented in each of the states of the former Yugoslavia. [38015]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The United Kingdom is represented at ambassador level in Bosnia, Croatia, Macedonia and Slovenia and by a charge d'affaires in Belgrade.

Flag States

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions, in each year since 1990, his Department has made representations to flag states in respect of vessels which have been detected making alleged illegal discharges of oil or other pollutants by MPCU surveillance. [37241]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office made seven such representations to other flag states in each of the years 1990, 1991 and 1992, 14 representations in 1993 and five representations in 1994. It has so far made 14 representations in 1995.

Kenya

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received about human rights in Kenya. [37672]

Mr. Hanley: We occasionally receive representations from a variety of sources about human rights in Kenya. We have drawn our own concerns about aspects of the situation to the attention of the Kenyan authorities.

Commonwealth Membership

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those countries currently applying for membership of the Commonwealth, indicating in each case the date when their application will be determined. [37917]

Mr. Hanley: There are no outstanding applications for Commonwealth membership. Mozambique and Rwanda have expressed interest in membership, but have made no formal application.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Sports Fatalities

Mr. Atkins: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many fatalities there have been in the United Kingdom over the last five years in (a) boxing, (b) mountaineering, (c) skiing, (d) motor racing and (e) horse-riding. [38047]

Mr. Sproat: No figures are held for Scotland or Northern Ireland. The most recent figures available are for the years 1986 to 1991.

England and Wales

Fatalities in:

(a) boxing: 3

(b) mountaineering: 59

(c) skiing: 0

(d) motorsports: 72

(e) horseriding: 26

Historic Properties

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what support is given to help private owners of homes that have a historic and architectural interest to retain and maintain their homes. [38369]

Mr. Sproat: The Government believe that so far as possible historic properties should remain in private hands and that their owners should be encouraged to retain and care for them. In addition to grants from English Heritage, and its sister organisations in the home countries, owners of outstanding historic buildings may take advantage of a range of tax measures, for example conditional exemption from inheritance tax and tax relief in relation to heritage maintenance funds.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) if she will list those private historic houses which have received grants during the past five years, giving the amount of grant paid to each house; [38368]

(2) how many historic houses have received repair and maintenance grants in each year since 1990. [38367]

Mr. Sproat: Government funding for the repair and maintenance of historic buildings in England is channelled through English Heritage, which does not hold information in the form requested. However, all repair grants offered by English Heritage to buildings and monuments of outstanding national importance are listed in their publications "Grants 1984–92", "Grants 1992–93" and "Grants 1993–94", copies of which I have placed in the Library. Private owners of listed buildings will also benefit from a significant proportion of English Heritage's conservation area grants, but a precise figure cannot be given as the minority of these are offered through schemes administered by local authorities. In 1994–95, English Heritage offered a total of nearly £60 million in grants, approximately half of which was for secular buildings and monuments and conservation areas. Local authorities may also themselves offer grants to private owners of historic houses.

Gaelic Television

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what percentage of Gaelic television programmes transmitted by the BBC, are produced by independent television companies; what percentage of such Gaelic programmes produced by the independent sector are directly funded by the BBC; and if she will require the BBC, as part of the current charter review process, to ensure that a minimum of 25 per cent. of future BBC funding for Gaelic television will be allocated to commissions from the independent sector. [38308]

Mr. Sproat: I understand from the BBC that over 45 per cent. of Gaelic programming broadcast by BBC Scotland in 1994–95 was produced by the independent sector. Of this, over 83 per cent. was funded by the BBC. Along with all other terrestrial broadcasters, the BBC is required to meet a statutory quota of 25 per cent. independent production. It is for the broadcasters to commission programming to meet the quota.

London Film Commission

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will make a statement about the funding of the London Film Commission. [38080]

Mr. Sproat: On Thursday 19 October, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced the offer of a one-off grant of £100,000 to help the London Film Commission meet its set-up costs. The commission has already managed to secure commitments from both private and public sector sources to cover most of its running costs for the next four years, and prospects are good for any gaps in funding commitment to be made good. The commission should soon be ready to open its doors for business. A copy of the relevant DNH news release—No. DNH 188/95—has been deposited in the Library of the House.

Millenium Funding

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what estimates she has made of the future public revenue costs incurred if either the Welsh National stadium or the Cardiff Bay opera house receives millennium fund funding. [38049]

Mr. Sproat: The former Secretary of State issued a direction to the Millennium Commission to take into account the viability of projects and, in particular, the need for resources to be available to meet any running and maintenance costs associated with each project for a reasonable period. The costs of any project under consideration are, therefore, a matter for the Millennium Commission which is an independent body.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what has been the estimated cost so far to the legal aid fund of the cases of Gaudenzio Castelli v Westminster council and Jose Tristan-Garcia v Westminster council; and what will be the estimated cost of the appeal. [37415]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The only payment to date is £380 paid on account in respect of a disbursement in the case of Jose Tristan-Garcia v Westminster council. As no claim for costs has yet been received it would not be appropriate for me to speculate on the eventual cost of these cases.

PRIME MINISTER

Mr. David Hart

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Prime Minister if he was informed by the Secretary of State for Defence that he was appointing Mr. David Hart as his independent adviser. [38324]

The Prime Minister: Yes.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has received from the British defence industry concerning the advice of Mr. David Hart within the Ministry of Defence on procurement contracts. [38325]

The Prime Minister: As far as I am aware, none.

Independent Advisers

Mr. David Clark: To ask the Prime Minister if his agreement is required for the appointment of independent advisers to the Secretary of State for Defence. [38326]

The Prime Minister: My agreement is not required for the appointment of unpaid independent advisers to Ministers.

National Crime Squad

Mr. Beith: To ask the Prime Minister whether the national police squad announced in his speech in Blackpool on 13 October will operate in Scotland or Northern Ireland. [38586]

The Prime Minister: My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary is consulting the police and others on the establishment of a national crime squad. An announcement will be made in due course.

Seal Pup Slaughter

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister when Her Majesty's Government last authorised the British embassy in Moscow to raise the issue of seal pup slaughter. [38475]

The Prime Minister: The embassy in Moscow was instructed to raise the question of seal culling on receipt of the 1995 seal cull figures. These arrived on 3 October and the embassy is now seeking a meeting with the relevant authorities to reiterate the British public's opposition to seal culling and to ask the Russians to reconsider their position.

Intergovernmental Conference

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Prime Minister what is his policy towards the IGC; and if he will make a statement. [38573]

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to my speech on Europe on 1 March, Official Report, columns 1060-74. We will continue to seek a European Union that is open, flexible, free-trading, efficient and responsive to people's concerns.

Information Technology

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Prime Minister how much was spent or allowed for the hire of consultants in each Government Department during the process of assessing bids for IT-related contracts; and if he will list the consultants used and the amounts spent in each case. [38086]

The Prime Minister: The information is not held centrally.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Prime Minister what safeguards exist to prevent individual firms from establishing monopoly positions during the award of contracts for services that are carried out in all or most Government Departments, with particular reference to those for information technology. [38084]

The Prime Minister: All contracts are awarded on the basis of best value for money after a fair and open competition unless there are convincing reasons to the contrary. Departments will have regard to market conditions when considering bids. The procedure is no different in the case of information technology contracts.

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Prime Minister what steps have been put in place in each Government Department to avoid corruption or conflict of interest during the market testing process. [38087]

The Prime Minister: The principles to be followed are laid out clearly in "The Government's Guide to Market Testing" and the "Civil Service Management Code". The recent White Paper on procurement, "Setting New Standards", re-emphasised the Government's commitment to maintaining the highest ethical standards in procurement. All these documents are available in the Library of the House.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Prime Minister what mechanisms exist in each Government Department during the market testing process to test bids for risk assessment and value for money and, following the award of contracts, to monitor the performance of those contracts. [38085]

The Prime Minister: The principles to be followed are laid out clearly in "The Government's Guide to Market Testing", which is available in the Library of the House.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Policyholders Protection Act 1975

Mr. Batiste: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he has completed his review of the Policyholders Protection Act 1975; and if he will make a statement. [39328]

Mr. Lang: Following publication of the consultative document "A Review of the Policyholders Protection Act 1975" in July 1994, there has been general support, both from insurers and policyholder interests, for changes in the scope and operations of the Policyholders Protection Act. I have therefore concluded that the Act requires amendment. The amendments will require primary legislation, which I will bring forward when parliamentary time permits.

The principal change which I propose to make is to the Act's geographic coverage. I propose to restrict it to insurance policies covering European Economic Area risks and commitments underwritten by United Kingdom authorised companies and UK risks and commitments underwritten by UK-located branches of EEA companies. I also intend to extend the Act's scope, subject to de minimis provisions, to include insurance policies covering UK risks which have been underwritten on a services basis by companies based elsewhere in the EEA.

I also propose to restrict the coverage of partnerships, which are currently treated more favourably under the Act than incorporated companies. I propose to put them on an equal footing by restricting compensation to partnerships and incorporated companies alike only to compulsory insurance classes.

Neither of these proposals will be retrospective: they will apply to payments by the Policyholders Protection Board triggered by any insurance failure after enactment of the proposals.

I also propose to make a number of minor changes to the Act which have been suggested during the review to improve the operation of the Act, to improve protection for insureds who are not policyholders and to reduce the Policyholders Protection Board's administrative costs.

Full details of the proposed changes are contained in a document which I have placed in the Library of the House.

Iran

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what further exceptions there have been concerning the Government's export licensing policy towards Iran following his statements of 18 January 1994, Official Report, column 509, and 6 July 1994, Official Report, column 224. [39329]

Mr. Oppenheim: As I said in my earlier statement, a number of representations have been received by my Department concerning export business entered into before the moratorium on export licences was imposed on 17 December 1992. We have identified a third case concerning the completion of a contract for repair and overhaul in the United Kingdom of non-lethal marine components.

In the circumstances, we have agreed to issue a licence which would allow these components to be returned to their owners in Iran unrepaired.

Research Establishments

Mr. Battle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the expected cost of conducting a prior options review of the public sector research establishments—Cm 2991; and from which budget this will be found. [38408]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The cost of conducting individual reviews of public sector research establishments will vary, but it is not expected to be substantial. The reviews will be undertaken, and the costs borne, by the respective parent or sponsoring Government Department or research council in each case.

All public sector research establishments are subject to periodic review. The Government's response to the Multi-departmental Scrutiny of Public Sector Research Establishments—Cm 2991—announced that we are bringing forward the existing programme of reviews and extending the prior options process to research council establishments to allow related establishments to be considered together.

Consultancy Brokerage Service

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what fees were paid in total to the Consultancy Brokerage Service's contractor, Salford University Business Services; [37756]

(2) what has been government expenditure to date on the Consultancy Brokerage Service including its consultants and set up costs. [37773]

Mr. Lang: Some £2.94 million. This sum includes total payments of £650,000 to all contractors, including Salford University Business Services Ltd. The sums paid to individual contractors are commercially confidential. Some £1.37 million of the total expenditure was on information technology hardware, for which alternative uses are being found.

My hon. Friend the Minister for Small Business, Industry and Energy announced on 14 September 1995 that the DTI would be working with business links to develop regional consultancy databases and that the Consultancy Brokerage Service would not now proceed. It is not expected that this alternative approach will entail any significant expenditure.

National Engineering Laboratory

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade in what circumstances the Astra provisions applied to the privatisation of public bodies; and if they will apply to the takeover of the National Engineering Laboratory by ASL. [38186]

Mr. Ian Taylor: An "Astra" clause is not normally made a condition of sale when privatising a public body although shortlisted bidders can be invited to say whether they would be prepared voluntarily to undertake not to seek the renegotiation of redundancy terms. The purchaser of the National Engineering Laboratory had made its intentions known to the Department and the Department has passed on this information to staff and to the unions which represent staff at the laboratory.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if all contracts by Government Departments or agencies previously placed at the National Engineering Laboratory will now be subject to competitive tendering following the takeover by ASL of the laboratory. [38182]

Mr. Taylor: Work outstanding under letters of agreement or contracts with the National Engineering Laboratory will be transferred to the purchaser.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give details of the value of existing contracts, split between private and public sector, held by the National Engineering Laboratory and which will be transferred to ASL on takeover. [38185]

Mr. Taylor: The value of the existing contracts of the National Engineering Laboratory is commercially sensitive information which must remain confidential.

Copyright

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his letter of 21 August to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, when he hopes to complete his review of draft regulations to implement directive 93/98/EEC on the duration of copyright in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [37297]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The review of the proposed legislation to implement directive 93/98/EEC has been completed, taking into consideration the comments received in response to the consultative draft which was circulated earlier in the year. Regulations to implement the directive are now in the course of preparation, and will be laid before both Libraries of the House as soon as possible.

Pay Bargaining

Mr. McAllion: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will provide in respect of his plan for pay delegation submitted to the Treasury (a) a description of the staff in each bargaining unit covered by the plan, distinguish staff in headquarters functions, agencies and agency candidates, and in other identifiable business units and (b) proposals for trade union recognition in each bargaining unit and the negotiating machinery to be put in place in each bargaining unit. [38285]

Mr. Lang: My Department will contain the following bargaining units for the 1996–97 pay round: for specialist insolvency grades (currently 625 posts); for specialist in the Radiocommunications Agency (326 posts); and for the rest of DTI (9103.5 posts) including any agencies which remain within DTI's remit on 1 April 1996, but excluding staff of the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service which will be a separate bargaining unit.

Proposals have been put to the trade unions—IPMS, NUCPS, CPSA and FDA—regarding the negotiating machinery.

Encryption

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to resist changes to Government policy on encryption following consideration of encryption issues by the Council of Europe and the European Union. [38164]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Officials from various Government Departments have been giving consideration to Government policy on the provision of encrypted services on public networks. Such a policy needs to take into account the legitimate requirement of industry, commerce and individuals for a range of cryptographic services and national security needs, including fighting terrorism and serious crime. In addition, the European Union has put forward draft proposals on the provision of European-wide trust services, which the Government, with other member states, are considering. But no decisions have yet been taken.

HEALTH

NHS Trusts

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list, by NHS trust, the centrally returned figures for expenditure on management consultancy services in 1994–95. [38379]

Mr. Sackville: Centrally returned figures do not separately identify this information.

Departmental Work

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the work of his Department since 1990. [38073]

Mr. Sackville: The work of my Department is summarised for each year in the departmental report, alongside an explanation of the Department's expenditure plans for the following years. The first such report was produced in 1991, and contains an explanation of the major policy and service developments that occurred in 1990–91. Copies of the reports are available in the Library.

Population Statistics

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the latest estimates by the Registrar General of Populations of those aged 17 years and over, plus 63 per cent. of those aged 16 years, for each district council area and parliamentary constituency in England and Wales together, in each case with the equivalent electoral registration figures also expressed as a percentage of these population figures. [36779]

Mr. Sackville: The available information will be placed in the Library.

NHS Low Income Scheme

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 19 July, Official Report, column 1284–85, (1) how many applicants to the NHS low income scheme are for help with prescription charges; how many were allowed; and what is the total value of the benefit consequently paid out; [37319]

(2) on the health benefits scheme, how much expenditure can be identified as resulting from applications for help through the AG1 scheme instead of total revenue forgone on health benefits. [37320]

Mr. Malone: AG1 claims to the national health service low income scheme are treated as claims for help in respect of all relevant NHS charges and travelling expenses. I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave her on 19 July, columns 1284–85, for the available information about prescription and dental charge revenue forgone and expenditure on sight tests and optical vouchers. Costs attributable to AG1 claims are not identified separately. Information about AG1 claims and their outcomes is shown in the table.

Number of AG1 claims received and numbers of charges certificates issued for Great Britain in 1994—95

	Outcome
Number of AG1 claim forms received	1,300,963
Number of NHS charges certificates issued for full help (AG2) which includes entitlement to free prescriptions[1]	694,135
Number of NHS charges certificates issued for limited help (AG3)	457,254

[1] People receiving income support, family credit and disability working allowance (with capital of £8,000) or less are also entitled to free prescriptions under the NHS low income scheme.

Calculators (Purchases)

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many calculators have been purchased by the NHS supplies authority in each of the last five years. [37410]

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is not available centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Specialist Clinics

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the result of the National Centre for Primary Care Research study into the cost-effectiveness of specialist clinics in general practice. [37411]

Mr. Malone: The Centre for Primary Care Research undertook a study to establish the extent and nature of specialist outreach clinics and to describe specialists' and general practitioners' views on them. The results were published in the British Medical Journal, volume 38, on 23 April 1994, copies of which are available in the Library. The National Primary Care Research and Development Centre is currently conducting research in this area.

Stress

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 28 March, Official Report, column 569, what are the first results of the research by Dr. Toby Wall about the mental health of the NHS work force. [37412]

Mr. Malone: The first results from this research are not yet available.

Children's Homes

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on the main recommendations of the Warner report on the selection, development and management of staff in children's homes and on the main provisions of the code of practice issued by his Department following publication of the Warner report; [37700]

(2) what specific structures and systems have been established by his Department to monitor compliance on the part of local authorities with the provisions of the code of practice arising from the publication of the Warner report on the selection, development and management of staff in children's homes; and if he will make a statement on the extent to which each local authority is (a) currently and (b) in the future planning to comply with the provisions of the code; [37701]

(3) what specific action (a) has been taken and (b) is planned in order to encourage greater compliance on the part of local authorities with the provisions of the code of practice arising from the publication of the Warner report on the selection, development and management of staff in children's homes; [37703]

(4) what assessment his Department has made of the costs to local authorities associated with compliance with the provisions of the code of practice arising from the publication of the Warner report on the selection, development and management of staff in children's homes; [37704]

(5) to what extent local authorities will be reimbursed in future for the increased costs associated with compliance with the provisions of the code of practice arising from the publication of the Warner report on the selection, development and management of staff in children's homes; [37705]

(6) if he will make a statement setting out the steps which he is taking to encourage compliance with the terms of the code of practice arising from the publication of the Warner report on the selection, development and management of staff in children's homes with particular reference to the advance vetting of those seeking access to children; and if he will indicate those agencies, charities or commercial organisations of which the Department holds details and which are able to provide advice to local authorities on such vetting procedures. [37699]

Mr. Bowis: Progress on the implementation of recommendations in the Warner report by local authorities was reported in Children Act reports in 1992, 1993 and 1994, copies of which are available in the Library.

The code of practice for the employment of residential child care workers, which I endorse, was produced by the independent support force for children's residential care. It is a reference document intended for the use of local authorities and other providers of child care services. It does not impose on local authorities any new burdens or costs. Local authorities are expected to continue to be particularly rigorous in their policies, procedures and practice for the recruitment, selection and retention of staff involved in child care services. This is routinely examined by inspectors of these services.

The code of practice and existing guidance from the Department of Health provide advice to local authorities on vetting procedures: how they implement the advice is their responsibility.

Osteoporosis

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what criteria are used to ascertain the suitability of an illness for inclusion in "The Health of the Nation" as a key area; and how many of these criteria are met by osteoporosis; [38426]

(2) what research has been conducted into the suitability of osteoporosis for inclusion in "The Health of the Nation" as a key area; and if he will make a statement. [38427]

Mr. Sackville: The criteria used to determine the five key areas as set out in "The Health of the Nation" White Paper (Com 1986) were:

the area should be a major cause of death or avoidable ill-health; effective interventions should be possible, offering significant scope for improvement in health; and it should be possible to set objectives and targets, and monitor progress towards them.

The Department of Health published the report of its advisory group on osteoporosis in January 1995. Copies of the report were distributed to all national health service bodies in England and are also available in the Library. The Department is presently working to implement many of its recommendations, including that further work be done to measure osteoporosis against the criteria for inclusion as a "Health of the Nation" key area. This year, the Department has increased its support for the National Osteoporosis Society from £20,000 to £50,000.

Unlicensed Herbal Medicines

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he proposes to take to prevent unlicensed herbal medicines being sold to the public in breach of the criminal law. [38509]

Mr. Sackville: The Medicines Control Agency investigates all reports of unlicensed herbal remedies being sold to the public in breach of United Kingdom medicines legislation, and takes the appropriate action.

NHS Drugs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the total costs of NHS drugs used in each of the past six years; and what is his latest calculation of the number killed by their use. [38642]

Mr. Malone: The cost of national health service drugs in England, in each of the past six years is shown in the table. The cost of drugs used by hospital and community services in 1994–95 is not yet available. In 1992, the latest year for which information is available, in England and Wales the number of deaths due to drugs, medicaments and biological substances causing adverse effects in therapeutic use was 14[1]. It is not possible to identify the adverse effects of prescribed drugs only.

NHS Hysterectomy and Dilation and Curettage Operations

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the number of NHS hysterectomy and dilation and curettage operations carried out in each of the past three years that are now judged to be unnecessary. [38644]

Mr. Sackville: Doctors are responsible for deciding whether an operation is needed in individual cases, in consultation with their patients. The relevant medical royal colleges are responsible for issuing guidelines on conditions and their treatments.

Boneloc Bone Cement

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many of the patients on whom Boneloc cement was used for their operation have now been contacted and informed of Scandinavian research of its failures. [38637]

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally. The Department issued hazard notice HN 9501 to orthopaedic departments in the health service in April 1995 providing advice on Boneloc bone cement. Action taken with regard to individual patients as a result of departmental advice is a matter for the clinical judgment of the health service professional concerned, in light of the patient's individual circumstances.

Variations in Health

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to publish the report of the variations sub-group of the Chief Medical Officer's "The Health of the Nation" working group. [38913]

Mr. Dorrell: The sub-group's report on variations in health has been published today, and copies have been placed in the Library.

NORTHERN IRELAND

School Teacher Appointments

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received on bringing school teaching appointments within the provisions of Northern Ireland fair employment legislation; and if he will list those

Protestant churches which have indicated that they wish this teacher exemption to continue in the course of recent reviews. [37155]

Mr. Ancram: As provided in section 38 of the Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act 1976, the Fair Employment Agency reviewed the exception relating to the employment of teachers in schools in 1981 and 1987. No changes were recommended to the exception. During these reviews, the Church of Ireland, Methodist and Presbyterian authorities indicated that they wished to see the exception retained.

Fire Service

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the fire service in Keady was upgraded from being an auxiliary fire unit to become a retained unit; how many call-outs the fire service in Keady had in the last full year prior to it ceasing to be an auxiliary fire unit; how many call-outs the retained unit in Keady had in the calendar year of 1994; and if he will make a statement about the number of fires in the Keady area. [37551]

Mr. Moss: In 1952, the then Northern Ireland fire authority established a volunteer fire party in Keady which shortly afterwards was changed to an auxiliary fire service unit. The auxiliary fire service was disbanded nationally in 1967, but following a review of fire cover, a retained fire crew was established in Keady in November 1971.

Due to the length of time involved it has not been possible to establish the number of call-outs attended by personnel in Keady prior to Keady being upgraded to retained status.

In the calendar year 1994, Keady station dealt with 144 calls, made up as follows:

	Call-outs
Major Fires (eg, property or car fires)	19
Secondary Fires (eg rubbish or derelict property fires)	60
Chimney fires	23
False Alarm Calls	36
Special Service Calls (eg, road traffic accidents or rescues)	6

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many fire call-outs the fire service has had this year to the districts of Tandragee, Richhill, Markethill, Newtownhamilton, Middletown, Bessbrook, Hamiltonsbawn and Keady. [37550]

Mr. Moss: The number of turn-outs to 30 September are as follows:

	Turn-outs
Tandragee	28
Richhill	14
Markethill	14
Newtownhamilton	182
Middletown	9
Bessbrook	110
Hamiltonsbawn	2
Keady	298

The figures for Newtownhamilton and Keady relate to calls attended within the station areas, as opposed to specifically within the town.

Population Statistics

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the latest estimates of those aged 17 years and over, plus 63 per cent. of those aged 16 years, for each parliamentary constituency in Northern Ireland together, in each case, with the equivalent electoral registration figures also expressed as a percentage of these population figures. [36778]

Sir John Wheeler: The 1991 electoral ward population figures taken from the Northern Ireland census, aggregated to parliamentary constituencies are as follows. Subsequent mid-year estimates are provided at district council level only and not broken down by age. Consequently the equivalent electoral registration figures relate to September 1991.

Parliamentary Constituency	Column 1 Population aged 17 and over plus 63 per cent. of population aged 16 years	Column 2 Registered Electors	Column 3 Percentage of Column 1

Irish Language

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what new proposals he has to improve the access to Irish medium education and teaching of Irish as a second language. [38638]

Mr. Ancram: I am prepared to respond to proposals for grant-aiding Irish-medium schools where they are clearly viable in terms of parental support and where financial support would be compatible with the provision of effective education and the avoidance of unreasonable public expenditure. The teaching of Irish as a second language is a matter for individual schools within the common curriculum requirements. A wide range of support is available to schools to assist them in making such provision.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has to use expertise from Wales and Scotland on second language education in Celtic languages to improve the teaching of Irish. [38643]

Mr. Ancram: None. In Northern Ireland, teachers of Irish, and other European languages, as a second language have a range of curriculum support material available to them, and the education and library boards' curriculum advisory and support services provides in-service training in the teaching of modern languages as for all other aspects of the curriculum. These local materials and services are designed to meet the needs of teachers in Northern Ireland, and the boards commission any external contribution to the services they provide as they consider necessary.

RUC Report

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he hopes to publish the 1995 report on the Royal Ulster Constabulary by Her Majesty's inspector of constabulary. [39120]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: Copies of the 1995 inspection report, which is the third RUC inspection report to be published, have today been placed in the Library. I welcome the report and will be considering its recommendations carefully.

I am grateful to Her Majesty's inspector for the report and am pleased to note that overall he regards the force as efficient.

Her Majesty's inspector of constabulary inspections offer the opportunity of professional examination of policing policies and priorities. This inspection forms part of an on-going programme intended to examine over succeeding years various aspects of police management. It is the third in the series to be published and has been a wide-ranging examination of the overall performance of the RUC.

Community Psychiatric Nurses

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what criteria is used by the Department of Health to fund the activities of community psychiatric nurses. [37566]

Mr. Moss: The Department of Health and Social Services does not provide funding for health and personal social services on the basis of specific service needs. It is a matter for the health and social services boards, as commissioners, to determine the specific service needs of their resident populations in the light of available resources.

The Department allocates the resources available annually to boards by means of a capitation formula which is employed to facilitate equitable distribution of funds on the basis of the overall needs for health and social care of each board's resident population.

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total number of people who have been referred to a community psychiatric nurse in the south and east Belfast area. [37557]

[38287]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Under the Treasury's own pay delegation, all staff who will not be members of the new senior civil service will be dealt with as a single group. The Treasury's departmental industrial relations agreement provides for discussions between management and the departmental trade union side on matters including pay and conditions.

Investment Scheme

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects the open-ended collective investment scheme, OCIS, will be available. [38492]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The Treasury is currently consulting on draft regulations, under the European Communities Act 1972, to allow the introduction of open-ended investment companies in the United Kingdom. The timetable depends on the outcome of consultations on these regulations, and on draft product regulations to be produced by the Securities and Investments Board. We hope, however, that the regulations will be made during the first half of 1996.

Cut Flowers (VAT)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 13 July, Official Report, columns 782-83, who has proposed a reduced rate of VAT on cut flowers; what are the arguments for this proposal; what is the proposed rate; what is the current rate; and how much revenue would be gained or lost by moving to a reduced rate. [38394]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 20 October 1995]: The European Commission has proposed an optional reduced rate for cut flowers in order to resolve a problem arising from cross-border trade.

In 1992 those member states who applied a reduced rate to cut flowers were allowed to continue to do so until the end of 1994. Because some of those member states were reluctant to move to their standard rate at the end of last year, the Commission suggested that an option to apply a reduced rate be made available to all member states.

No specific rate has been proposed, although under existing rates provisions, it could not be less than 5 per cent. Currently most member states, including the United Kingdom, apply their standard rate. The rate applicable in the remaining member states is generally in the range of 5 to 8 per cent. If the rate of VAT in the UK were reduced to 5 per cent., the estimated revenue loss would be approximately £180 million in a full year. However, the Government have consistently made clear that they would not exercise the option to apply a reduced rate even it were made available.

Adoption of the proposal requires the unanimous agreement of member states. Currently they remain divided, particularly because of concerns about cross-border distortions of competition and the revenue cost. The Government favour the application of the standard rate by all member states as the best way of addressing these concerns, and so do not support the proposal.

VAT (Collection)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much VAT has been collected by assessment and penalty for each of the last five years. [38395]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 20 October 1995]: Separate figures are not available for VAT by assessment and penalty. Net additional VAT liability, including associated penalties and interest, was established by officers as follows:

1990–91: £1,044 million;

1991–92: £1,023 million;

1992–93: £1,039 million;

1993–94: £1,365 million;

1994–95: £2,187 million.

Rebated Gas Oil

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what basis owners of pleasure craft are eligible for rebated gas oil; what is the cost of this rebate to the Exchequer, and what plans he has to remove this rebate. [38361]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 20 October 1995]: A rebated rate of excise duty applies to gas oil used "off road". On this basis, rebated gas oil can be used in pleasure craft as well as in most agriculture vehicles and machinery, in vehicles employed in motorway construction, forestry, mining and quarrying, and in British Rail diesel locomotives.

The estimated cost to the Exchequer of the application of the rebate to gas oil used by pleasure craft is between £5 million and £10 million.

Decisions on changes in taxation are matters for the Budget statement on 28 November.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Aid Budget

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the United Kingdom's aid budget in respect of the various countries in sub-Saharan Africa in each of the last five years. [37627]

Mr. Hanley: The total United Kingdom bilateral gross public expenditure on aid to countries in sub-Saharan Africa from 1990–91 to 1994–95 is set out in the table. In addition, countries also receive assistance from multilateral aid organisations to which the UK contributes.

[1] Figures include project aid; programme aid; emergency assistance; debt relief; and CDC investments.
[2] 1994–95 figures are provisional.
1. Prior to 1992–93, assistance to Eritrea formed part of programme to Ethiopia.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will undertake to make no reduction in United Kingdom bilateral aid in respect of poverty-relief programmes, including the provision of clean water, health care and education services. [38003]

Mr. Hanley: The overriding goal of the British aid programme is poverty reduction through sustainable development. The Government will maintain an effective bilateral programme focused on the poorest countries, including help in the water, health and education sectors.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of the aid budget will be spent bilaterally in 1998–99 in the event of the aid budget being reduced by (a) 5 per cent., (b) 7.5 per cent., (c) 10 per cent., and (d) 12.5 per cent. between 1996–97 and 1998–99. [37997]

Mr. Hanley: It is not possible to answer this question directly, since there is some scope to modify certain categories of multilateral spending—for example, contributions to new multilateral replenishments or voluntary contributions to UN or commonwealth bodies—particularly in the medium term.

The latest relevant published forecast, in the 1995 departmental report, indicates that bilateral aid in 1997–98 is expected to be 41 per cent. of the aid programme as set in last year's Budget.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the implications for the effectiveness of British diplomacy in (a) the United Nations, (b) the European Union (c) the Commonwealth and (d) international organisations of other reductions in Britain's bilateral aid programme; and if he will make a statement. [38148]

Mr. Hanley: Britain continues to maintain the world's fifth largest aid programme which befits her status as the fifth largest economy. We make a substantial and highly effective contribution to the multilateral institutions of which we are members.

AIDS

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what projects are currently being supported by the ODA to combat the spread of HIV-AIDS in developing countries. [37751]

Mr. Hanley: The United Kingdom currently supports bilaterally some 60 projects in 24 developing countries. Financial commitments amount to £67.4 million through the bilateral aid programme. A proportion of the United Kingdom's contributions to UN organisations, the World bank and the European Commission is also used for HIV-AIDS-related activities. In particular, the United Kingdom has provided £37.3 million to the World Health Organisation global programme on AIDS since its inception in 1987.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what financial, food and medical aid has been given by Her Majesty's Government to Sri Lanka during the last 12 months. [37647]

Mr. Hanley: The latest figures available show that in financial year 1994–95 total UK bilateral aid to Sri Lanka was £11.48 million. Of that, £1.16 million was financial—capital—aid, £0.52 million was emergency aid, and £0.75 million was provided for relief and rehabilitation programmes, including a small amount for food and medical supplies, which benefited families affected by conflict. The remainder was spent on technical co-operation, aid and trade provision and Commonwealth Development Corporation investments.

Population Control

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) of 20 June, Official Report, column 164–65 (a) if he will set out the reasons why the Overseas Development Administration considered it appropriate for its recent case studies in certain countries on the work of the United Nations population fund and the International Planned Parenthood Federation to be carried out using material and documents provided on the basis that information and findings would be treated in confidence and (b) if the information and findings will remain confidential on an indefinite basis. [37613]

Mr. Hanley: These studies are commissioned to help ODA assess how effective these organisations are relative to the aims of the United Kingdom's aid programme. ODA believes that the studies will produce more useful evidence and findings if they are undertaken on the understanding with all those concerned that the reports are not to be made public. ODA does not intend to publish these reports.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how the United Nations Family Planning Association and the United Nations population fund have helped the Chinese Government understand how their population policies are viewed by other countries and how approaches based on voluntary choice should be introduced. [37586]

Mr. Hanley: The United Nations population fund has done this through its international advocacy of non-coercive policies and other standard-setting work in relation to population policy and family planning, as well as through training of Chinese population specialists and its direct exchanges with the Chinese Government.

Least Developed Countries

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who represented Britain at the intergovernmental meeting in September to review progress on the United Nations programme of action on least developed countries; and what pledges of financial support Her Majesty's Government made. [38149]

Mr. Hanley: Our delegation was headed by the United Kingdom's permanent representative to the United Nations and included officials from the diplomatic and aid wings of the FCO. The meeting reported progress in many international fora in tackling the problems of the least developed countries, for example through debt relief initiatives. No new pledges of financial support were made by any donor.

SCOTLAND

Student Loans

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many graduates in Scotland are now paying back student loans; how many graduates in Scotland have had student loan repayments deferred under the earnings rule for each year since the introduction of student loans; and how many students in Scotland have applied for student loans in each year. [36404]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: These are operational matters for the Student Loans Company Ltd.

I have asked the acting chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Wild Cat

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to conduct a similar investigation into the possibility of the existence of a large wild cat in Banffshire, similar to that carried out by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in Bodmin; and if he will make a statement. [36972]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My Department maintains contact with Grampian police who, with the advice of veterinary and zoology experts, have examined reported incidents. The evidence found so far involves dogs and foxes only.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what resources he is prepared to allocate to determine whether there is a threat to livestock in Banffshire and Buchan from a big cat; and if he will make a statement. [36943]

Mr. Forsyth: Any incidents reported to my Department will be investigated appropriately.

Trade Statistics

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total value, at current prices of (a) exports out of Scotland and (b) imports into Scotland in each year since 1992–93; and if he will give a breakdown of these imports and exports in their respective industrial sectors. [37006]

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 16 October 1995]: The information is not available in the form requested.

Vandalism (Schools)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of vandalism in schools in (a) Grampian and (b) Gordon district have been reported to the procurator fiscal. [37936]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson [holding answer 20 October 1995]: Information is not available in the form requested.

Mr. Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the cost of vandalism to schools in (a) Scotland, (b) Grampian and (c) Gordon district. [37939]

Mr. Robertson [holding answer 20 October 1995]: Comprehensive information on the cost to education authorities of vandalism in schools is not collected centrally.

Film Industry

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to receive the report of the inquiry; conducted by officials of his Department into Government support of the film industry in Scotland; if he will place a copy in the Library, and if he will make a statement. [38424]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has asked Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise to consider how Scotland can be best promoted as a film location and to establish what infrastructure is needed for the production of commercial films in Scotland. He expects to receive their report early in the new year and will arrange to make copies available in the Library in due course.

Child Witnesses

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to receive the report of the working group set up in January to investigate the development of an integrated support scheme for child witnesses; and if he will make a statement. [38423]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The child witness support project working group is not expected to produce a final report until the latter part of 1997. The nature of the aim and objectives of the project is such as to demand a lengthy time scale.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisons (Drugs)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what initiatives have been taken at (a) Everthorpe, (b) Parkhurst and (c) other prisons to reduce illegal drug use in the past five years; and what initiatives are planned in the next two years. [38641]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 23 October 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question on the initiatives taken (a) Everthorpe, (b) Parkhurst and (c) other prisons to reduce illegal drug use in the past five years; and what initiatives are planned in the next two years.

Everthorpe, Parkhurst and all Prison Service establishments are required to develop a local drug strategy and an action plan for its implementation by the end of 1995.

A number of initiatives have been implemented at Everthorpe to reduce illegal drug use. The prison has developed and continues to receive community linked counselling services from the Substance Abuse Referral Unit (SARU) at York and the Drug Action Response Team (DART) in Hull. The prison has also developed a voluntary drug testing unit which provides support for prisoners who agree to stay off drugs during their sentence.

Mandatory Drug Testing was introduced at Everthorpe earlier this year. Further security and control measures planned for the future include the introduction of a drug detection dog and the implementation of new searching strategies in line with the Woodcock report. Everthorpe will continue their involvement with SARU and DART and will continue to work with community drug agencies to tackle drug misuse.

Parkhurst has made significant progress in improving the security and control measures designed to reduce the level of drug misuse. Drug sniffer dogs have been trained and employed for use in searching all parts of the prison used by prisoners as well as visitors. Two visitors this year have been charged by police following drug finds on their person.

Similar progress has been achieved in implementing measures to reduce the demand for drugs in Parkhurst. The health care team offers a range of services to prisoners with drug problems. A detoxification programme has been set up for identified prisoners. Recently between twelve and twenty prisoners have been receiving medical treatment for drug addiction. A contract with the community drug agency provides for a drug counsellor to come to Parkhurst on a weekly basis.

A rehabilitation orientated regime is planned for the near future and a dedicated drug unit is also planned for chaotic drug users which will act as a day centre and community clinic for prisoners with drug misuse problems.

On 8 April 1991 all Prison Service establishments were issued with a guidance manual on the management of drug users. The manual focused on helping staff who were involved in responding to the needs of drug misusers. It included guidance on detoxification, the use of methadone, multi-disciplinary team working, counselling and HIV.

From 1994 reducing the level of drug misuse became one of the Prison Service's strategic priorities. A new strategy was developed with the main aim of reducing the supply of drugs, reducing the demand for drugs and rehabilitating drug misusers and reducing the potential for the damage to health arising from the misuse of drugs. This strategy was issued to all establishments on 26 April 1995.

All prison establishments are reviewing their immediate operational requirements for dealing with drugs in prison. They have begun to set up the multi-disciplinary drugs teams which have to produce a local drugs strategy agreed between the governor and the area manager by the end of the year. In the meantime headquarters support is being given to a number of pilot treatment projects and to the introduction of mandatory drug testing (MDT) throughout the prison system, which is scheduled to be implemented across all establishments by the end of March 1996.

Other measures to reduce and control the supply of drugs include use of CCTV, drug sniffer dogs and enhanced search procedures.

This year the Prison Service is substantially expanding the number and type of drug treatment programmes and services available to prisoners. The schemes include therapeutic communities, dedicated treatment units, detoxification, education, counselling and thoughcare.

In the wider context, officials from the relevant departments have started to tackle the practical implications of securing a smooth transition for those who need it between treatment in prison and treatment in the community. Training is being provided for drugs strategy teams and, at a more specialist level, for health care staff and medical officers. An information package for prisoners and prison staff is being devised.

From 1996 local prison establishment drug strategies will be examined to ensure that they are consistent with the national strategy and will be subject to audit by area managers. The Prison Service will include the reduction of drug misuse as one of its Key Performance Indicators in the 1996–99 Corporate Plan, and will specify a relevant key target in its 1996—97 Business Plan together with an action plan to meet the new target.

Omasese Lumumba

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to establish an independent inquiry into the death in Pentonville prison of Omasese Lumumba. [38175]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 20 October 1995]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Stephen Byers, dated 23 October 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent question about the death of Mr. Omasese Lumumba in Pentonville prison.

There are no plans to establish an independent inquiry into Mr Lumumba's death. an internal Prison Service investigation was conducted immediately. Its conclusion was that procedures had been correctly observed. The available evidence did not support the bringing of disciplinary charges against individual members of staff.

The circumstances of Mr Lumumba's death were separately and independently investigated by the Metropolitan Police on behalf of the Coroner in accordance with normal practice. The police report was referred to the Crown Prosecution Service which concluded that there was insufficient evidence to support criminal charges against any officers. The Crown Prosecution Service reached its decision with the benefit of the transcript of the inquest and all the original case papers. The circumstances of Mr Lumumba's death have already been the subject of thorough, independent and impartial scrutiny and there are no grounds to justify the initiation of a further public inquiry.

since 1989 and if he will include in statistics for women serving custodial sentences details of the number receiving custodial sentences for fine defaulting.

Prison statistics for sentenced prisoners include fine defaulters. These are published in the annual volume "Prison statistics, England and Wales" (Table 1.1 of the 1993 edition, Cm 2893), copies of which are available from the Library of the House. Provisional information for 1994 shows that 1,420 females were received into a Prison Service establishment in England and Wales for non-payment of a fine.

There are a range of measures available to the courts without the recourse to imprisonment for the enforcement of fines. A defaulter is only committed to custody once these methods have been tried or considered and where the court is satisfied that there has been a wilful refusal or culpable neglect to pay.

[37193]

Information on the numbern of fine defaulters received into Prison Service establishments in England and Wales for using a television without a licence, is given by age, gender and ethnic origin in the attached tables. The average time served was 11 days for males and 9 days for females. The average time imposed was 4 days for males and 3 days for females.

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the efficient use of energy at Doncaster prison.

Doncaster prison operates a computerised building management system specifically designed to optimise energy utilisation.

Premier Prison Services Ltd have achieved savings by managing and developing this system in combination with arranging competitively-priced contracts with utility providers and heightening staff awareness of the need to conserve energy.

In line with the partnership agreements between Premier Prison Services Ltd and the Prison Service, the Prison Service receives 80 per cent of such saving. The amount due for this year as a result of these savings has not yet been determined.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what occasions inspectors from (a) the local authority's environmental health department and (b) the Health and Safety Executive have inspected Doncaster prison; what recommendations were made by the inspectors; which recommendations the contractor has implemented; and which recommendations are yet to be implemented. [37345]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Doug Hoyle, dated 23 October 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about inspections from the local environmental health officer and the Health and Safety Executive to Doncaster prison.

The local environmental health officer visited the prison on 3 August. His report is still awaited.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what amendments or alterations have been made to the contract between the Home Office and Premier Prisons Ltd. (a) at the contractor's request or (b) at his Department's request, since the contract was signed on 18 February 1994. Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Doug Hoyle, dated 23 October 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the sub-contracted services at Doncaster prison.

Doncaster Prison Services Ltd do not sub-contract any operating functions involving security, the provision of prisoner programmes, health care, food services, works services or laundry.

There are several specialist contracts in place to deal with the maintenance of computer equipment, electronic locking systems, close-circuit television linked to video recording systems and specialist plant and equipment.

In addition, specialist medical personnel support Doncaster prison on a contractual basis when required.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Doug Hoyle, dated 23 October 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the outcome of inquiries into a disturbance at Doncaster prison on 29 November 1994.

A full investigation was carried out by Linda Leivers into the incident. The investigation concluded that there was a clash between young offenders from different areas of Yorkshire, but that there were no warnings or indications to staff before the incident that trouble was imminent. The incident was quickly brought under control. Staff acted properly throughout the incident. The perpetrators were quickly identified and charged under Prison Rules.

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Doug Hoyle, dated 23 October 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the costs incurred by the contractor and the Home Office as a result of damage to the building, fixtures and fittings at Doncaster prison as a result of disturbances and other incidents.

Since the prison opened on 20 June 1994, total costs have amounted to £85,925. The costs have been met by the contractor. The Prison Service has not incurred any costs.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what dates security audits have been carried out by his Department at Doncaster prison; and what were their findings. [37344]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Doug Hoyle, dated 23 October 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about security audits at Doncaster prison.

The Prison Service's standards audit unit carried out a security audit of Doncaster prison between 13–22 March this year.

The content of the audit report was not disclosed because of the security detail it contains. It would not be in the interests of either the public or the Prison Service for such information to be in the public domain.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what dates additional prisoner places above the certified normal accommodation have been required at Doncaster prison; what was the number of additional places required on these occasions; and if these requirements have led to cost increases over and above the initially agreed contract price. [37348]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Doug Hoyle, dated 23 October 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the dates on which the certified normal accommodation has been exceeded at Doncaster; the number of additional places required; and any cost increases over and above the contract price.

The certified normal accommodation of 771 (CNA) has been exceeded on 47 occasions up to and including 21 September 1995. The dates and figures are given in the attached table.

There have been no additional costs to the Prison Service as a result of these increased figures.

Juvenile Offenders

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many juveniles are currently being detained under the provisions of section 53 of the Children and Young Persons Act of 1993 at the latest date for which figures are available. [37189]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Alun Michael, dated 23 October 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking how many juveniles are currently being detained under the provisions of section 53 of the Children and Young Persons Act of 1993 at the latest date for which figures are available.

The total number of children and young persons aged under 18, detained under section 53 on 17 October 1995 was 306. Of these, 201 were held in young offender institutions run by the Prison Service and 105 in local authority community homes or in a Youth Treatment Centre run by the Department of Health.

Identity Cards

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many responses were received by 30 September to the consultation paper on identity cards, Cm. 2879; and if he will arrange for these to be placed in the Library along with a summary of the responses to the various points listed in paragraph 8.6 upon which views were sought. [37082]

Mr. Kirkhope: We have received some 3,000 responses to the Green Paper on identity cards. I will not be publishing individual replies but a summary of the responses will be made available in due course.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Lockerbie

37. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will now set up a Select Committee on Lockerbie. [36495]

Mr. Newton: There are no plans to do so.

Back-Bench Debates

41. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Lord President of the Council what proposals he has to extend the opportunities available for Back-Bench debates. [36499]

Mr. Newton: The current arrangements under which the House sits on Wednesday mornings for Back-Bench debates have proved popular and successful. Subject to the outcome of current consultation, I will shortly invite the House to make these arrangements permanent.

Staff Support

42. Mr. MacShane: To ask the Lord President of the Council what proposals he has on improving staff support for hon. Members. [36500]

Mr. Newton: It is for each hon. Member to decide on the appropriate level of staff support based on his or her individual needs and circumstances.

The office costs allowance was significantly increased in real terms with effect from 1 April 1986, following recommendations by the Senior Salaries Review Body, and from 1994–95 the enhanced figure is now uprated automatically each year in line with inflation.

Divisions

43. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Lord President of the Council what recent representations he has received regarding the requirement on hon. Members to wear a hat when raising a point of order during a Division. [36501]

Mr. Newton: None.

Parliament Street Building

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chairman of the Finance and Services Committee what is the cost per individual workspace of the new phase II Parliament street building. [37878]

Mr. Channon: Phase II of the new parliamentary building is not due to open until summer 1999. The precise number and allocation of workspaces has not yet been decided and some accommodation will be allocated for conference rooms, catering facilities and other services for Members. It is thus not possible accurately to calculate the cost per individual workstation.

PDVN Network

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chairman of the Information Committee what proposals he has to arrange training for hon. Members in the use of the PDVN network of (a) e-mail, (b) the Internet and (c) internal communications. [37712]

Mr. Waller: The staff of the information systems office provide training courses in all aspects of the parliamentary data and video network's use. Training courses have recently been revised to cover the new Internet electronic mail and world wide web services and continue to cover the traditional service, including such internal communications facilities as electronic mail, the bulletin board and the diary-scheduler.

Radio and Television Costs

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chairman of the Information Committee if he will estimate the cost of adding BBC Radio 1, 5 live, Classic FM, and Sky News and Sport to the Palace television and radio choices. [38759]

Mr. Waller: The estimated cost is £31,400 including VAT, plus satellite programme charges. The Committee plans shortly to review the use of the audio and video channels and make recommendations on changes that might be made. I shall ask the information systems officer to write to the hon. Member explaining the technical details which underly the estimated cost.

Internet

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chairman of the Information Committee what proposals he had to put the proceedings of the House on to the Internet free of charge to all United Kingdom electors. [37714]

Mr. Waller: The question of the electronic publication of House documents including the possible release of Hansard on to the Internet is currently being considered by a group of House officials under the chairmanship of the Editor of the Official Report. The group expects to be in a position to make recommendations by early December.

Procedural Reform

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Lord President of the Council what further plans he has to reform the procedure of the House; and if he will make a statement. [36497]

Mr. Newton: Subject to the satisfactory outcome of current consultations, I hope shortly to invite the House to approve a series of motions to incorporate the current Jopling experiment with revised hours of sittings into the Standing Orders of the House. These proposals represent significant reforms in our procedures which I believe enjoy the support of all sections of the House.

Child Care Facilities

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick upon Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will list all child care facilities available to staff and Members in the House. [36488]

Mr. Beith: With effect from 1 April, a child care voucher scheme for children up to the age of five years has been available to staff employed by the Commission. Under the scheme, staff receive vouchers to the value of £6 per day worked per family towards child care provision of their choosing.

The House also participates in the Westminster holiday play scheme, which is available to the children of hon. Members, their staff and staff employed by the Commission. This covers children aged between five and 12 years during school holidays.

Millbank

Mr. Morgan: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick upon Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, how much has been spent in the last financial year on energy-efficient lighting at 7 Millbank. [36491]

Mr. Beith: Other than day-to-day maintenance, no work was carried out in the last financial year to modify the energy-efficient lighting at 7 Millbank.

Staff Employment Conditions

Mr. Rooker: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will list the matters about which staff of the House of Commons are precluded by employment conditions from approaching their Member of Parliament. [37401]

Mr. Beith: Conditions of service of staff of the House are set out in the staff handbook of which each member of staff receives a copy. Paragraph 169 states:

"staff of the House of Commons should not attempt to bring political influence or influence of bodies outside the House of Commons to support their own personal claims as members of staff. This is to ensure that individual staff employed by the House of Commons are not seen to gain for themselves special concessions which are not available to others. This does not override any statutory rights of appeal, such as those conferred by the Race Relations Acts or Employment Protection Acts; nor does it restrict the right of a member of staff to approach the appropriate Member of Parliament on other matters."

Disabled People (Access)

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee if he will make a statement on progress in relation to access to the House by disabled persons. [36490]

Mr. Ray Powell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by me to the hon. Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) on 8 February, Official Report, columns 243-46, which describes in detail the conclusions of the review by the Accommodation and Works Committee into access for disabled people. Most of the recommended improvements are now in hand and altogether some 50 separate projects, small and large, will be implemented.

A copy of a note dated 14 June 1995 by the Director of Works detailing the improved facilities has been placed in the Library. The main achievements are as follows: access is now available for people in wheelchairs from New Palace Yard to the Strangers Gallery, the Terrace, the Principal Floor, the Main Committee Corridor, the Upper Committee Corridor and the Centre Curtain Corridor private dining rooms. The new entrance at Black Rod's Garden enables people in wheelchairs to go directly to the start of the line of route. In addition, adaptations have now been completed on lift Nos. 1 and 15 in order to take people in wheelchairs to the Strangers Gallery and to the four main floors on the river front. There is a further programme to adapt 24 other lifts in the Palace for ambulant disabled people.

New Parliamentary Building

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what steps he is taking to ensure the maximum level of British content in the new parliamentary building. [37034]

Mr. Ray Powell: All large contracts are subject to competitive tender. In putting together the tender list for each of the packages, an extensive search is carried out to ensure that British firms are invited.

Prayers

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Lord President of the Council when he next plans to meet the Speaker and Speaker's Chaplain to discuss prayers in the House of Commons Chamber; and if he will make a statement. [36498]

Mr. Newton: I have no plans to do so.

Departmental Select Committees

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Lord President of the Council what plans he has to improve the opportunities for the House to debate the reports of departmental Select Committees. [36493]

Mr. Newton: Subject to the outcome of current consultations, I hope to respond positively to the Procedure Committee's recommendation that a number of Wednesday mornings each session should be devoted to Select Committee reports chosen by the Liaison Committee.

TRANSPORT

Traffic Noise

2. Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to reduce traffic noise in urban areas; and if he will make a statement. [36459]

Mr. Watts: Further reductions in noise limits will be introduced for all new vehicles entering into service from 1 October 1996. Levels of noise from individual vehicles have already been dramatically reduced in the last 10 years so that 10 of today's heaviest lorries make no more noise than a single lorry in the early 1980s.

Road Construction

18. Sir David Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much has been spent on motorway and major trunk road construction in each of the past three years, at constant prices. [36475]

Mr. Watts: Expenditure incurred on motorway and major trunk road construction for the years 1992–93, 1993–94 and 1994–95, using the 1995–96 road construction price index of 1995, was £1,082.70 million, £1,196.86 million and £1,148.52 million respectively.

Lockerbie

19. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in which aspects of the destruction of Pan Am 103 over Lockerbie his Department is currently involved. [36476]

Sir George Young: My Department's principal current involvement in respect of the Lockerbie disaster is in continuing to improve the United Kingdom national aviation security programme, taking particular account of the requirements and recommendations made by the International Civil Aviation Organisation immediately after the disaster and since.

Railway Privatisation

20. Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about railway privatisation. [36477]

Mr. Watts: The programme has irresistible momentum. Over 40 per cent. by revenue of passenger rail services are out to tender and the first three franchises—Great Western, LTS Rail and South West Trains—are due to be awarded at the end of the year. Railtrack will be floated in spring 1996. Businesses with a combined turnover of some £270 million have already been sold. Further, businesses with a combined turnover of nearly £3 billion are already on the market.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated cost to date of rail privatisation. [37914]

Mr. Watts: Costs incurred to date by the Department, the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising and the Office of the Rail Regulator are as follows. They include running costs and consultancy costs.

£ million

	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	[1]1995–96
DOT	1.0	6.7	[2]13.5	14.2	8.8

Total	1.0	6.7	17.3	39.8	28.2

[1] Estimated costs to 30 September 1995.
[2] Includes £1.5 million contribution by DOT to the costs of setting up OPRAF and ORR prior to formal appointments of the Franchising Director and Railway Regulator.

In addition, British Rail and Railtrack have incurred costs linked to privatisation. These are shown below:

£ million

	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96
BR/Railtrack	—	—	92.2	131.0	57.0

[1] Estimated costs to 30 September 1995.

Road and Rail Transport, Severnside

21. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will visit Severnside to discuss the future of road and rail transport in the area. [36478]

Sir George Young: I hope to visit the area later this year to inspect progress on the second Severn crossing. My Department is supporting a number of measures to develop the road and rail network in the area.

Network South

22. Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has had regarding British Rail's NetworkSouth. [36479]

Mr. Watts: Since the beginning of July, my Department has received about 50 representations regarding Network SouthCentral. Many were related to the draft passenger service requirement.

Holyhead-Chester-Crewe Railway Line

24. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations he has had with the railway authorities concerning the need to upgrade the Holyhead-Chester-Crewe railway line; and if he will make a statement. [36481]

Mr. Watts: Railtrack continues to keep us in touch with progress on the Holyhead-Chester-Crewe upgrade. I understand that Railtrack is currently discussing upgrade options with interested parties.

Cardiff-Weston Railway Line

25. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish details of the evaluation of the Cardiff-Weston line for a second Severn road crossing carried out prior to the closure of the Aust-Portskewett line. [36482]

Mr. Watts: No such evaluation has ever been carried out.

M65

26. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest estimate of the additional traffic expected on the M65 once the link with the M6 is completed. [36483]

Mr. Watts: It is anticipated that traffic on the M65 will rise by just over 10 per cent.—roughly 4,500 vehicles per day—when the road is complete.

A259

27. Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made in upgrading the A259 in East Sussex and Kent. [36484]

Mr. Watts: The A259 Brookland diversion scheme in Kent was completed at a cost of £2 million and opened to traffic on 9 October. Preparation work is continuing on other schemes to improve the A259.

Bournemouth Station

28. Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the restoration of Bournemouth station. [36485]

Mr. Watts: The Government and Railtrack are committed to the provision of a quality rail infrastructure. As part of this commitment, Railtrack is carrying out refurbishment work on Bournemouth station, a listed building, which involves restoring and cleaning the external brickwork and masonry of the station wall facing the town centre. This work began on 14 September.

Passenger Transport Services

29. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made in his plans for franchising passenger transport services. [36487]

Mr. Watts: Passenger service requirements for 55 per cent. of services, in terms of passenger revenue, have been issued for consultation. Many have completed the process and been published in their final form. Tenders have been invited for seven franchises, covering 41 per cent. of all services, in terms of passenger revenue. Invitations to pre-qualify to bid for Chiltern Railways and South Eastern were issued on 3 October. The franchising director aims to award the first three franchises, for Great Western, LTS Rail and South West Trains, in December.

Buses, London

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of average traffic speed of buses in central London. [36463]

Sir George Young: The Government do not monitor the speeds of buses. London Transport data suggest that in 1994 the average speed of buses in central London was around 8 mph in peak periods and 9 mph in the daytime off-peak.

Crossrail

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider the hybrid Bill procedure to secure parliamentary approval for the crossrail project. [35469]

Mr. Norris: No. The Transport and Works Act 1992 is a more appropriate vehicle for this purpose.

Vehicle Registration

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the present number of vehicles registered in the United Kingdom; and what is the current forecast for those numbers in 2000, 2010 and 2020. [36480]

Mr. Norris: There were 25.8 million vehicles in 1994. The Department does not make forecasts for all types of vehicles.

Nuclear and Toxic Wastes (Sea Transport)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received in the current year on the environmental hazards posed by the sea transport of nuclear and toxic wastes. [36750]

Mr. Norris: In February of this year, a representation was received from Friends of the Earth, Guernsey expressing concern about the transport of nuclear waste from France to Japan. I refer the hon. Member to my answer on 6 March, Official Report, column 58.

A similar representation has since been received from the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms Walley), concerning the British registered ship Pacific Pintail and its passage around Cape Horn earlier this year while carrying vitrified residue from France to Japan.

Electric Cars

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many electric cars are estimated to be in use in the London area; what range of speeds the average such car is estimated to have; and if he will make a statement. [36845]

Mr. Norris: There are 1,432 electric vehicles currently licensed in Greater London. The range and speed of these vehicles is not known but new commercially available electric cars currently available in western Europe are estimated to have an average range of 80 km—49 miles—and an average maximum speed of 86 kph—53 mph.

The Government are considering the role that electricity and other alternative fuels and vehicle technologies might play in minimising pollutant emissions from road vehicles. To this end, the development of electric vehicles has been followed with interest; but despite recent technological advances, their price, range of operation and performance still compare less favourably with that of petrol and diesel vehicles, particularly for passenger cars.

However, electric vehicles do seem to be more suitable for centralised low mileage delivery fleets like those operated by local authorities and bus companies. Such vehicles could offer air quality benefits while avoiding the limitations of electric operation and have been included in the Department's £1.2 million trial of alternative fuels.

Illegal Vessel Discharges

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many prosecutions have been brought, in respect of illegal discharges of oil or other pollutants by vessels in Scottish waters in each year since 1990; [37239]

(2) in respect of how many cases report have been made to appropriate shipping companies regarding allegations of illegal discharge of oil or other pollutants, in circumstances where there was insufficient evidence for court action; and if he will make a statement; [37240]

(3) how many prosecutions have been brought, in each year since 1990, in respect of illegal discharges of oil or other pollutants by vessels in Scottish waters. [37242]

Mr. Norris: These are operational matters for the Coastguard Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from C. J. Harris to Mr. James Wallace, dated 23 October 1995:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions as the questions deal with operational matters, for which I have responsibility as Chief Executive.

PQ 5/95/96

Since 1972 17 reports have been made to shipping companies regarding alleged pollution incidents involving their vessels. In all these cases, on the advice of the Treasury Solicitor, there was insufficient evidence to support court action.

PQ 6/95/96 and PQ 30/95/96

There have been 14 prosecutions brought in respect of illegal discharges by vessels in Scottish waters since 1990. There was 1 in 1990, 3 in 1991, 1 in 1992, 4 in 1993 and 5 in 1994.

Toxic Chemicals (Transport)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the implications of the spillage of toxic chemicals on a cross-channel ferry to Ramsgate in the second week of September, and its subsequent journey on the motorway network. [37373]

Mr. Norris: This incident concerned the spillage of approximately half a litre of benzyl chloride from a road tanker while leaving the vessel Sally Eurolink at Ramsgate. The incident was satisfactorily dealt with by the crew, and the lorry continued its journey. The incident did not demonstrate any deficiencies in the current procedure under the emergency schedule in the international maritime dangerous goods code.

Road Tolls

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what new proposals he has to introduce the tolling of vehicles for the use of (a) motorways, (b) estuarial crossings and (c) other roads. [38639]

Mr. Watts: None.

Non-rebateable Fuel Duty (London Buses)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 16 October, Official Report, column 73, concerning the additional sums paid by London bus companies in respect of non-rebateable fuel duty to be paid in 1995–96, if he will estimate the total sum so paid consequent on all stage carriage bus services in London. [38398]

Mr. Norris: Information on fuel duty is not collected by geographical area.

Reverse Warning Aids

Sir Peter Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to make the fitting of reverse warning aids mandatory. [38409]

Mr. Norris: I have undertaken to review the case for the compulsory fitting of reversing alarms when considering other amendments to the construction and use regulations on vehicle noise, which are currently being finalised. I intend to canvass the views of interested organisations on this matter as part of the public consultation on those amendments.

Gas-powered Public Service Vehicles

Mr. Atkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to encourage the use of natural gas-powered public service vehicles; and if he will make a statement. [38038]

Mr. Norris: The Government are currently considering the role which natural gas and other fuels may play in public service and other vehicles. To that end, they are continuing to sponsor studies of alternative fuels, including the £1.2 million collaborative field trials. Natural gas-powered buses are included. Results should be available in late 1996.

Bull Bars

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what new proposals he has to discourage the use of bull bars; and when he plans to introduce a total ban. [38163]

Mr. Norris: The Transport Research Laboratory is currently analysing police reports of accidents involving bull bars which occurred in 1994. The results will not be available until towards the end of the year and we will then decide what, if any, legislation is needed.

Meanwhile, officials of the Department of Transport are discussing the feasibility of prohibiting bull bars with the European Commission.

Motorway Service Areas

Sir Michael Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research he has (a) evaluated and (b) commissioned as to the extent to which motorway service areas contribute to pollution of the environment resulting from (i) noise, (ii) litter, (iii) illumination of the night sky and (iv) atmospheric degradation from fuel emissions and to the loss of amenity caused by their development on green belt land; and if he will make a statement. [38352]

Mr. Watts: None. Since deregulation of the provision of motorway service areas in 1992, it is for private developers to provide an environmental statement for consideration by the local planning authority together with any application for planning permission for a proposed motorway service area.

Selby Bypass

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the proposed cost and length of the Selby bypass. [37880]

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. William O'Brien, dated 23 October 1995:

As you know, the Minister for Railways and Roads, Mr. John Watts, has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question asking what is the proposed cost and length of the Selby Bypass.

The estimated cost of the proposed A63 Selby Bypass is £21 million; its length is 6 miles.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the timetable for the construction of the Selby bypass. [37881]

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. William O'Brien, dated 23 October 1995:

As you know, the Minister for Railways and Roads, Mr. John Watts, has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question about the time-table for the construction of the Selby Bypass.

A public inquiry into the Compulsory Purchase Order for the proposed A63 Selby Bypass was held in June of this year. In common with all other schemes in the National Roads Programme, the future timing of the Selby Bypass, particularly the start of works date, will depend on the availability of funds.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects work on the channel tunnel rail link to commence. [37970]

Mr. Watts: The start of the main construction works will follow the Channel Tunnel Rail Link Bill gaining Royal Assent and the promoter completing sufficient design and other work to achieve the necessary raising of finance.

Rail Network (Speed Restrictions)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many miles of rail track are currently subject to speed restrictions on each major line throughout the rail network. [37568]

Mr. Watts: The current number of miles subject to speed restrictions on each of the major lines are:

Major Lines	Miles
West Coast main line	2
Midland main line	1
East Coast main line	1
Great Western	12

London Underground (Crime)

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) violent crimes and (b) sexual assaults took place on (i) men and (ii) women and (iii) in total in (1) 1993 and (2) 1994 at major railway stations and on London Underground. [37525]

Mr. Watts: The table shows the number of recorded offences for violent crime, including robbery, and sexual offences committed against males and females at all railway and London Underground stations in 1993 and 1994. For 1993, separate figures for males and females are not available. Figures for "major railway stations" might be available if the hon. Member would list them.

	Against males	Against females	Total
1993
Violent crimes (including robbery)	—	—	3,878
Sexual assault	—	—	723
1994
Violent crimes (including robbery)	3,028	642	3,670
Sexual assault	93	472	565

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Civil Servants (Party Political Activity)

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the rules relating to (a) civil servants and (b) special advisers participating in party political activity. [37999]

Mr. Horam: The rules on civil servants' political activities are set out in chapter 4 of the personnel management part of the civil service management code, a copy of which is in the Library.

Special advisers are bound generally by the rules applicable to civil servants, with specific exemptions. They may, with the approval of their Minister, attend party functions, maintain contact with party members and take part in policy reviews conducted by their party. They may accompany, act for, or speak for their Minister in situations where the Minister can be seen to be acting in his or her capacity as a member of the Government. In other circumstances, including those where their Minister is taking part in party political activities, it may be appropriate for a special adviser to accompany the Minster, to provide liaison with their Department, and advise on any departmental business that may arise.

Special advisers may assist with other internal party political matters, such as a leadership campaign, if they do so while on leave, or at times which do not interfere with their normal duties—for example out of office hours. In addition, and provided that they have the approval of their Ministers, special advisers are allowed to take part in all forms of local political activity, apart from local activities in support of national political activities.

Compliance Cost Assessments

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister which regulatory proposals have been abandoned because of their failure to meet the compliance cost assessment. [37755]

Mr. Freeman: The purpose of compliance cost assessments is to ensure that regulatory proposals are introduced only where they are justified and that costs to business arising from such proposals are taken into account as the policy proposal develops so that the resulting regulation imposes the least cost burden necessary. This enables different options to be considered at the policy-making stage with a choice of abandoning the proposal or amending it to reduce costs to the minimum. This is part of the Government's approach to "good regulation", making sure we get regulation right first time.

An example of a regulatory proposal that has been abandoned because of excessive cost is an EC directive which would have required tactile danger warning symbols to be placed on certain liquid petroleum gas containers. The Commission agreed to revise the directive in the light of estimated compliance costs to United Kingdom business of £289 million per annum.

Deregulation

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many new studies have been initiated in response to the deregulation task force report; what is the name of these studies and their estimated cost; and when they are expected to report their findings. [37759]

Mr. Freeman: The Government accepted the task force's suggestion for a feasibility study into the practicalities of setting up a single information point to provide start-up businesses with details of all relevant licensing and regulatory requirements. An initial study—looking at the regulatory requirements on vehicle component manufacturers, corner shops, small hoteliers and builders—started in August and is due to be completed by the end of the year. It will cost about £160,000.

The Government also agreed to undertake an independent study into how the total burden of Government surveys might be reduced by up to 25 per cent., and to initiate a study to see how the burden of administrative forms might be reduced. Terms of reference for these studies, including estimated costs and completion dates, have yet to be finalised.

In addition to these studies, all Government Departments have been asked to review the need for existing business licences and to identify suitable areas for merging or aligning different enforcement regimes.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many deregulation units have been set up in different Whitehall Departments. [37757]

Mr. Freeman: Each regulatory department has its own deregulation unit consisting typically of two or three staff whose work on deregulation is usually only part of their duties. There are 20 such units in total.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many people work for the deregulation unit; and how many are needed to service the deregulation task force. [37772]

Mr. Freeman: The current staff total of the central deregulation unit is 41.6 staff years, including three staff who provide secretariat support to the deregulation task force.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the 250 business licences which are to be reviewed as part of the Government's new deregulation initiative, and the date each licence was originally introduced. [37758]

Mr. Freeman: My Department is currently compiling a full list of the licences which apply to business, which will be placed in the House of Commons Library, once complete.

The review is intended to examine all licences which apply to business, regardless of when they were introduced and by whom, with a view to abolition or, if there are strong arguments for retaining the licence, with a view to reducing the burden on industry. This reduced burden could be attained, for example, by simplifying the structure of the licence, continuous licensing, merging of different licences, offering greater scope for exemptions or narrowing the grounds for refusal.

WALES

Short-time Working

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimates his Department has made of the number of companies currently on short-time working; and how many employees are affected by such short-time working. [37512]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The latest available information for Wales is published in table 1.13 of the Employment Gazette, September 1995, which indicates that an estimated 300 operatives in manufacturing in Wales were affected by short-time working in June 1995. Information on the number of companies affected is not available.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate his Department has made of the number of people in employment (a) male full-time, (b) male part-time, (c) female full-time and (d) female part-time in Mid Glamorgan and Wales; and what were the figures in (i) 1965, (ii) 1971 and (iii) 1979. [37515]

Mr. Jones: The latest available information, which is for 1993, is published in table 4 on page 375 of the Employment Gazette, October 1995, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Data for 1971 and 1978 are available from the NOMIS database which can be accessed by the staff of the Library. Comparable information for 1965 and 1979 is not available.

National Vocational Qualifications

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate his Department has of the number of people under the new training for work programme who are working towards an NVQ in (a) Merthyr, (b) Rhymney, (c) Mid Glamorgan and (d) Wales. [37548]

Mr. Richards: The information requested is not readily available. Once it is available I will write to the hon. Member and will place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Ysbyty Gwynedd

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the total cost of the refurbishment of the foyer of Ysbyty Gwynedd and the consequent relocation of the WRVS shop and cafe. [37711]

Mr. Richards: This was not a scheme funded from the all-Wales capital programme and is therefore a matter for the Gwynedd hospitals NHS trust.

Public Appointments

Sir Wyn Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many advisory non-departmental public bodies there are in Wales; and what is their total membership. [38022]

Mr. Hague: Details of advisory non-departmental public bodies in Wales are set out in "Public Bodies" by HMSO. The latest edition shows that at September 1994 there were 24 such bodies with a total of 274 members.

Sir Wyn Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many executive non-departmental public bodies there are in Wales; and how many members are appointed by him in all such bodies. [38024]

Mr. Hague: There are 24 executive non-departmental public bodies in Wales to which I, or my predecessors, have appointed 184 members. Details are set out in "Appointments by the Secretary of State for Wales", copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Farmers' Wives

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will (a) commission or (b) sponsor a study into the social and economic role played by farmers' wives in Wales. [37706]

Mr. Hague: I have no plans to do so. The Rural White Paper for Wales will address a whole range of issues which affect life in the Welsh countryside.

Marriage Counselling Services

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the marriage counselling services in Dyfed and Powys, the amount provided from public funds in support of such services and the waiting time for appointments with them. [37707]

Mr. Hague: The information requested is not held centrally.

Hare Population (Wales)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if estimates are available in respect of the hare population in Wales (a) as a whole and (b) on a local basis for the past five years; and if he will make a statement. [37708]

Mr. Hague: The most recent estimate indicates a population of approximately 50,000 brown hares in Wales in the early 1990s. No estimates are available on a more local basis. Further information can be found in "A Review of British Mammals: population estimates and conservation status of British mammals other than cetaceans" published by the Joint Nature Conservation Committee in 1995.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the amount he calculates was included in the rate support grant for each county in Wales to support under five education in the settlements for each of the last five years. [38337]

Mr. Richards: Welsh local authority standard spending assessments and revenue support grant entitlements are not hypothecated to specific services.

Planning Applications

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the planning applications which his Department has called in, in each of the last five years and so far this year indicating in each case the reasons for doing so. [38339]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is as follows. Decisions related to applications for listed building consent are not included. All the applications were called in because it was considered that they raised matters of more than local importance.

Mr. Hague: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on Thursday 19 October at Column 341

Cardiff Royal Infirmary

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to receive the formal application for the transfer of the accident and emergency services from the Cardiff royal infirmary to the University Hospital of Wales at the Heath, for his determination under the statutory procedure for opposed changes; how long he expects he will take to make the determination; what provisions he is making for evaluating the alternative scheme proposed by the Cardiff community health council: and if he will make a statement. [38763]

Mr. Hague: I understand that South Glamorgan health authority's proposals for the future of the Cardiff royal infirmary, together with the Cardiff Community health council's alternative proposals, will be submitted to me very shortly.

I shall of course treat the matter with the urgency it deserves. I will, however, need to consider all the issues involved very carefully, including the community health council's alternative proposals. My decision will be made on the basis of clinical safety, access and value for money.

Millennium Commission Projects

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the Millennium Commission in relation to the funding of and priority for projects in Wales and in particular the national botanical garden, the Welsh national rugby stadium redevelopment scheme and the Cardiff Bay opera house; and if he will make a statement. Mr. Hague: I have had no such consultations with the Millennium Commission. My officials have provided factual responses to any questions asked of them by commission officials, in relation to these and other applications before them.

Nursery Education

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, if he will list (a) the numbers and (b) the percentage of three-year-olds and four-year-olds that received local authority nursery education or were in local education authority infant classes in each county in Wales on each of the last five years. [38362]

Mr. Richards: Figures for local education authority schools only are not readily available. The following tables show the figures for both LEA and grant maintained schools.

DEFENCE

BMARC

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answers of 4 April, Official Report, columns 1097–98 and 19 June, Official Report, column 31, if he will list the companies other than Astra/BMARC to which the documents discovered on 16 June referred; on what date he was informed by his Department's police that further documents have been found relating to BMARC have Astra plc; whether these documents included sales documentation of arms exports by BMARC and Astra; and if he will make a statement. [38364]

Mr. Soames: Ministers were informed on 16 June of the discovery of the further documents. On the other points, I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Member on 18 July, Official Report, column 1188.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what dates his Department took possession of documents taken from the company BMARC; and on what dates these documents were handed over to the Scott inquiry. [38365]

Mr. Soames: Documents were taken by MOD police from BMARC on 4 and 5 April 1990, 19 and 20 May 1990, 11 July 1990 and 7 August 1990. All documents taken from BMARC, belonging to that company, have been returned to the company liquidators. The provision of these documents to the Scott inquiry is therefore a matter for the liquidators.

Mr. David Hart

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what checks have been made of Mr. David Hart to enable him to have access to classified information. [38255]

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Gentlemen to the answer I gave him on 19 October, Official Report column 360.

Dr. Clark : To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he received from the British defence industry concerning the role of Mr. David Hart in procurement contracts. [38254]

Mr. Portillo: None.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultancies held by Mr. David Hart relating to defence companies have been disclosed to him; and if he will list those companies involved. [38253]

Mr. Portillo: None.

Nuclear Weapons, France

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will place in the Library copies of the financial arrangements in place to support nuclear co-operation with France; [37619]

(2) if he will list the dates, since 1979, when technical discussions have taken place with France on nuclear weapons; and in which meetings Ministers participated; [37620]

(3) if he will make a statement on the progress made in technical discussions with France on nuclear weapons safety and stewardship. [37621]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Nottingham, South (Mr. Simpson) on 16 October 1995, Official Report, column 37.

Metrication

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what year the armed forces (i) announced and (ii) implemented metrication. [37676]

Mr. Arbuthnot: In 1965 the Government announced their intention that metric units should become the primary system of measurement in the United Kingdom. That intention was subsequently confirmed in the 1972 White Paper on metrication—Cm 4880. A defence standard prescribing the metric units to be used by the Ministry of Defence, including the services, was developed and published in 1976.

Helicopters

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what capability the Royal Air Force Hercules C.1K fleet has to refuel (a) Royal Air Force Sea King HAR.3 helicopters, (b) Royal Navy Sea King HAR.5 helicopters and (c) Royal Air Force Chinook helicopters; and what air-refuelling capability will be incorporated in the EH–101. [37533]

Mr. Arbuthnot: RAF and RN Sea Kings, and current RAF Chinooks, do not have an air-to-air refuelling capability.

All 22 EH101 HC Mk1 for the RAF will be capable of being fitted with flight-refuelling probes. Six complete sets of probes will be supplied as a role-fit equipment for the EH101 HC Mk1 fleet.

There is no requirement for EH101 Merlin to have an air-to-air refuelling capability.

Joint Services College

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are his latest estimates of the cost of establishing a joint services command and staff college at Camberley. [37965]

Mr. Soames: I have no reason to believe that the capital costs of establishing a joint services command and staff college at Camberley will be greater than those projected in the document I placed in the Library of the House following my announcement of the Government's decision on the staff college site on 30 March 1995. We continue to refine costs, and as work develops there is every expectation that the capital costs will fall.

It is possible that there will be an increase in running costs from those previously announced as we now plan a larger joint service command and staff college to accommodate a greater number of foreign and commonwealth students. This is independent of the choice of the site for the joint service command and staff college.

Eurofighter

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes his Department has made to the management of the Eurofighter 2000 project in the last 12 months. [38251]

Mr. Arbuthnot: With our Eurofighter 2000 partners, we have taken the opportunity offered by the planned merger of the Eurofighter 2000 and Tornado management agencies to review the intergovernmental management arrangements for the programme. Measures have been agreed to define the merged agency's role more precisely, to improve its business processes and to clarify the responsibilities of senior committees.

Airmobile Brigade

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he made of the operational deployment of the 24 Airmobile Brigade to the former Yugoslavia. [38252]

Mr. Soames: Earlier this year, 24 Airmobile Brigade was deployed to the former Yugoslavia to make clear our determination to enhance the effectiveness of UNPROFOR and to provide additional protection to British troops. Those objectives have been achieved.

Gibraltar

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the strategic importance of Gibraltar to the United Kingdom's defence interests and that of NATO. [37465]

Mr. Soames: Gibraltar commands the important sea lane of communication between the Mediterranean and the Atlantic. Notwithstanding the end of the cold war, its strategic significance has not diminished. Gibraltar has well equipped and organised command facilities which support a NATO HQ—COMGIBMED.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fish Stocks

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the letter from the then Minister of State, the hon. Member for Fylde (Mr. Jack) of 7 April, what was the result of the Food and Agriculture Organisation Conference, relating to straddling and highly migratory fish stocks; and if he will make a statement. [37300]

Mr. Baldry: The United Nations conference on straddling and highly migratory fish stocks adopted a legally binding agreement on 4 August. I welcome this development. The agreement will require states to co-operate with each other in managing such stocks according to the best scientific advice available and to submit disputes to legally binding dispute settlement procedures. It includes a tough new scheme for international enforcement of conservation and management measures.

The agreement opens for signature on 4 December in New York.

The relevant provisions of the UN agreement have been incorporated into the FAO code of conduct for responsible fisheries, which is currently being considered by the FAO General Council with a view to its adoption at the FAO conference in Rome from 25 October to 2 November.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the cost per family in the United Kingdom of the common agricultural policy in (a) 1985, (b) 1990 and (c) the latest year for which figures are available. [37927]

Mr. Baldry: A note entitled "The Cost of the Common Agricultural Policy to Taxpayers and Consumers", produced by the Department, was deposited in the Library of the House on 9 March. This gives estimates of the cost of the CAP to UK consumers and taxpayers of £3.88 per person per week, equivalent to £15.52 per week per family of four, in 1993, the latest year for which estimates have been made. The equivalent figures for 1985 and 1990 are respectively £8.48 and £13.64 per week per family of four.

These estimates have been based on calculations by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development of total transfers resulting from agricultural policies in the European Union, with adjustments in respect of the abatement to the United Kingdom's contribution to the European Union budget.

The estimates are likely to overstate the savings which could be made by UK consumers and taxpayers if the CAP were removed; in the absence of support, world prices would be higher than at present.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest estimate of the amount the common agricultural policy costs the average family (a) per week and (b) per year. [39251]

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend, the Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave) to the hon. Member for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson) on 9 March 1995, Official Report, column 328.

Departmental Work

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the work of his Department since 1990. [38074]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: MAFF publishes information about the work which it carries out and since 1991, MAFF has, like other Departments, produced an annual departmental report, copies of which are available from the House of Commons Library. The report describes the activities, expenditure and plans of the Department. The latest report, published in March 1995 by HMSO, Cm 2803, includes expenditure details since 1989–90.

Intervention Stocks

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the levels of intervention stores for each EEC country for each commodity; and if he will tabulate this information against the number of days supply represented by each commodity in international stores per member state. [37907]

Mr. Baldry: The levels of intervention stocks for each member state are shown in the table. Information on the number of days' supply which these stocks represent is unavailable.

Tables showing levels, including days' supply, of all produce held in intervention within the EU as a whole, are placed in the House at regular intervals, most recently on 5 October. The information currently held in the House Library goes back to January 1985.

Mr. Baldry: Tables showing levels of all produce held in intervention within the EU, with levels for the United Kingdom separately identif[illegible] are placed in the House Library at regular interv[illegible] recently on 5 October. nephrop total allowable catch for area VI; and if he will make a statement. [38425]

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Scotland to the Member for Ayr (Mr. Gallie) during oral questions on 18 October, Official Report, column 348.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Lone Parents

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate his Department has made of the percentage of lone parents in (a) 1994 and *(b)*1993 who are (i) divorced or (ii) widowed. [37009]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The information is in the table:

	1984	1993
Single never married	20	37
Divorce/ Separated	68	57
Widowed	12	6

Source: DSS data.

War Pensions

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many recipients of war pensions are accepted as suffering from post traumatic stress disorder attributable to service. [37085]

Mr. Heald: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many war pensioners currently receive war pensions based on an assessed disablement of 50 per cent. or more. [37087]

Mr. Heald: As at 30 June 1995, the latest date for which figures are available, 70,894 people were receiving war disablement pensions based on assessed disablement of 50 per cent. or more.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what effect the acceptance that post traumatic stress disorder is attributable to service has on an assessed war disablement pension which was based upon physical injury. [37086]

Mr. Heald: Except for certain specified injuries, the assessment of disablement for war pension purposes is a matter of medical judgment. Disablement is assessed on a percentage basis by comparing the condition of the disabled person with that of a healthy person of the same age and sex. Where there is more than one injury or disease accepted as due to service, the certified assessment takes into account the overall degree of disablement from all the accepted causes. When a new condition is accepted as attributable to service, a new assessment is made of the overall degree of disablement from all the accepted conditions. The maximum possible assessment is 100 per cent.

Social Fund

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if financial assistance will be made available to claimants of income support who need to produce medical reports for third parties or other purposes such as insurance claims but are unable to pay the hospital consultant's fee because such work is classed as category 2 work. [37157]

Mr. Roger Evans: We have no plans to do so. In this type of case, the practitioner concerned has discretion to decide whether to make a charge and how payment should be made. Furthermore, where a person is granted legal aid to pursue a claim for personal injury, the legal aid fund will meet all reasonable costs of successfully proving the case. This will include the cost of obtaining a medical report. It is also open to a person receiving income support to apply to the social fund for an award to meet an occasional expense which is difficult to budget for. Decisions on social fund applications are made by social fund officers who are required to exercise discretion when making decisions and to operate within a fixed budget.

Lost Giro Cheques

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many Giro benefit cheques are lost each week. [37171]

Mr. Heald: The information requested is available only on an annual basis. In the year 1994–95 the following losses were recorded:

	Number of losses
Department of Social Security issued girocheques reported lost	125,973
Department of Employment issued girocheques reported lost	313,285

These figures represent the number of loss reports forwarded to Girobank and not subsequently cancelled.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to introduce a limit to the number of properties generating an income which a tenant can own before being able to receive housing benefit. [37091]

Mr. Roger Evans: We have no such plans. The capital and earnings regulations in the housing benefit scheme ensure that, where a claimant has substantial capital assets or a significant income from one or more tenanted properties, entitlements to benefit will be reduced or extinguished accordingly.

Residential Care and Nursing Homes

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average contribution to private residential and nursing homes costs through state benefits and pensions. [37246]

Mr. Burt: The information requested for Great Britain and for Wales is in the tables:

	Number of cases	Average income support £	Average amount of other benefits[1]
Great Britain
Preserved rights:
Residential care	117,000	155.53	69.53
Nursing homes	85,000	222.49	74.43
Residential allowance	81,000	57.12	53.58
Total	284,000	147.33	66.42
Wales
Preserved rights:
Residential care	7,000	149.77	73.02
Nursing homes	7,000	216.22	76.14
Residential allowance	5,000	55.84	53.52
Total	18,000	148.39	68.89

Notes:

[1] Includes social security benefits and pensions taken into account in the assessment of income support.

1. Figures are rounded to the nearest thousand. Due to rounding some of the totals may not tally.

2. Personal allowance of £13.10 (Nov 1994) is included in the average amount of income support.

3. Preserved rights cases receive the special higher limits of income support. Cases under the community care scheme receive normal income support which includes residential allowance and the balance of their fees are met by the local authority.

4. Information shown is for independent sector homes which includes private and voluntary homes.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when a report will be laid concerning the changes in social security regulations which he proposes to make affecting asylum seekers. [37752]

Mr. Roger Evans: The report of the Social Security Advisory Committee on these proposals and the Department's response will be presented to Parliament at the same time as the amendment regulations are laid.

Widow's Benefit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has to uprate the widow's payment. [38162]

Mr. Heald: The next uprating of benefits is due to take effect in April 1996. The proposals will be announced at the appropriate time.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the Child Support Agency's departures system for assessing the needs of absent parents with distant children will come into force. [37678]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: We anticipate that the departure system will come into force towards the end of 1996. The exact date will be decided in the light of the pilot exercise which, once parliamentary approval is secured, should run from April until July 1996.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 19 April, Official Report, column 181, on the benefit savings achieved by the liable relatives unit in 1991–92, whether the figure provided includes an allowance for parents with care who ceased to claim income support within four weeks of being contacted by his Department or for parents with care who ceased to claim income support after maintenance had been arranged; and what would the like-for-like benefit saving figure be for the Child Support Agency in 1994–95. [37614]

Mr. Mitchell: The benefits savings figure for 1991–92 included amounts for cases where claims ceased within four weeks of the Department taking action to arrange, increase or enforce payment of maintenance. It included spousal maintenance recovery and related only to income support cases.

A direct comparison with 1991-92 is not possible because the agency makes benefit savings across all the income-related benefits and does not arrange spousal maintenance.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the trend in the size of average maintenance awards paid by absent parents as a percentage of their total net income in the 10 year period before the creation of the Child Support Agency. [37585]

Mr. Mitchell: The information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

State Pensions

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the numbers of claimants moving from incapacity benefit on to retirement pension who lose benefit for (i) one day, (ii) two days, (iii) three days, (iv) four days and (v) six days as result of their birthday falling before the Monday payday for retirement pension. [38513]

Mr. Heald: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many people have been found capable of work under the all-work test of incapacity in each of the quarters ended June and September; and how many of these were (i) previously receiving invalidity benefit and (ii) new claimants of incapacity benefit; [38503]

(2) how many people who have failed to return the IB50 within the time allowed and without good cause were (a) previously receiving invalidity benefit and (b) new claimants of incapacity benefit; [38504]

(3) how many examinations have been scheduled where the claimant has failed to attend; in how many of these the claimant had good cause for non-attendance; and how many of the non-attenders were (a) previously receiving invalidity benefit and (b) new claimants of incapacity benefit; [38505]

(4) how many of the IB50 all-work test questionnaires have been issued by his Department in each of the quarters ended June and September; how many of these have been returned within the time allowed; and how many of these have not been returned where there was no good cause for the delay; [38506]

(5) how many medical examinations for the all-work test of incapacity have taken place in each of the quarters ended June and September; and how many in each quarter were (a) previously receiving invalidity benefit and (b) new claimants of incapacity benefit. [38507]

Mr. Burt: The information is not available in the form requested. The information available is in the table.

The data reflects activity during a time when the take-on of cases has been carefully controlled to match capacity as experience of the new procedures grows. It is not representative and it is too early to draw firm conclusions about the effectiveness of the new procedures.

	Quarter to end of June	Quarter to end of September
All work test questionnaires issued	314,555	258,725
Questionnaires returned[1]	213,800	195,310
Examinations[2]	8,212	88,485
Failed to return questionnaire (IB50) without good cause	733	1,927
Found capable of work following all work test	1,152	17,743

[1] Customers have six weeks in which to return the questionnaire. Figures for questionnaires returned includes some questionnaires which may have been returned outside the time limits but no decision has been taken on whether there has been good cause for delay.

[2] A significant proportion of customers have failed to attend for medical examination. As most of these cases have yet to be adjudicated upon it is not possible to say how many have good cause for not attending.

1. Figures include only incapacity benefit claimants and are subject to change.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people who have been found capable of work have lodged an appeal against this decision in each of the quarters ended June and September; how many of these were (a) previously receiving invalidity benefit, and (b) new claimants of incapacity benefit; and how many appeals are outstanding. [38510]

Mr. Burt: The information is not available in the format requested. Information on how many of these appeals were made by people previously receiving invalidity benefit or how many were made by new claimants of incapacity benefit is not available.

The figures that are available are in the table.

	Quarter ending June 1995	Quarter ending September 1995
Lodged	170	7,095
Outstanding	n/a	6,520

Retirement Pension

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the cost of changing retirement pension paydays to the day that the claimant reaches pensionable age. [38512]

Mr. Heald: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill (Mrs. Fyfe) on 1 May 1995, Official Report, column 109.

Habitual Residence Test

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the costs to the Benefits Agency of the administration of the habitual residence test in relation to income support between 1 August 1994 and 31 July. [37734]

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Keith Bradley, dated 20 October 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what were the costs to the Benefits Agency of the administration of the habitual residence test in relation to Income Support between 1 August 1994 and 31 July 1995.

The current assessment of the cost to the Agency for the period in question is: £3,428,940.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants have been refused income support under the habitual residence test in each Benefits Agency district office in England, Wales and Scotland; and if he will update the information in his answer of 28 February, Official Report, column 547–48. [37694]

Mr. Evans: The administration of income support is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Keith Bradley, dated 20 October 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question which asked how many claimants have been refused Income Support under the habitual residence test in each Benefits Agency district office in England, Wales and Scotland, and for an update on information supplied in his answer of 28 February, Official Report, column 547–48.

Information about the number of people refused Income Support after failing the HRT has been collated for the period 1 August 1994—31 August 1995 and is shown in the attached table. A copy of this table has been placed in the library, it shows the 20 Area Directorates that make up Great Britain and lists the Districts that make up each are.

This information is now placed in the House of Commons Library on a monthly basis.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what guidance has been given to his Department's staff with reference to informing claimants of their rights to interim payments pending appeal while refused benefits under the habitual residence rules; [37141]

(2) what information has been given to (a) his Department's staff, (b) claimants and (c) the general public about the right to interim payment pending appeals of people refused benefit under the habitual residence rules. [37142]

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mrs. Bridget Prentice, dated 20 October 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions about guidance provided to the Department's staff and information available to the public on the subject of interim payments.

Interim payments can be made where there is a reasonable expectation that benefit will be awarded at a future date. Whilst it is possible to make an interim payment where a person has appealed against a decision not to award benefit, the fact that a person has lodged an appeal is not in itself a reason for making a payment. The Secretary of State will, therefore, need to be satisfied that the customer may become entitled to benefit following the appeal.

Staff in Benefit Agency offices are aware of the need to consider interim payments and guidance is provided in the Income Support Payments Guide, paragraphs 6000–6499. A copy of the Guide is in the Library. Information on interim payments is included in the leaflet IS20 "A Guide to Income Support" which is available to the general public from many outlets such as Benefit Agency offices, Citizen Advice Bureaux, doctors surgeries, public libraries and Post Offices. I enclose a copy of this leaflet for your information.

Employment Service

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many copies of the 1994–95 Employment Service annual report and accounts were published; how they were distributed; and what was the cost of printing and distribution. [38496]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M.E.G. Fogden to Mr. David Hinchliffe dated 23 October 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the printing and distribution costs of the 1994–1995 Employment Service (ES) Annual Report and Accounts.

In 1994–1995, HMSO printed off 5,500 copies of the Annual Report and Accounts. The ES had 5,000 of these copies at a cost of £16,890 and then arranged distribution of the Report by post from two central sites. The total cost of distribution was £1,390.15.

HMSO also distribute the Report to the Vote Office, the Printed Paper Office of the House of Lords and to HMSO bookshops, for sale to the public, at no cost to the ES.

I hope this is helpful.

Training

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what targets are set for training and employment for young unemployed. [38497]

Mr. Paice: The Government do not set numerical targets for the unemployed but offer a wide range of assistance to those in this position. The youth training guarantee exists to ensure that all 16 to 17-year-olds who are not in full-time education or a job and who are seeking training are offered a suitable YT place. Help is also available through the careers service and jobcentres. In addition, the Government have endorsed the national education and training targets, whose aim is to raise skill and education levels across all age groups in the United Kingdom.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many of the 1.7 million persons placed into work, identified within the 1994–95 Employment Service annual report and accounts were (a) full-time and permanent, (b) part-time and permanent, (c) full-time temporary or (d) part-time temporary. [38498]

Mr. Forth. Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 23 October 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the number of unemployed people who were placed into work in 1994/95.

I am pleased to tell you that the Employment Service exceeded its target of 1.7 million and actually placed 1,876,856 unemployed people into work in 1994/95. This is made up of the following:-

(a) Full-time and permanent jobs - 900,933

(b) Part-time and permanent jobs - 435,069

(c) Full-time temporary jobs - 382,849

(d) Part-time temporary jobs - 110,223

The above figure is 47,782 less than the overall total. This is because a small number of placings are not captured on our computerised recording system in a way which allows a distinction to be made in the form you have requested.

I hope this is helpful.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people who have been found capable of work under the all-work test of incapacity have subsequently signed on as unemployed; and how many of these were (i) previously receiving invalidity benefit and (ii) new claimants of incapacity benefit. [38511]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Keith Bradley, dated 23 October 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your question about the number of people found capable of work under the All Work Test of Incapacity Benefit (IB), who have subsequently signed on as unemployed; and how many of these were previously receiving invalidity benefit and how many were new claimants of IB. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Employment Service.

In the period April to September 1995, 8,974 people disallowed IB following the All Work Test have made a claim to unemployment benefit (UB). No figures are available on how many of these were previously receiving invalidity benefit and how many were new claimants of IB.

I hope this is helpful.

Special Needs Pupils

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much is currently spent from public funds on school transport for special educational needs pupils. [38042]

Mr. Robin Squire: LEA expenditure in England on home-to-school transport for pupils in special schools was £120 million in 1993–94, the latest year for which figures are available. The figures does not include expenditure on pupils with special educational needs in primary and secondary schools.

Nursery Voucher Scheme

Ms Hodge: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what are the implications of the introduction of the proposed nursery voucher scheme for the local management of schools formula. [38159]

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department is considering the implications of the nursery voucher scheme for LMS scheme. However, since LMS schemes vary, the implications will be different for each scheme.

Ms Hodge: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment which local education authorities will receive negative standard spending assessment for pre-school education services as a consequence of the clawback of funds to finance the proposed nursery voucher scheme. [38158]

Mr. Squire: Based on current available data, we estimate that no local education authority will have a negative standard spending assessment after a deduction has been made for the purposes of the nursery voucher scheme.

Jobcentres, Doncaster and Mexborough

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list for each jobcentre in the Doncaster and Mexborough area, how many restart interviews were carried out; and what evaluation she has made of their impact on (a) jobs, (b) other benefits, (c) signing off and (d) enrolment on her Department's employment programmes for each of the last two years, and the current year to date. [38303]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Schools (Expenditure)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the current level of spending per child in England for (a) primary and (b) secondary school children; and what were the figures in current terms in 1979. [38044]

Mr. Robin Squire: The table sets out, at 1994–95 prices, net institutional expenditure per pupil in LEA maintained (a) pre-primary/primary schools and (b) secondary schools in England for 1978–79, 1979–80 and 1993–94, the latest year for which figures are available.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Fees Office

Mr. Stern: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick upon Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will seek to define and publish targets for the work of the House of Commons Fees Office.

Mr. Beith: Performance indicators for the House of Commons Fees Office have been published in the 1993–94 and 1994–95 annual reports of the House of Commons Commission. Copies of these reports are available in the Library.

Asbestos

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee (1) if asbestos products have been used in the works which have taken place in the Palace of Westminster since 20 July; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what record is kept in the Palace of Westminster of the presence of asbestos; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ray Powell: No asbestos products have been used in the works which have taken place in the Palace of Westminster during the summer recess. Like most older buildings, the Palace of Westminster contains some asbestos, which used to be incorporated for insulation purposes. Since it became known that exposure to asbestos dust can be dangerous, the Parliamentary Works Directorate, and its predecessors, has sought to follow strictly the guidelines and procedures laid down by the Health and Safety Executive. An asbestos register is maintained recording the locations both where asbestos is known to remain—usually because it is inaccessible—and from which it has been removed. Only firms on an approved list are used for asbestos removal work and the work is carried out in the approved manner.

It is the practice to remove asbestos found when undertaking maintenance and other works services. For example, during the installation of the wiring for the parliamentary data and video network and fire alarm system this summer, a considerable amount of previously undiscovered asbestos was found and removed. The result is that all ceiling voids and under-floor spaces which have so far been cabled for the parliamentary data and video network are now free of asbestos. All the evidence available indicates that the asbestos had not been disturbed for some considerable time and should not therefore have presented any risks. However, a full record has been made of the discoveries and will be kept on the register.

Disabled People (Access)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what recent improvements have been made in access to all parts of the Palace of Westminster for disabled people; what plans there are for further improvements; and if he will make a statement. [38393]

Mr. Ray Powell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) on 8 February at column 243, which described in detail the conclusions of the review by the Accommodation and Works Committee into access for disabled people. Since then the Parliamentary Works Directorate has continued to implement many of the recommended improvements. The new entrance, which has been created at Black Rod's Garden, enables people in wheelchairs to go directly to the start of the line of route. A ramp has been constructed at the entrance to Speaker's House giving access to the North Door. The ramps in Star Chamber Court allow access for people in wheelchairs to the Strangers Gallery via lift number 1 and the new ramp at the Medals Corridor enables them to go on to the Terrace, the private dining rooms and via lift number 15, to the Principal Floor and Committee Rooms. This lift has been specially adapted to include such features as relocated control panels with embossed and illuminated buttons, handrails to the sides and rear of each car, and door edges with time delay sensors. Lifts numbers 3, Peers and Gallery, and 17, Speaker's House, have been similarly adapted as has one in the other place. Modifications to lavatories have been carried out and there are now specially adapted facilities in the following locations:

> Centre Curtain Corridor, Lower Waiting Hall, opposite Committee Room 7 on the Main Committee Corridor, and opposite Committee Room 19 on the Upper Committee Corridor.

In addition, a continuous handrail has been ordered for installation on the Strangers' Gallery staircase and a platform lift is shortly to be installed to take people in wheelchairs from Westminster Hall to the Grand Committee Room. In time, we hope to install a proper lift in that area as part of the plans for a visitor centre in 1996–97. It is planned to spend a further £250,000 on overhauling five lifts including the provision of facilities for the disabled and £55,000 on other access facilities.

Some £688,000 is to be spent this financial year in the Palace of Westminster on facilities for disabled people.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. Byers: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the latest figure for the amount of legal aid paid to Kevin and Ian Maxwell. [38196]

Mr. John M. Taylor: It would not be appropriate for me to give further details of payments in this case while the trial is in progress.

Employee Fraud

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the total number of cases of all forms of fraud committed by employees of his (a) Department, (b) agencies and (c) non-departmental bodies for each year from 1991–92 to 1994–95; and for each of those years what was the total monetary sum (1) misappropriated and (2) subsequently recovered. [39125]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information requested is set out in the table. In many cases we cannot establish whether a fraud was by an employee or an outsider, and by no means all attempted frauds succeeded. The table therefore includes known cases of actual fraud attributable to staff. Some further recoveries may have been made since the records for each year were compiled, and further recoveries may be made, especially in relation to frauds in 1994–95. I have asked the chief executives of the Public Record Office and Her Majesty's Land Registry to reply to the hon. Member directly.

[2] The Court Service became an agency on 1 April 1995.
[3] The frauds shown in the table above relate to the Legal Aid Board. There are no reported frauds from any of LCD's other NDPBs.

Letter from Edward Beardsall to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 24 October 1995:

In the absence of the Chief Executive who is presently away from the office I have been asked by the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, to reply to your recent question concerning the total number of all forms of fraud committed by employees in the Land Registry for each year from 1991–92 to 1994–95 and for each of these years the total monetary sum (1) misappropriated and (2) subsequently recovered. All cases related either to misuse of official postage, misuse of the telephone or abuse of the flexible working hours system. I can provide the following information:

	Number of cases	Total sum Misappropriated £	Recovered £
1991–92	7	380.66	380.66
1992–93	4	(Minor sums of less than £10)
1993–94	4	760	760
1994–95	1	58	58

I do hope that this answers the points raised with the Parliamentary Secretary but please contact me if I can be of any further assistance.

Letter from Sarah Tyacke to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 24 October 1995:

I have been asked by the Lord Chancellor's Parliamentary Secretary to reply to your question about employee fraud.

There were no cases of fraud committed by employees of the Public Record Office in the years that you list.

Personal Pensions

Mr. Denham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he expects to publish the report of the Securities and Investments Board/Department of Social Security study of the sale of personal pensions to low-income earners; and what are the terms of reference of the study. [38259]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 23 October 1995]: I have been asked to reply.

The Securities and Investments Board will be responsible for publishing a report into potential mis-selling of personal pensions to people who were previously in the state earnings-related pensions scheme. I understand that SIB hopes to report on this issue by the end of the year.

Short-time Working

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate his Department has made of the number of companies on short-time working; and how many employees are affected by such short-time working. [37514]

Mr. Kynoch: Available information is restricted to operatives—manual workers—in the manufacturing sector. In the week ending 9 June 1995, the latest date for which figures are available for Scotland, an estimated 1,300 operatives in manufacturing industries were affected by short-time working. Of these, 900 were stood off the whole week. The source of these figures is the Central Statistical Office.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will increase hill livestock compensatory allowances for 1996. [37918]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Decisions on the rates of hill livestock compensatory allowances are taken by Ministers in the light of the annual autumn review of economic conditions in the hills and uplands, which is currently under way.

Health Service Revenue

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans the Government have to revise the Scottish hospital resource allocation formula—SHARE—in a manner similar to the revision of the NHS formula for allocating hospital and community health service revenue resources in England. [38001]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There are no immediate plans to revise the Scottish hospital resource allocation formula. We do, however, continually consider whether there is scope to improve the formula.

Royal Botanic Garden, Edinburgh

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about a policy and financial management review of the royal botanic garden, Edinburgh. [39728]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: As part of the Government's rolling programme of five-yearly policy and financial management reviews of non-departmental public bodies, my Department will conduct a thorough review of the work of the royal botanic garden, Edinburgh between now and March 1996. The first stage of the review will take the form of a "prior options" study. This will include an examination of what scope there is, if any, for discontinuing, or undertaking in some other way some or all of the functions which the garden carries out. This will include looking at how it takes forward its statutory obligations, including its objectives, as set out in the National Heritage (Scotland) Act 1985.

The second stage of the review will concentrate on the garden's financial management systems and controls.

I would welcome comments from interested parties. They should be sent by 30 November 1995 to:

Mr. K. K. Steven
The Scottish Office Agriculture Environment and Fisheries Department
Pentland House
47 Robb's Loan
Edinburgh
EH14 1TY.

Vandalism (Schools)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what help is available to schools in Scotland suffering especially severe problems of vandalism. [37937]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson [holding answer 20 October 1995]: The response to acts of vandalism will depend on the nature of each incident and the circumstances in which they have been perpetrated. It is for the education authority concerned to consider appropriate measures having regard to the local circumstances and physical characteristics of the schools affected.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Kenya

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what date programme aid was suspended to Kenya. [37675]

Mr. Hanley: Programme aid to Kenya has not been suspended. But disbursements continue to depend, as they always have, on Kenya continuing to implement economic programmes agreed with International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, and on the overall political environment in Kenya.

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy towards Kenya at the World Bank, and if he will make a statement. [37674]

Mr. Hanley: Discussions between the World Bank and the Kenyan Government continue. We hope that there will be sufficient progress in Kenya to allow early agreement on a structural adjustment credit.

Bilateral Aid Programme

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the bilateral aid programme in promoting political and economic stability in the least developed countries. [38145]

Mr. Hanley: We believe that British bilateral aid, with its emphasis on good government and sound economic policies, has played a vital role in promoting political and economic stability in many of the least developed countries, notably in the Commonwealth. The effectiveness of British aid in meeting this objective is kept under constant review.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the foreign policy implications of reduction in Britain's bilateral aid programme; and if he will make a statement. [38147]

Mr. Hanley: The bilateral aid programme is a very significant part of the United Kingdom's relationship with the developing world. The size of the programme is kept under constant review, along with all the other factors which contribute to the relationship with developing countries, including trade and investment.

ENVIRONMENT

European Building Projects

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many British firms secured contracts on the (a) European Parliament building, Strasbourg, (b) European Parliament building, Brussels, and (c) Bundestag building, Berlin, projects; and what was the value of these projects. [37045]

Mr. Clappison: My officials are currently assembling the information requested and I will write to the hon. Gentleman shortly.

Housing Initiatives

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, what assessment he has made of the impact of his Department's policy initiatives since 1979 on the housing associations. [37677]

Mr. Clappison: Between 1979–80 and 1994–95, capital and revenue grants totalling more than £16 billion have been made to registered housing associations, which are now the main providers of new social housing. By April 1995 there were around 860,000 housing associations properties, compared with around 350,000 in 1979.

In 1988, we introduced mixed funding for housing association developments which has enabled associations to raise over £5 billion in private finance. This has generated almost 100,000 more housing association homes than would have been possible without the private finance input.

Our shared home ownership and incentive initiatives have helped people who wanted to buy their own home but could not otherwise afford to do so. These initiatives represent good value for money, particularly where they release rented lettings for others in housing need. From 1990–91 to the end of 1994–195 more than 60,000 households have benefited from these initiatives, and more than 40,000 existing social lettings have been released for others in housing need.

We have also encouraged housing associations to take on former local authority housing. Since 1988, 43 new housing associations have been created for this purpose. More than 180,000 dwellings have been transferred from local authority ownership, generating some £2.8 billion of linked private sector investment for the purchase, repair and long-term maintenance of the properties.

Pay Bargaining

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide in respect of his plan for pay delegation submitted to the Treasury (a) a description of the staff in each bargaining unit covered by the plan, distinguishing staff in headquarters functions, agencies and agency candidates, and in other identifiable business units and (b) proposals for trade union recognition in each bargaining unit and the negotiating machinery to be put in place in each bargaining unit. [38282]

Sir Paul Beresford: The pay bargaining units and the union recognition and bargaining arrangements proposed for 1996 are:

DoE (central)

Staff in headquarters, staff in the Government offices for the regions and rent assessment panels; current patterns of union recognition will remain and procedural agreements for future consultation and negotiation are under discussion.

Planning Inspectorate

Staff in the agency; union recognition will be on current lines and procedures for negotiations are in place.

Building Research Establishment

BRE already has responsibility for negotiating the pay of its industrial staff and will take this on for all staff in the agency; union recognition will be on current lines and procedures for negotiations are under discussion for non-industrial staff.

PSA Services

Staff in the centre will become part of the DoE (central) bargaining unit. Those on secondment to the successor businesses to PSA will have their pay determined by analogue to arrangements in DoE (central).

Property Holdings (to become Property Adviser to the Civil Estate)

Staff in the PACE agency; union recognition will be on current lines and procedures for negotiations are under discussion.

Security and Facilities Executive

SAFE already has responsibility for negotiating the pay of its industrial staff and will take this on for the other staff in the agency; union recognition will be on current lines and procedures for negotiations are under discussion.

The Buying Agency

Staff in the TBA agency; union recognition will be on current lines and procedures for negotiations are under discussion.

It is planned that the final three bodies listed will have become the responsibility of the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster by 1 April 1996.

In addition, the Health and Safety Executive, the Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre agency and the Ordnance Survey already have responsibility for their own pay arrangements and have agreed arrangements for negotiating with those unions recognised.

Asbestos

Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what monitoring is taking place following the Health and Safety Executive's increased emphasis on the risks of casual exposure to asbestos as outlined in the HSE statement on asbestos 1994. [38052]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Health and Safety Executive is currently commissioning an independent evaluation of its asbestos awareness campaign. The results should be available towards the middle of 1996.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the number of cases identified where respiratory protective equipment has been used but where the respirable asbestos dust levels exceed the respiratory protective equipment manufacturers claimed level of protection since July 1992; [38055]

(2) what sanctions are applied to contractors who are caught using respirable protective equipment but where the level of respirable asbestos dust exceeds the respiratory protective equipment manufacturers claimed level of protection; [38056]

(3) how many contractors have been sanctioned for using respiratory protective equipment where the level of respirable asbestos dust exceeds the respiratory protective equipment manufacturers claimed level of protection since July 1992; [38057]

(4) how many contractors have been fined for using respiratory protective equipment where the level of respirable asbestos dust exceeds the respiratory protective equipment manufacturers claimed level of protection since July 1992; and what is the average level of the fine. [38058]

Sir Paul Beresford: If standards of health and safety are not adequate, health and safety inspectors have the statutory power to serve improvement or prohibition notices, or prosecute duty holders. Information is not centrally available on the number of cases or contractors sanctioned involving the use of respiratory protective equipment where the level of respirable asbestos dust exceeds the manufacturers claimed level of protection. This information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many instances have been identified in each of the last three years for which figures are available of asbestos removal work being carried out by licensed contractors using self-employed operatives who have been required to provide their own respiratory protective equipment; [38059]

(2) what sanctions have been applied to licensed asbestos removal contractors who have been found using self-employed operatives who have been required to provide their own respiratory protective equipment. [38060]

Sir Paul Beresford: Licensed asbestos removal contractors cannot require self-employed operatives to provide their own respiratory protective equipment. Where self-employed operatives voluntarily provide their own respiratory protective equipment the licensed contractor, as duty holder under the Control of Asbestos at Work Regulations 1987, remains responsible for ensuring that the equipment is suitable for the work to be undertaken, taking into account the approved code of practice.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what work is being carried out to monitor the Health and Safety Executive's July 1992 initiative to reduce exposure to asbestos dust during the removal of asbestos insulation; and if he will make a statement. [38065]

(2) what evidence he has of reduced exposure to asbestos dust during the removal of asbestos insulation since July 1992; [38066]

(3) what progress has been made on reduced exposure to asbestos by measures other than the use of respiratory protective equipment since July 1992. [38068]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Health and Safety Executive does not hold quantitative data on the progress made in reducing exposure to asbestos by measures other than the use of respiratory protective equipment since July 1992.

Licensed asbestos removal contractors are required to provide the appropriate enforcing authority with written notification of the proposed work entailing the removal of asbestos insulation or asbestos coating. On the notification form, the licensed asbestos removal contractor is required to specify the dust suppression or dust control technique to be used. Where dust suppression methods—controlled wet stripping—are not to be used, that decision has to be justified to the satisfaction of the enforcing authority which can monitor the action being taken by the contractor in accordance with the July 1992 initiative.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many cases have been identified, in each of the last three years for which figures are available, of operatives directly employed by licensed asbestos removal contractors who are not under medical surveillance; [38050]

(2) how many cases have been identified, in each of the last three years for which figures are available, of operatives directly employed by licensed asbestos removal contractors who have not been medically examined within the preceding two years. [38051]

Sir Paul Beresford: This information requested is not centrally available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many contractors have been (a) sanctioned and (b) fined for asking little attempt to use effective dust suppression or dust control measures and relying on respirators to protect against high levels of respirable dust, since July 1992; and what is the average level of fine. [38054]

Sir Paul Beresford: This information requested is not centrally available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money has been spent on publicity to increase awareness of the risks of casual exposure to asbestos since the publication of the Health and Safety Executive statement on asbestos 1994. [38070]

Sir Paul Beresford: In February this year HSE launched a major campaign to raise awareness of the risks of casual exposure to asbestos and of the appropriate precautions which should be taken when working with it. A total of £227,700 was spent on national newspaper and trade journal advertising alone. A low-cost telephone order line and the production and distribution of more than 250,000 free leaflets and pocket cards cost a further £244,000.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what approaches have been made to employers' associations and trade unions to participate in a joint publicity drive to highlight the risks of casual exposure to asbestos as outlined in the HSE statement on asbestos 1994. [38053]

Sir Paul Beresford: Trade unions and employers' associations have been involved in HSE's asbestos awareness campaign, through the usual channel of the Health and Safety Commission's advisory committees, and in particular the Health and Safety Commission's construction industry advisory committee. In addition, HSE recently sought the help of all local authorities to ensure that workers and contractors involved in building maintenance are aware of the risks of exposure to asbestos dust.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what sanctions are applied to contractors who make little or no attempt to use effective dust suppression or dust control measures and rely on respirators to protect against high levels of respiratory dust. [38069]

Sir Paul Beresford: If standards of health and safety are not adequate, health and safety inspectors have the statutory power to serve improvement or prohibition notices, or prosecute duty holders. The Health and Safety Executive may revoke a licence if an asbestos removal contractor is convicted of an offence of failing to discharge a duty relating to work with asbestos insulation or asbestos coating to which he is subject by any health and safety legislation.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made on reducing the risk of heat stress during the removal of insulation from hot plant and pipework, since the publication of the Health and Safety Executive's guidance note EH 57, "The problems of Asbestos Removal at High Temperatures" in December 1992. [38067]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Health and Safety Executive has not undertaken a formal assessment of the impact of the advice contained in guidance note EH 57.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many prosecutions have been taken by the Health and Safety Executive to enforce asbestos regulations since the publication of the HSE Statement on Asbestos-1994, and what was the corresponding number of prosecutions taken in the preceding period covering the same time span. [38071]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Health and Safety Executive's statement on asbestos was published in September 1994. Details of informations laid by Health and Safety Executive inspectors alleging contravention of the Control of Asbestos at Work Regulations 1987, the Asbestos (Licensing) Regulations 1983 or the Asbestos (Prohibitions) Regulations 1992 are given in the table. Statistics from April 1995 have not yet been compiled.

Period	Number of months	Number of informations
1 August 1993 to 31 August 1994	13	[1]52
1 September 1993 to 31 March 1994	7	31
1 September 1994 to 31 March 1995	7	[1]27

[1] Provisional: Statistics for April 1994 to March 1995 not yet verified.

Safety Consultants

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many safety consultants are currently in operation in the United Kingdom; [38061]

(2) what qualifications are required and what BSI standard is to be achieved before a person is recognised as a safety consultant; [38062]

(3) what type of training, and for what duration, is required before a person is recognised as a safety consultant; [38063]

(4) if safety consultants operating in British industry are required to register with the Health and Safety Executive. [38064]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Health and Safety Executive has no information on the numbers of safety consultants. Safety consultants are not required to register with HSE or to have any specific qualifications or undergo any particular type or duration of training. While there are a range of qualifications in health and safety, including National and Scottish Vocational Qualifications in Occupational Health and Safety Practice, there is no British Standard. HSE has published a free booklet, "Selecting a health and safety consultancy", which helps business to find competent consultants.

Local Government Finance, Dorset

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the total percentage increase in the various categories of standard spending assessments for Dorset compared with inflation since 1990. [38376]

Regional Planning Guidance, West Midlands

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to review the regional planning guidance for the west midlands, to reduce the level of new house building required in Worcestershire and correspondingly increase it in Birmingham. [38146]

Sir Paul Beresford: We shall keep our recently issued regional planning guidance for the west midlands under review. In particular, I have asked the local authorities to reconsider the housing figures in the light of the latest national household projections. They will advise me on this next year and we will then consider whether to revise our guidance. However, I cannot promise the hon. Member that the outcome will be a lower figure for Worcestershire and a higher figure for Birmingham.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated cost of reorganisation in each of the individual local authority areas affected. [38412]

Sir Paul Beresford: It is too early to estimate the final cost of reorganisation in each area. The reports of the Local Government Commission give estimates of costs and savings for the main options they considered and for their recommendations. The outcome will depend on how authorities implement reorganisation.

EU Fur Imports Ban

Mr. Heppel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when a technical working group of the European Union with Canada and the USA was established to develop humane trapping standards; and if he will make a statement on its activities. [38705]

(2) what steps he is taking to ensure that EC Regulation 3254/91 to Ban the Import of Fur from Certain Species will be implemented at the end of the year and that no further delays in its implementation occur; and if he will make a statement. [38706]

Mr. Clappison: I understand that the working group was established in August this year. The United Kingdom is not represented on it and we have not so far received any written report from it. We would expect any advice from the working group to be submitted to the Council of Ministers.

The Government strongly support the objectives of EC Regulation 3254/91 which was adopted by the Council of Ministers in November 1991. The ban will come into force on 1 January 1996. We are currently awaiting formal receipt of the Commission's detailed proposals for implementing the ban on the import of certain furs from countries which still use leghold traps. The proposals are expected to include a list of countries which have already banned the use of leghold traps and can therefore continue to trade in fur products from the 13 species listed in the regulation.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when he will publish revised financial guidelines for the management agreements with owners and occupiers of sites of special scientific interest; [39242]

(2) when he will publish recommendations, advice and information to aid owners and occupiers of sites of special scientific interest in accordance with section 33 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. [39243]

Mr. Clappison: Work on revising these documents is continuing. They will be the subject of consultation with interested parties before being finalised and issued.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review permitted development rights for temporary activities within or adjacent to sites of special scientific interest. [38525]

Mr. Clappison: Following a review in 1992, permitted development rights for certain recreational uses of sites of special scientific interest were withdrawn. The Conservation (Natural Habitats &c.) Regulations 1994 remove permitted development rights which would adversely affect the integrity of a Natura 2000 site which is also a site of special scientific interest. We have no plans for a further review.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes to take to prevent Mickletownings site of special scientific interest from receiving sewage-created nutrient input. [38529]

Mr. Clappison: In 1991, following a series of accidental sewage overflows during storm conditions in the 1980s, English Nature initiated a 10-year monitoring programme agreed with British Coal Opencast and Leeds city council to monitor the physical and chemical nature of the pond waters within the site of special scientific interest. Evidence points to an improvement in water quality and no damage to the special interest.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has made and received on the impact of sea level rises on sites of special scientific interest in the Humber estuary. [38530]

Mr. Clappison: English Nature is working with the National Rivers Authority to address the concerns expressed and develop a comprehensive framework for the future management of the flood defences of the Humber.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he will take to protect Skipwith Common site of special scientific interest from dredging and drainage operations. [38531]

Mr. Clappison: Routine maintenance, including dredging and drainage, does not adversely affect the scientific interest of this site.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he will take to protect Bingley South Bog site of special scientific interest from damage arising from road construction. [38532]

Mr. Clappison: Appropriate mitigation measures will be taken to protect the scientific interest of this site.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he will take to protect (a) Broadhead Clough, (b) Dark Peak and (c) Haworth Moor site of special scientific interest from acid deposition. [38533]

Mr. Clappison: The southern Pennines, in which the three sites lie, has had a long legacy of air pollution from the effects of the industrial revolution in neighbouring Lancashire and Manchester. The special interest of the sites of special scientific interest is presently maintained but long-term sustainability can only be ensured through the UK's commitment to reducing sulphur emissions. UK emissions of sulphur dioxide have fallen by 45 per cent. since 1970. The Government are committed to making further cuts under the EC Large Combustion Plants Directive, which will substantially reduce the proportion of the UK surface area suffering from acid damage by the end of the century.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he will take to protect the Leeds-Liverpool canal site of special scientific interest from development for a boat and caravan storage facility. [38534]

Mr. Clappison: Appropriate mitigation measures have been taken to protect the nature conservation interests of this site.

European Biodiversity Strategy

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he has made to the pan-European biological diversity strategy in relation to no climbing areas or seasons; and what discussions he has held with the British Mountaineering Council on this matter. [38029]

Mr. Clappison: The strategy is on the agenda of the European Environment Ministers conference in Sofia, which the Secretary of State is currently attending.

The strategy is a useful framework for international action but further work is needed on it, particularly consultation with relevant interests, including the British Mountaineering Council.

Mines Rescue Service

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the future size, location and funding of the mines rescue service. [38262]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Government have been concerned to ensure that a mines rescue service continues to be available to those mines who may have need of it. To this end I will be making regulations in the near future requiring the owners of certain types of mines to participate in a mines rescue scheme approved by the Secretary of State and which would ensure that appropriate and effective rescue services continue to be available. Once these regulations are made I will consult the Health and Safety Commission and others whom I consider to be appropriate, on proposals for approval of such a mines rescue scheme. A scheme has already been submitted for approval which proposes to maintain the current level of provision of six central rescue stations in strategic locations and a minimum of 80 full-time employees. The mines rescue service is currently operated by British Coal on a contract basis, and funded by the mine owners. Within the framework of the relevant statutory requirements, including the regulations and the scheme when these come into force, the future organisation of mines rescue service will be a matter for the mine owners.

Local Government Residuary Body

Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will issue the management statement to the chairman of the Local Government Residuary Body (England). [39322]

Sir Paul Beresford: I have today issued the management statement to the chairman of the Local Government Residuary Body (England). I am placing a copy in the Library.

Employee Fraud

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total number of cases of all forms of fraud committed by employees of his (a) Department, (b) agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies for each year from 1991–92 to 1994–95; and for each of these years, what was the total monetary sum (1) misappropriated in such frauds and (2) subsequently recovered. [39130]

Sir Paul Beresford: The information requested is in the table:

Environment Council

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Environment Council on 6 October. [39829]

Mr. Gummer: I represented the United Kingdom at the Environment Council in Luxembourg held on 6 October.

Common positions were reached on a decision on the exchange of information on air quality and on a directive temporarily deferring the emission standards for certain diesel engines, in line with technical progress. On the latter I secured the deletion of text relating to fiscal incentives. Political agreement was secured on the second phase of the financial instrument for the environment—LIFE—which agreed a budget of 450 mecu over four years, 1996–1999, to be reviewed in 1997. Political agreement was also achieved on an amendment to the Waste Shipments Regulation. In both cases a common position is expected in December.

There was a policy debate about the proposed amendment to Directive 85/337 on Environmental Impact Assessment. I secured some helpful amendments to the proposals and further detailed discussions will now continue in the experts working group. The Presidency is aiming for a common position in December.

Council conclusions were agreed on a number of international conferences taking place in the coming months. These include the third pan-European conference, "Environment for Europe", the seventh conference of the parties to the Montreal protocol, the second conference of the parties to the biodiversity convention and the Euro-Mediterranean conference. Agreement was also reached on Council conclusions deferring the review of the functions of the European Environment Agency for two years.

Direct Labour Organisations

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further action he proposes to take against those local authorities whose direct labour and direct service organisations failed to meet their statutory financial objectives in 1993–94. [39828]

Sir Paul Beresford: On 25 July this year, 18 statutory notices were served on 18 local authorities concerning the failure of their direct labour and service organisations to meet the required financial objectives in 1993–94. A further five notices were served on the London borough of Islington for failure to submit unqualified accounts.

My right hon. Friend has now considered the responses to those notices and has today given six directions to Corby borough council on vehicle maintenance, to Devon county council on grounds maintenance, to the London borough of Islington on building maintenance, grounds maintenance, and highways and sewers work, and to Ryedale district council on sports and leisure management.

The directions take three forms:

preventing the authority from carrying out the work if it fails to meet the financial objective in 1995–96:—Corby, vehicle maintenance.

requiring the authority to retender the work if they fail to meet the financial objective in 1995–96, and to seek the Secretary of State's prior consent where the work has to be retendered and where the authority subsequently wishes to award the work in-house:—Devon, grounds maintenance, and Ryedale, sports and leisure management.

preventing the authority from carrying out the work if they fail to submit unqualified accounts for work carried out in 1995–96:—the London borough of Islington, building maintenance, grounds maintenance and highways and sewers.

The Secretary of State has also decided to take no further statutory action in respect of financial failure in 1993–94 by:

Bedford, refuse collection; Colchester, sport and leisure management; Coventry, grounds maintenance; Dacorum, vehicle maintenance; Gedling, grounds maintenance; High Peak, grounds maintenance; Hove, sports and leisure management; the London borough of Islington, refuse collection and sports and leisure management; Mansfield, refuse collection; New Forest, building cleaning; North Cornwall, building maintenance; Sedgefield, refuse collection; South Herefordshire, building maintenance; Stoke-on-Trent, other catering; Torbay, grounds maintenance; and Wakefield, schools and welfare catering.

A decision on Lincolnshire county council's failure to meet the financial objective for highways and sewers work has been deferred and will be announced at a later date.

To date, 120 statutory notices have been served by the Department on local authorities for losses incurred by their DLOs/DSOs in 1993–94. A further five statutory notices have been served on the London borough of Islington following its failure to submit unqualified accounts. Today's decisions follow those announced on 6 June, 11 July and 22 August 1995.

Dounreay Reactor Site

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what have been the results to date of the survey carried out of the whole of the Dounreay reactor site in respect of radioactive hotspots, and if he will make a statement. [38302]

Mr. Page: I have been asked to reply.

The United Kingdom Atomic Energy Agency has been carrying out an extensive survey of contamination on the Dounreay site and any areas of significant contamination on the Dounreay site have either been removed or have been barriered off to restrict access. A strategy for dealing with those areas where contamination has not yet been removed is being prepared for submission to the Health and Safety's Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate, the Scottish Office and Her Majesty's industrial pollution inspectorate . The survey is now well advanced and is expected to be completed by the end of this year.

Details of the UKAEA's findings have been reported to the relevant regulatory and advisory bodies and have been the subject of UKAEA "facts faxes" which have been issued to the site work-force, the hon-Member for Caithness and Sutherland (Mr. Maclennan) members of the Dounreay local liaison committee, the Highland regional council and the local media. I am now arranging for copies to be placed in the Library of the House.

TREASURY

Personal Pensions

Mr. Denham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the progress made on the implementation of the SIB/PIA review of pension transfer opt-outs and non-joiners. [38263]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The Government fully support the efforts of the financial services regulators to arrange for reviews to identify cases in which investors face financial loss as a result of bad investment advice not given in compliance with regulatory rules, and to ensure that redress is made where it is due. Progress in implementing the review has been delayed by a judicial review of the Securities and Investment Board's guidance earlier this year. However the Personal Investment Authority has now issued guidance, and many firms now have reviews in hand.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the proportion of purchasers of personal pensions contracted according to the SIB/PIA guidelines by (a) tied agents, (b) independent financial advisers and (c) all vendors of personal pensions. [38264]

Mrs. Knight: I regret that this information is not currently available. However, the Securities and Investments Board plans to collect data to monitor the progress of the review and I understand that it should be available early next year.

Fish Imports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what investigations have been made by (a) his Department and (b) the EEC Commission of the origin of fish products and prawns or shrimps imported into this country on EURI certificates from (i) Iceland, (ii) Norway and (iii) the Faroe Islands; how many staff were involved and for what period of time; and what information about consignments was made available to them. [37954]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No investigations have been made in Iceland, Norway or the Faroe Islands by Customs an Excise. The EC Commission has sent mission teams to all three countries. No information is available as to the precise duration of the inquiries or the number of staff involved.

A team visited Iceland on several occasions from July 1992 to early 1993, in connection with exports of prawns. They were able to examine processing plant records, which identified the source of raw materials through to consignments of finished product. In 1995 another team visited Iceland to look at cod. The result of their inquiries are still being evaluated.

A team visited Norway to make inquiries about cod. These inquiries were subsequently pursued by the Norwegian customs authorities who reported their conclusions to the EC Commission in January and March 1995.

The mission to the Faroe Islands took place in 1991. Processing plant and export consignment records were examined.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many retrospective claims against how many firms, for what total sums of money and for what period are being made by his Department against importers of prawns or shrimps in respect of (a) Iceland, (b) Norway and (c) the Faroe Islands and at whose behest. [37946]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The information requested is as follows:

	Number of claims	Number of firms	Total (£)	Period
a–i) Iceland (mission)	15	12	435,000	October 1990 to August 1992
a–ii) Iceland (disclosure)	11	9	23,000	1993
c) Faroes (mission)	13	13	1,900,000	May 1989 to October 1991

a–i) and c) were the result of EC missions, while a–ii) was a disclosure by Icelandic customs in respect of one of their exporters.

No claims have been made against importers in respect of Norway.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has made to the EEC Commission for compensation for British importers of prawns or shrimps innocently imported from (a) Iceland, (b) Norway and (c) the Faroe Islands on EUR1 certificates now considered by the European Commission to be invalid, what scale of compensation has been proposed; when it will be payable; and what response has been forthcoming from the Commission. [37955]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No such proposals have been made because duty recovery has been suspended pending completion of the legal process. Therefore, compensation is not appropriate in the circumstances. The Commission and member states are being urged to produce a lasting solution which properly balances safeguarding the Community budget and the interests of European business. Such a solution will need to address the future as well as the past.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what advice was and is now given by his Department to importers of fish products from (a) Iceland, (b) Norway and (c) the Faroe Islands coming in duty free under EUR1 certificates about their liability if the certificates issued in the country of origin prove to be invalid, about how they can safeguard themselves against such retrospective charges and about how they can test the validity of EUR1 certificates. [37948]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Advice is set out in Customs notice No. 826. This recognises the difficulties that importers may experience in trying to establish whether a certificate is valid or whether goods shown on it are eligible for preferential tariff treatment. For very many years the notice has warned of the potential further duty liability and since July 1990 has advised importers to consider the advantages of including a clause in contracts allowing them to recover any duty charge from the supplier. In addition, Customs have regularly contributed articles for trade journals and participated in trade seminars and the consequences of invalid documentation has been covered on each occasion.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether, in levying retrospective duty on prawns or shrimps imported from (a) Iceland, (b) Norway and (c) the Faroe Islands with valid EUR1 certificates, he makes any allowance for the fact that a proportion of those prawn/shrimps will in fact have been caught in that country; what proportion he estimates this to be; and whether this is estimated as being constant or can be specifically assessed for each consignment. [37952]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The mission to Iceland found that most processing plants kept sophisticated records which identified the source of raw materials through to consignments of finished product. Duty demands were issued only for consignments where there was a clear audit trail from the non-originating prawns through to deliveries to specific companies in the EC. Where part of a consignment qualified, typical because it comprised prawns of different sizes and origin, then the duty demand was restricted to the non-originating element.

No duty demands have been issued for prawns or shrimps imported from Norway.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish the evidence provided to him by the European Commission that prawns or shrimps imported from (a) Iceland, (b) Norway and (c) the Faroe Islands in fact originated elsewhere; and indicate what proportion of the imports from the Faroe Islands this applied to. [37947]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: EC mission team reports, which contain sensitive commercial information, are protected by EC agreements which restrict their issue or publication.

The proportion of imports from the Faroe Islands established as non-originating was 66 per cent. for 1989, 81 per cent. for 1990 and 53 per cent. for 1991.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, what representations he has made to his customs counterpart in (a) Iceland, (b) Norway and (c) the Faroe Islands about their acceptance of EUR1 certificates for the export of fish products to Britain which subsequently proved to have originated elsewhere than in Iceland; what compensation he has requested from them for British importers trusting these certificates; and what procedures his Department has put in place to check the validity of EUR1 certificates for Iceland. [37951]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No such representations have been made to third country customs authorities.

The UK has, however, made strong representations concerning these difficulties at recent EC meetings and gained considerable support from other member states. A number of different proposals have been put forward to alleviate the burdens on importers and these now have to be considered carefully. It will be for the European Commission to write to third country authorities if this is considered appropriate.

In accordance with normal practice, EUR1 certificates are from time to time returned to exporting countries for verification by their customs authorities.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the outcome of all court cases pursued by his Department against importers of prawns or shrimps from (a) Iceland, (b) Norway and (c) the Faroe Islands on the basis of EUR1 certificates now considered by him to be invalid; what costs have been awarded and to whom; how much retrospective duty has actually been paid; and by how many firms. [37956]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Two of the companies who received duty demands in respect of imports from the Faroe Islands submitted an application for a judicial review on the grounds that the demands were incorrect in law. The High Court referred a number of questions to the European Court of Justice and awarded costs against Customs. No reason was given for the award and Customs are still in correspondence on the matter. The judgment of the European Court of Justice is expected by early December.

There have been no other relevant court cases, although several importers have appealed to the VAT and duties tribunal. These cases are being stood over by the tribunal pending the European Court of Justice judgment. Payment of duty will not be pursued until the legal process is completed.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many claims for duty have been made in each year since 1980 for duty not paid on fish products imported from (a) Iceland, (b) Norway and (c) the Faroe Islands on EUR1 certificates which subsequently proved to be invalid. [37949]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The information requested is as follows:

	1992	1993	1994	1995
Iceland	—	12	—	9
Norway	—	—	—	2
Faroe Islands	13	—	—	—

Figures are not available for imports of fish products prior to 1992.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what burden of proof about the origin of fish products imported on EUR1 certificates falls on (a) his Department (b) the British importer, (c) the customs of the originating country and (d) the exporter issuing the EUR1 certificate where such certificates are deemed by his Department to be invalid; on what basis such retrospective claims are made by his Department; and what time limitations apply. [37953]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The responsibilities of the various parties are set out in the preferential trade agreements between the European Community and Iceland, Norway and the Faroe islands. The prime responsibility for determining whether particular goods qualify for preferential status lies with the exporter. Where it is not possible to determine the origin of goods, or where they are non-originating—that is, they do not come originally from the exporter's country—an EUR1 certificate is inappropriate.

The responsibility for accounting for any import duties due falls on the importer in the country of destination.

The customs authorities in the country of importation are responsible for collecting any duties due, including duties charged retrospectively where EUR1s are found to be invalid.

The customs authorities in the country of export are responsible for issuing EUR1s verifying any certificates returned by foreign import authorities and considering sanctions against exporters who abuse the system.

Customs and Excise have issued retrospective duty demands only where either the customs authorities for the exporter have advised that certificates were invalid or where an EC mission has provided firm evidence that goods did not meet the rules of origin.

The time limitation for retrospective duty demands is three years from importation.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what instructions he has had from the European Commission about retrospective duty on prawns or shrimps imported from (a) Iceland, (b) Norway and (c) the Faroe Islands on EUR1 certificates; how much he has been required to recover; to whom this is payable; what information he has about the levy of such duties in each fish importing member of the EU; and what representations he has made to the Commission about such changes. [37950]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No specific instructions have been received from the European Commission about retrospective duty on prawns or shrimps. However, where checks on EUR1s show that the goods were not entitled to relief, duty at the full rate becomes payable under the terms of the preferential trade agreement with the country concerned, which in the community are implemented in EC law. Customs duty is collected by member states and remitted to the Community as own resources.

In the case of retrospective duty demand on prawns from Iceland, Customs and Excise are aware that duty recovery action has also been taken by Denmark and Germany, the only other countries with a major interest.

Customs have made strong representations at recent EC meetings about the problems associated with duty recovery in respect of invalid documentation, including EUR1s, and have gained considerable support from other member states. Over the next few weeks, Customs will continue to press for urgent attention to be given to this issue with a view to reaching consensus among member states on the best solution.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total amount collected in value added tax (a) in 1979, (b) in 1985 and (c) in the latest year for which figures are available. [37910]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Net receipts of value added tax for financial years 1979–80, 1985–86 and 1994–95 are as follows:

£ million

Net receipts
1979–80	1985–86	1994–95
8,189.3	19,331.4	41,817.3

Independent Television (Taxation)

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total amount of taxation paid by the ITV companies to the Exchequer (a) in 1985, (b) 1990 and (c) in the latest year for which figures are available. [37966]

Mr. Jack: Companies licensed by the Independent Television Commission to provide Channel 3 services had an estimated corporation tax liability in 1993 of approximately £50 million. Figures for 1985 and 1990 are only available at disproportionate cost.

Kenya (IMF Facility)

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy towards the enhanced structural adjustment facility for Kenya at the International Monetary Fund; and if he will make a statement. [37673]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Discussions between the IMF and the Kenyan Government continue. We hope that there will be sufficient progress in Kenya so as to allow early agreement on an enhanced structural adjustment facility.

Tobacco Smuggling

Mr. Atkins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he proposes to take to reduce tobacco smuggling into the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [38040]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Customs and Excise will continue to take vigorous action against those who smuggle tobacco goods. Working closely with the trade and developing intelligence to identify offenders remains the best method of achieving successful detections.

Mr. Atkins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what numbers of Customs and Excise officers have been involved in pursuing tobacco smuggling into the United Kingdom in each of the last five years. [38041]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The duties of Customs and Excise officers cover a wide range of revenue and prevention functions. Officers are not normally assigned to deal with a single commodity.

The information requested is not available.

Mr. Atkins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the loss of revenue in each of the last five years caused by the smuggling into the United Kingdom of (a) hand-rolling tobacco, (b) cigarettes, (c) pipe tobacco and (d) cigars. [38082]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: It is particularly difficult to make meaningful estimates of smuggled tobacco goods. What can be relied upon however is the number of detections made by Customs and Excise. In the period from 1 January 1993 to 31 August 1995 there were 4,124 detections of smuggled tobacco goods representing a revenue value of some £7.05 million.

The information requested for the last five years is not available. However following recent discussions with the trade, Customs are actively considering methods of deriving credible estimates of smuggling of tobacco goods.

Government Debt

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of general Government gross debt for each country within the EU; and what were the figures for 1991, 1987 and 1983. [38335]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The Government do not produce estimates for general Government gross debt for countries in the EU other than the UK. The most recent figures for the UK are available in the Summer Economic Forecast. Historical data are available in the Financial Statement and Budget Report. Forecasts and historical figures for the rest of the EU can be found in the "OECD Outlook" of June 1995. All three publications are available in the House of Commons Library.

Tourism

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect of British competitiveness of the level of VAT on tourism products; and what conclusions he has reached. [38454]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: There is no compelling evidence that the fiscal and regulatory environment in the United Kingdom places tourism at a disadvantage. We have a lower standard rate than most EU member states and our zero rate is applied to a wide range of consumer expenditure.

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made in the consultations between Customs and Excise and the travel industry about the effects of the Value Added Tax (Tour Operators) (Amendment) Order 1995; and if he will make a statement. [39727]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: There have been extensive and very productive talks over the summer between Customs, the travel industry and its representatives. These talks have produced a package of options to be publicised today which should allow most tour operators to organise their business so as to minimise any potential for distortion of competition while still fully respecting the provisions of the order. Unlike earlier proposals put forward by some in the industry, this package will not increase taxation for four operators' products. The major trade associations have confirmed that the options adequately address the industry's immediate concerns. Customs' review of the tour operators' margin scheme will now proceed to its second phase which will involve an examination of longer-term issues, including possible simplification of the scheme.

Social Security (Liaison)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how often he liaises with the Secretary of State for Social Security. [38815]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Frequently.

Share Option Schemes

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment the Inland Revenue has made of the percentage of option holders who cash in their options or shares as soon as possible; and if he will publish the assumptions made and the basis of calculation. [37963]

Mr. Jack: Two independent surveys indicate that up to 90 per cent. of option holders sell all or most of their shares on exercise.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has from internal or external sources of the average income of all employees granted share options under approved discretionary share options schemes in each of the last three years. [37902]

Mr. Jack: A provisional estimate of the average relevant emoluments of those granted share options under approved discretionary share option schemes in 1994–95 is approximately £45,000. Estimates for the earlier years are not readily available.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will publish the results of all research conducted by the Treasury or Inland Revenue since 1984 on the use of share option schemes by small and medium-sized enterprises; [37960]

(2) if he will publish the results of all research conducted by the Treasury or Inland Revenue since 1984 on the use of share option schemes for the benefit of low and middle income employees; [37961]

(3) if he will publish the results of all research carried on by the Treasury or the Inland Revenue since 1984 on the tax revenue gains resulting from increased payment of corporation tax and other taxes in companies whose shares increased in value and which operated successful approved discretionary share option schemes; and if he will publish the research. [37962]

Mr. Jack: A report by KPMG Management Consulting on employee share schemes, prepared for the Inland Revenue, Treasury and Department of Employment, was published by the Inland Revenue in 1991. This report addressed a wide range of issues, including an analysis of employee share schemes by company size. It did not consider the income of employees or any possible impact on corporation tax receipts. In addition regular monitoring is published in "Inland Revenue Statistics".

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much corporation tax was paid in the last three tax years; and what proportion of the total corporation tax paid was by companies operating approved discretionary share option schemes. [37882]

Mr. Jack: The figures for corporation tax receipts are as follows:

Year	Corporation tax £ million
1992–93	15,783
1993–94	14,887
1994–95	19,390

Estimates of the proportion of total corporation tax paid by companies operating approved discretionary share option schemes are not available.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many companies started (a) save-as-you-earn share option schemes and (b) profit sharing schemes in each of the last three tax years and the current year to date. [37901]

Mr. Jack: Available information is given in the table.

Year	Profit-sharing schemes	Savings-related share option schemes
1992–93	61	95
1993–94	35	104
1994–95	47	144
1995–96[1]	17	77

[1] Year to date.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment the Inland Revenue has made of the value of revenue savings to be made by the proposed changes in taxation of share options; and if he will publish the assumptions made and the basis of the calculation. [37964]

Mr. Jack: There will be no effect on tax receipts for the next three financial years and the full-year level will not be reached until approximately 2002–03 as a result of transitional arrangements for options granted before 17 July 1995. A provisional estimate of the full-year revenue yield is about £80 million each year based on current levels of exercise, size of gains and the 1995–96 income tax and capital gains tax systems.

An outline of the methodology and underlying assumptions for the estimated cost of tax relief for approved discretionary share option schemes was published in chapter 6 of "Inland Revenue Statistics 1991." It has been assumed that the bulk of schemes will continue after the tax relief is withdrawn, and that the gains made on the exercise of options will generate income tax.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what percentage of companies which floated on the Stock Exchange during the last year had approved discretionary share option schemes in operation; [37879]

(2) how many United Kingdom subsidiaries of United States parent companies operate approved discretionary share option schemes involving options being granted over shares in the United States parent companies; [37900]

(3) how many of the 100 largest corporation tax paying United Kingdom—registered companies in the last year operated share option schemes; [37885]

(4) what assessment he has made of the relationship between changes in the value of share options normally and over the longer term and the profitability of companies; [37972]

(5) how many of the companies which have set up approved discretionary share options schemes since 1984 (a) had turnover below £50 million, (b) has pre-tax profits below £10 million and (c) did not have occupational pension schemes in the year the option schemes were approved by the Inland Revenue. [37903]

Mr. Jack: This information in the form requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, discretionary share option schemes have been monitored since the scheme began in 1984 and statistics published each year in "Inland Revenue Statistics", copies of which are in the Library.

Loans to Business

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of loans to business are for (a) under three years, (b) under four years, (c) under five years and (d) over 10 years. [38829]

Mrs. Angela Knight: This information is not collected by the Government. Figures on major British banking groups' advances to non-personal customers resident in the UK, analysed by residual maturity, are set out in table 1.10 of the British Bankers Association "Annual Abstract of Banking Statistics" which is in the Library.

Import Duty on Wine

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what grounds Customs and Excise are now expressing the import duty on wines in terms of ecu per hectolitre, details of which have been sent to the Minister in charge of Customs and Excise; and on what legal basis this description of duty is used. [37629]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 19 October 1995]: The legal basis for customs duties on goods imported into the European Union is an EC agreement on a common tariff which is then incorporated into the UK tariff. To ensure equity, duties are expressed in the same units in all language versions of the common tariff. In the case of wine imports, one element of the duty is defined in monetary terms. In order that the same rate of duty is levied throughout the community, this is expressed in ecu, but is of course converted to national currency for payment.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Church Repair Grants

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list those churches which (a) have received, (b) are currently receiving and (c) have been granted but have not yet received, grant aid from English Heritage towards repairs necessitated by atmospheric pollution together with the amounts in each case. [38635]

Mr. Sproat: English Heritage does not categorise its grants according to the causes which have necessitated structural repairs. Therefore, it is not possible to provide a breakdown of English Heritage's grant expenditure for work resulting from atmospheric pollution to churches. During 1994–95, English Heritage offered £14 million in grants for repairs to historic churches.

Imperial War Museum

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans she has to construct or assist with the construction of an imperial war museum for the north of England; and if she will make a statement. [39037]

Mr. Sproat: It is for the trustees of the imperial war museum to decide on whether there should be a branch of the museum in the north of England.

Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when the report of the reviewing committee on the export of works of art 1994–95 will be published. [39780]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The reviewing committee's annual report 1994–95 has been published today, and copies have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Film Industry (Financial Support)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will publish details of the total financial support for the film industry during each of the last three years for which figures are available; and if she will make a statement. [38134]

Mr. Sproat: My Department's total expenditure on film over the past three years is as follows:

1993–94: £24.34 million (out-turn)

1994–95: £26.16 million (out-turn)

1995–96: £26.07 million (planned expenditure)

Funds are provided to two non-departmental public bodies, the British Film Institute and the National Film and Television School; three private-sector companies: British Screen Finance, the European Co-production Fund and the British Film Commission, and a number of European initiatives.

Libraries (Internet Connections)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many libraries and what percentage of the total are currently linked to the Internet; what is the estimated cost of linking those libraries not hitherto connected; and if she will make a statement. [38585]

Mr. Sproat: We do not have precise information about the total number of public libraries with Internet connections, but we believe that a minimum of 35 out of 167 library authorities—over 20 per cent.—have connections to the Internet or are about to become connected. The cost of connection depends very much on how a library wishes to use the Internet but a basic package could cost from about £2,000, including hardware.

Millennium Commission Funding

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proposals she has to reinforce compliance with the principle for Millennium Commission funding that it shall not replace, but be additional to already available sources of Government funding, while maintaining the principle of matching Millennium Commissions funding only with private funding. [38415]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 20 October 1995]: National Lottery funding is additional to existing provision. Millennium Commission projects can attract partnership funding from any eligible source, including public and private funds.

Employee Fraud

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the total number of cases of all forms of fraud committed by employees of her (a) Department, (b) agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies, for each year from 1991–92 to 1994–95; and for each of these years, what was the total monetary sum (i) misappropriated in such frauds and (ii) subsequently recovered. [39133]

Mr. Sproat: The information requested is as follows:

	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95
Total number of cases of fraud committed by employees of
(a) DNH	Nil	1	Nil
Total monetary sum
(i) misappropriated	—	£31.70	—
(ii) recovered	—	Nil	—
(b) its agencies	Nil	Nil	Nil
(c) its NDPBs	6	6	9
Total monetary sum
(i) misappropriated	£202,422	£10,913	£80,759
(ii) recovered	£138,637	£6,155	£76,270

The figures for the year 1991–92, prior to the establishment of my department in April 1992, are not available.

Pay Delegation Plan

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will provide in respect of her plan for pay delegation submitted to the Treasury (a) a description of the staff in each bargaining unit covered by the plan, distinguishing staff in HQ functions, agencies and agency candidates and in other identifiable business units and (b) proposals for trade union recognition in each bargaining unit and the negotiating machinery to be put in place in each bargaining unit. [38272]

Mr. Sproat: The pay delegation plan that my Department submitted to the Treasury covered staff in the Department of National Heritage only. The Royal Parks Agency and the Historic Royal Palaces Agency are preparing separate delegation plans in consultation with my Department. The information requested for each bargaining unit is:

Department of National Heritage

The pay delegation plan covers all staff in my Department at grade 6 and below. This is currently 334 staff in grades as follows:

HOME DEPARTMENT

Child Support Agency (Inquests)

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many suicide cases evidence relating to the activities of the Child Support Agency has been presented at a coroner's inquest since April 1993. [37593]

Mr. Kirkhope: Information about the evidence submitted at individual inquests is not held centrally.

Mobile Phone Fraud

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out the figures for the incidents for (a) each category of mobile phone cloning reported and/or investigated and (b) each category of mobile phone theft reported and/or investigated by each police force in England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland in each of the last two years for which figures are available and the totals for the last five years. [38344]

Mr. Maclean: The information is not collected centrally. However, I understood that the mobile telecommunications industry has provided some estimates on mobile phone fraud as part of its contribution to the work of the industry and Government study group on mobile phone fraud. I understand that a copy of the briefing paper containing these estimates is in the Library.

Burglaries (Amersham and Slough)

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has about the incidence of burglary in the Amersham and Slough police areas in the latest quarter for which figures are available and for the corresponding quarter a year earlier. [38438]

Mr. Maclean: The information is not available centrally although figures for the 12 months to June 1995 for Thames Valley as a whole are published in Home Office Statistical Bulletin 19/95, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Fine Defaulting (Young Offenders)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by individual centres the numbers of young people who have been committed to young offenders' centres for defaulting on fines in each of the last six years. [39277]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Mark Fisher, dated 24 October 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking, if he will list by individual centres the numbers of young people who have been committed to young offenders' centres for defaulting on fines in each of the last six years.

The information requested is in the attached table and is for young people aged under 21 for the years 1990 to 1994. Data for 1989 is not available.

Police Funding (Merseyside)

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will now announce the date of his proposed visit to Liverpool and Mersyside to discuss funding of the police authority; and if he will make a statement; [38832]

(2) if he will list the hon. Members and organisations who have asked him to visit Merseyside to discuss police funding and the recent disturbances on Liverpool streets; and if he will make a statement; [38833]

(3) what representations he has received from Merseyside police authority and hon. Members concerning police funding; and if he will make a statement. [38834]

Mr. Maclean: I have received invitations from the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry) and the chairman of the Merseyside police authority to visit Merseyside. I would be happy to visit the area when a suitable opportunity arises and when it would be practical to do so.

I have received a number of representations from right hon. and hon. Members, local councils, and members of the public about the funding of Merseyside police. The police funding formula has been subject to some further developmental work this year. I cannot say at present how this will affect the allocation of funding to Merseyside for 1996–97. I have, however, taken note of the views of the police authority.

Special Constables

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to provide funding to police forces to assist the recruitment of special constables and improvements to their conditions and training. [39830]

Mr. Maclean: We have established a new challenge fund for special constables. It includes £4 million of Government grant in 1995–96. Police forces in England and Wales are being invited to bid for money to help to resource an increase in the size of their local special constabularies and to help bring the training and equipment of special constables to a more consistent standard.

We have asked forces to look for other sources of support, such as local sponsorship, to boost the fund. Sponsors are also invited to contribute on a national basis.

The special constabulary makes a valuable contribution to the policing of this country by supplementing the efforts of the regular force. Specials provide an important and visible link between the police and local communities. I hope that the fund will not only increase numbers towards the Government target of 30,000 but improve the quality of the assistance special constable can give to regular police officers.

We have issued guidance to all forces in England and Wales about bidding for grants from the fund. I am placing a copy of it in the Library.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the split between operations and policy in each agency which reports to him. [38853]

Mr. Howard: There are four executive agencies within the Home Office: the Prison Service, the United Kingdom Passport Agency, the Forensic Science Service and the Fire Service College. In all cases, responsibility for day-to-day management is delegated to the chief executive, and responsibility for policy rests with me. This division is reflected in the framework document of each of these agencies, copies of which are in the Library.

Police Stations

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police stations in each county in England have (a) closed permanently and (b) restricted their opening times in each year since 1987. [38568]

Mr. Maclean: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police stations in each English county are in premises shared with (a) the fire brigade, (b) the local authority and (c) other organisations. [38569]

Mr. Maclean: This information is not collected centrally.

Closed Circuit Television

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the Prime Minister's oral answer of 17 October, Official Report, column 142, when he expects to announce where the 10,000 CCTV cameras will be; what will be the rules of the competition for them; and if he will make it his policy that cameras will be allocated regardless of party political affiliations. [38720]

Mr. Maclean: I am currently considering the detailed funding arrangements for the support of further closed circuit television schemes. A challenge competition will be run and bidding guidance explaining the rules for the competition is being drawn up. Copies will be distributed shortly. The bids will be judged against the criteria set out in that guidance.

Prison Cell Sharing

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many (a) male and (b) female prisoners currently share two to a cell designed for (i) one and (ii) two; [38292]

(2) how many (a) female and (b) male prisoners currently share a cell with three or more other inmates; and if he will make a statement; [38290]

(3) how many (a) male and (b) female prisoners currently share three to a cell designed for (i) one, (ii) two and (iii) three. [38291]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 24 October 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about cell sharing in the Prison Service.

The only information recorded centrally is about the number of prisoners sharing two and three to a cell designed for one. At the end of September 1995 there were no prisoners sharing three to a cell designed for one. On that date there were 8,440 male prisoners and 56 female prisoners sharing two to a cell designed for one.

Child Prostitution

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to hold centrally information in respect of the number of cases of child prostitution that are reported in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [38298]

Mr. Maclean: Statistics on cautions and convictions for soliciting offences committed by children are already held centrally. Details are contained in the table.

Convictions and cautions for soliciting offences for children under the age of sixteen years

Police Discipline (Blackburn)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what disciplinary proceedings were taken against a police officer of the Lancashire police force in respect of the loss and recovery in Blackburn town centre in June 1994 of police revolvers; and if he will make a statement. [38969]

Mr. Maclean: Police disciplinary matters are the responsibility of individual chief officers. However, I understand that the officer concerned was reprimanded at a disciplinary hearing for neglect of duty in respect of this incident and has been removed from firearms duties.

Rohan Thomas

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he was informed that Scotland Yard had allowed Rohan Thomas into the United Kingdom to help with investigations that were being undertaken by the Metropolitan police; and on what date he granted permission. [38391]

Mr. Maclean: The granting of leave to enter this country is a matter for the immigration service alone. Rohan Thomas presented a passport in a false identity and was given leave to enter the United Kingdom for six months as a visitor on 28 March 1993. The immigration service was informed of his true identity a few days later. He was served with notice of intention to remove him as an illegal entrant after he was apprehended on 19 June 1993.

Family Passports

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will reconsider his policy whereby husbands on dual passports are eligible to travel alone without their wives, but wives are not allowed to travel without their husbands; and if he will make a statement. [38414]

Mr. Kirkhope: Family passports, which included details of the passport holder's wife or husband, were discontinued in 1988, through those issued previously remain valid until their normal date of expiry. It is still possible to include particulars of children under 16 years of age on the passports of either or both parents. In accordance with international practice, only the person in whose name the passport is issued may travel on it alone.

Fire Service College

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many firefighters have been trained at the Fire Service College in each of the last five years. [38160]

Mr. Kirkhope: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Fire Service College under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from N. K. Finlayson to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 24 October 1995:

Your Parliamentary Question seeking information relating to the number of Firefighters trained at the Fire Service College in each of the last five years, has been referred to me by the Home Secretary as falling within my delegated authority.

In each of the 5 years up to and including the year 1 April 1994 to 31 March 1995, the following numbers of students from United Kingdom Fire Brigades were trained at the Fire Service College.

1990–91: 3,915 students

1991–92: 4,187 students

1992–93: 4,383 students

1993–94: 4,571 students

1994–95: 4,297 students

Witness Intimidation

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action is being taken to prevent intimidation and harassment of witnesses (a) before, (b) during and (c) after completion of trials. [37971]

Mr. Maclean: The Government have introduced provisions in the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 which make it an offence to intimidate a witness, juror or someone assisting the police. The relevant section, section 51, came into force on 3 February this year.

Responsibility for the protection and relocation of witnesses rests with the police. They will consider in each case the degree of intimidation and assess the capability of those making the threats to carry them out.

Sri Lankan Tamil Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the prisons or detention centres at which Sri Lankan Tamils are being held while their application for asylum is being considered. [37644]

Mr. Kirkhope: Information for Sir Lankan Tamils is not recorded separately. As at 17 October 1995, all Sri Lankan nationals detained pending consideration of their applications for asylum were held at the immigration detention centre, Campsfield house.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the longest period to date that a Sri Lankan Tamil has been held in custody pending a decision on their application for asylum. [37646]

Mr. Kirkhope: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Prison Costs

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average weekly cost of imprisonment in each category of prison (a) in 1985, (b) in 1990 and (c) in the latest year for which figures are available. [37958]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Bruce Grocott, dated 24 October 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the average weekly cost of imprisonment in each category of prison.

Fear of Crime

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will give details of recent meetings he has had with representatives of women's organisations to discuss crime and the fear of crime; [37522]

(2) what recent representations he has received from women's organisations on the subject of crime and fear of crime. [37521]

Mr. Maclean: Although there have been no further meetings since my reply to the hon. Member on 22 March at column 202, a number of wide-ranging representations have been received from women's organisations on issues relating to domestic violence issues. Many of these were received during the preparation of the recently published inter-agency circular on domestic violence.

Domestic Violence

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to improve recorded information about incidents of domestic violence against women. [37520]

Mr. Maclean: Measures aimed at improving the quality of information on incidents of domestic violence are to be considered at forthcoming meetings of the official and ministerial groups on domestic violence.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Rugby Football in Schools

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will conduct an inquiry into the circumstances surrounding the banning of Gavin Gordon from playing Rugby Union for Campbell college, Belfast; and if he will make a statement. [38527]

Mr. Ancram: The Irish Rugby Football Union has advised the headmaster at Campbell college that there is now no restriction on the selection of Gavin Gordon for the school's rugby team. His selection for the team is therefore a matter for the school.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his policy with regard to the playing of Rugby League by pupils in state schools in Northern Ireland. [38528]

Mr. Ancram: None. While team games are an important element of the physical education curriculum for Northern Ireland schools, the Government do not prescribe which team games should be played. That is a matter for schools to decide.

Paramilitary Arms and Explosives

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a further statement on progress towards the decommissioning of arms and explosives held by paramilitary groups in Northern Ireland. [36901]

Mr. Ancram: No paramilitary arms or equipment have been decommissioned to date. The Government believe that progress on this issue is essential to create the necessary trust and confidence for successful all-party talks. I remain hopeful that progress can, and will, be made.

Employee Fraud

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total number of cases of all forms of fraud committed by employees of his (a) Department, (b) agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies for each year from 1991–92 to 1994–95 and for each of these years, what was the total monetary sum (1) misappropriated in such frauds and (2) subsequently recovered. [39132]

Sir John Wheeler: The information is as follows:

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Mobile Phone Fraud

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will announce the recommendations of the industry and Government study group on mobile phone fraud which was set up in June. [39327]

Mr. Ian Taylor: I am pleased to announce the recommendations of the study group on mobile phone fraud which I set up in June. The group, comprising senior representatives from the industry, the Federation of Communication Services, my Department, the Home Office and the police, has analysed in detail the technical and legislative issues which need to be tackled if this fraud is to be combated more effectively.

The recommendations which Government will consider are:

1. Industry and the Government should fully support the introduction of the crime prevention scheme being set up by the FCS and endorse its early implementation. Once the scheme is in force, the four network operators—Vodafone, Cellnet, One 2 One and Orange—service providers and dealers in the industry must use their best endeavours to ensure that any equipment bought or connected by them is not stolen and that records are kept to demonstrate the precautions they have taken. Those that are found not to conform to this scheme will be unable to operate in the industry. Subject to the Director General of Fair Trading being satisfied with the scheme on competition grounds, it should be launched by December 1995.

2. The Government should consider extending the range of offences under section 42 of the Telecommunications Act 1984 so that, in addition to the existing offence of dishonestly obtaining telecommunications service with intent to avoid payment, it would also cover, broadly, the possession or supply of equipment capable of use in the course of or in connection with the current section 42 offence. The maximum penalty for these new offences should be five years and the penalty for the existing section 42 offence should also be increased from two to five years. This would make all offences arrestable, provide the police with powers to search for and seize evidence and will be a major deterrent to those intent on using scanners or other high technology equipment with intent to defraud the network.

3. Industry, police and Government should take action to build on previous initiatives to raise the level of public awareness of the problem of mobile phone fraud and crime and foster further crime prevention initiatives. In particular the industry increases its work with the police through seminars and training packages to raise the level of awareness of police forces around the UK to mobile phone fraud and crime and works with the police to implement any new legislation, the industry and the police take action to encourage owners of handsets to mark their phones.

The Government welcome the recommendations of the study group, especially the proposed crime prevention scheme which should make a substantial contribution to reducing fraud within the industry. The group rightly recognises that the proposal for further legislation will need to be considered carefully, in particular taking into account any resource implications. The Government also welcome the practical suggestions of the study group to raise the level of public awareness. I am keen to see wider use of mobile phone marking schemes, such as post code markings or a register. It is only when those who own mobile phones appreciate that their phone is an attractive target for fraud and crime, and protect it accordingly, that serious inroads will be made into reducing the problem.

I am delighted at the work done by this group over the last few months. It has proved a highly effective forum for the industry, the police and the Government to work together to consider what further actions are needed to underpin the work of the industry in fighting mobile phone fraud and crime. These recommendations need to be considered very carefully. In respect of the suggested change to the Telecommunications Act, I am having discussions with ministerial colleagues, including at the Home Office, in respect both of the legislative programme and the implications for resources.

A briefing paper describing the group's summary of the threat posed by mobile phone fraud and the group's subsidiary recommendations has been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will place in the Library a copy of the report by his industry and government study group of mobile phone fraud and associated topics; and if he will make a statement as to his current and future proposals on these matters; [38340]

(2) if he will set out the evidence, together with all figures of the incidence of cloning of mobile telephones for (a) each network licensed by his Department and (b) the combined networks, stating the source from which the figures were obtained and measures taken to verify those figures that have been presented to his Department; [38342]

(3) if he will place in the Library a copy of all evidence, and including all figures, indicating the source from which they were obtained, and indicate the measures taken to verify those figures presented to his recent industry and Government study group on mobile phone fraud and associated topics; [38341]

(4) if he will set out the evidence, with the figures, stating the individual sources from which they were obtained, concerning the cases of fraud involving the provision and use of mobile phones overall and for each network licensed by his Department. [38343]

Mr. Taylor: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I have given today to my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes). Individual cases of mobile telephone fraud are a matter for the companies involved, the police and the prosecution authorities. The mobile telecommunications industry did provide some estimates for the overall scale of mobile phone fraud as part of their contribution to the work of the industry and government study group on mobile phone fraud. These have been reproduced in the briefing paper mentioned in my answer. The paper has been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Copyright Tribunal

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what changes he has made and what further changes he proposes to make to the procedures of the Copyright Tribunal; and if he will make a statement. [38740]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Last year, my Department sought the views of users of the Copyright Tribunal to determine how satisfied they were with its performance, and how its procedures might be improved. The vast majority of respondents considered that tribunal procedures were fair, flexible, unintimidating and thorough. There were, however, some concerns about the cost and speed of procedures and some suggestions were made for improvement in these and other respects. The Department is still considering, in consultation with the chairman of the tribunal, possible changes to the procedures in the light of suggestions with a view to proposing a statutory instrument providing for some amendments to the tribunal rules in due course. In the meantime, some useful changes have been made to the Copyright Tribunal practice direction and the new version was sent in July to all solicitors involved in cases currently before the tribunal and respondents to the user survey. The practice direction is issued for the guidance of parties, with a view to achieving a just, expeditious and economical disposal of proceedings. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

British Coal Enterprise

Mr. Bell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if British Coal Enterprise will be sold as a single entity or broken down into its constituent parts; and if he will make a statement; [37658]

(2) what plans exist for Grosvenor Career Services, the outplacement division of British Coal Enterprise, in the event of an outright sale of British Coal Enterprise; and if he will make a statement. [37659]

Mr. Page: Bids will be invited for all of British Coal Enterprise or its main activities—workshops, business funding and outplacement services (Grosvenor).

Mr. Bell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the timetable for the proposed privatisation of British Coal Enterprise; and if he will make a statement. [37655]

Mr. Page: British Coal expects that the process will be concluded by March 1996.

Mr. Bell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on future methods of funding of British Coal Enterprise, Fast Track and Enterprise Fund; and if he will make a statement. [37657]

Mr. Page: Direct Government Funding of BCE, through British Coal, will continue until March 1996. Thereafter, funding will be a matter for the new owners of BCE.

Mr. Bell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what are the criteria for the sale of British Coal Enterprise; and if he will make a statement; [37656]

(2) what priority he attaches to ensuring the continuation of effective assistance to the coalfield communities in the event that British Coal Enterprise is privatised; and if he will make a statement. [37660]

Mr. Page: The sales process is intended to enable British Coal to take a clear view on the best way forward for BCE, having due regard to its statutory duties and the importance of ensuring continuation of effective assistance to the coalfield communities.

Fireworks

Mr. Burden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the role of (a) trading standards officers, (b) the fire service and (c) the police in enforcing the law relating to the sale of fireworks to children under the age of 16 years in metropolitan areas. [38899]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Section 31 of the Explosives Act 1875 makes it an offence to supply fireworks to children apparently under 16 years of age. The 1875 Act makes no provision for the enforcement of section 31. Accordingly, the police, in conjunction with the Crown Prosecution Service, have the clearest role in dealing with offenders. However, trading standards departments have a well-established responsibility for safeguarding the safety of consumers and, in our opinion, should be in a position to bring prosecutions under section 31 in cases where the police have not become involved or have decided not to proceed. My Department draws no distinction between metropolitan and other areas regarding the standing of trading standards departments with respect to this legislation. Fire authorities in metropolitan areas are designated to undertake certain functions under the 1875 Act but have no duty to enforce section 31. Nevertheless, they too may be able to bring prosecutions under this provision.

It is also an offence under the General Product Safety Regulations 1994 for a retailer to supply to any person a product which he knows, or should have presumed on the basis of information in his possession, is a dangerous product. Local authority trading standards departments have a duty to enforce the regulations and in doing so can draw on the range of powers supporting consumer safety legislation.

Mr. Burden: To ask the President of the board of Trade what has been the number of firework-related injuries since 1985 in total and each year, and how many of these were children under the age of 16 years. [38914]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: For the year 1985 to 1994, the total number of people receiving treatment for firework injuries at accident and emergency units in Great Britain within the four-week period around 5 November was 9,553; 5,053 of these were children under the age of 16. The figures for the individual years are set out in the table.

Year	Total injured	Aged less than 16
1985	968	593
1986	846	466
1987	960	540
1988	877	446
1989	800	414

British Coal (Retirement Funds)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to ensure that British Coal distributes the coal industry industrial death and retirement funds among the people who contributed to it, or to their dependants. [37769]

Mr. Page: The operation of the industrial death and retirement scheme is a matter for British Coal. However, I understand that the scheme was not financed from a conventional fund with separate assets. If it had been, British Coal's liabilities would have been capped in accord with the total amount of contributions paid. Instead, in return for contributions from members and notional matching contributions from British Coal itself, the corporation will continue to meet all entitlements under the scheme. British Coal confirms that all contributors who qualify for benefits will receive them. My Department will take over this responsibility when the liabilities associated with this scheme transfer at the of 1997.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what safeguards exist to protect funds and schemes similar to the coal industry industrial death and retirement fund in the privatised coal industry. [37770]

Mr. Page: The industrial death and retirement scheme did not transfer to successor coal companies on privatisation. Insurance and retirement arrangements in respect of service with the newly privatised industry are matters for the new owners.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what benefits were being paid out from the coal industry industrial death and retirement fund on 1 January; [37763]

(2) what was the value of the coal industry industrial death and retirement fund on 1 January 1993, 1 January 1994, 1 January 1995 and its projected value on 1 January 1996; [37765]

(3) what benefits are currently being paid from the coal industry industrial death and retirement fund; [37764]

(4) how many people were paying into the coal industry industrial death and retirement fund on 1 January; [37762]

(5) what was the initial payment made to the industrial death and retirement fund at its inception, and by whom. [37766]

Mr. Page: These are matters for British Coal. I am asking the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) in what circumstances the British Coal Corporation may appropriate the assets of the industrial death and retirement fund; [37767]

(2) what legal provisions govern the distribution of the assets of funds of the nature of the coal industry industrial death and disablement fund when they are wound up. [37768]

Mr. Page: I understand that the industrial death and retirement scheme ceased to accept further contributions from members on 6 January 1995, but as it was not wound up the question of distribution of funds did not arise. As the arrangements constituted a scheme, there was no fund and thus no assets.

Deputy Prime Minister

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the responsibilities of the Deputy Prime Minister within the area covered by the Department of Trade and Industry. [38453]

Mr. Lang: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister has overall responsibility within Government for competitiveness, deregulation and public service issues. We work closely together on the issues of competitiveness and deregulation.

The drive for enhanced competitiveness is central to my Department's work. It underlies the Department's programmes of support and assistance to business, including export promotion, innovation and small firms initiatives.

Competitiveness and Deregulation

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what responsibility his Department has for the areas of competitiveness and deregulation. [38449]

Mr. Lang: My Department remains central to the Government's work on competitiveness and deregulation.

The drive for enhanced competitiveness underlies the Department's programmes of support and assistance to business, including export promotion, innovation and small firms support initiatives.

Following the transfer of the central deregulation unit to the Cabinet Office, my Department retains specific responsibility for ensuring that the deregulation initiative is reflected in the way DTI itself undertakes regulation which impacts on business.

Redundant Mineworkers

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what education and training schemes are currently available to miners and their families made redundant during the past decade; [38489]

(2) what plans he has to extend the current education and training schemes available to miners and their families made redundant during the last decade. [38490]

Mr. Page: In addition to its general training and education measures, a major element of the Government's £200 million regeneration package specifically directed to helping areas affected by pit closures since October 1992 was a £75 million package provided by the training and enterprise councils, which includes provision for training measures.

British Coal's job and career change scheme which is managed by British Coal Enterprise Ltd. was established to provide support to those made redundant from the corporation. JACCS includes the provision of education and training support. This can take the form of on-the-job training where this meets specific identifiable skills shortages in local economies; and in some cases vocational educational courses.

British Coal is currently proceeding with the disposal of BCE. Arrangements for JACCS beyond March 1996, when it is anticipated that the disposal of BCE will have been completed, are being considered by British Coal. However, I understand that British Coal will continue to provide outplacement assistance to its current and former employees made redundant and not in employment in line with present policy.

Departmental Buildings

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the costs of the refurbishment of his Department's buildings in the past two years. [38451]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The Department has carried out the following refurbishments over the past two years, listed by year of project completion:

£ thousands

Financial year and project	Cost
1993–94
Partial refurbishment of Ashdown House, 123 Victoria Street, London SW1, to enable additional staff to be accommodated following the closure of 1–19 Victoria Street, London SW1	4,532
Full refurbishment of Kinsgate House, 66–74 Victoria Street, London SW1	4,211
Refurbishment of sub-standard parts of the Eastcote site, Eastcote, Middlesex	720
Partial refurbishment of Bushy House NPL site, Teddington, Middlesex	1,077
Full refurbishment of Main administrative building, NPL site, Teddington, Middlesex	1,990
1994–95
No projects completed in this financial year

The refurbishment of 1 Victoria street achieved practical completion in the current financial year. For the costs of that project, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the then President of the Board of Trade to the hon. Member for Cunninghame, South (Mr. Donohoe), on 21 June 1995, Official Report, columns 311-12.

This reply does not take account of any buildings which the Department acquires as a result of the machinery of government changes announced on 5 July.

Belvedere Waste-to-energy Plant

Mr. Evennett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to be able to make an announcement on the proposal by PowerGen and Cory for a waste-to-energy plant in Belvedere. [38566]

Mr. Eggar: The present position on the application is that pursuant to regulation 10 of the Electricity and Pipe-line Works (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations 1990 my officials will be writing to PowerGen CHP Ltd. seeking further environmental information in relation to its application.

European Regional Aid

Mr. MacShane: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has made to the European Commission regarding the proposed reduction in funds for the RESIDER II steel regions aid programme in 1998–99; and if he will make a statement. [38714]

Mr. Eggar: The Commission has not proposed a reduction in the allocation to RESIDER, but on the contrary, an increase of 380 mecu for RESIDER, RECHAR, RETEX and KONVER together: of which 60 mecu is for the UK. The Government would have preferred a larger figure. The Commission's proposal will be discussed by the member states in the structural funds community initiatives management committee in due course, but no date has been set for the committee's meeting.

Iron and Steel Industry

Mr. MacShane: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimates his Department has made for output and employment in the United Kingdom iron and steel industries over the next five years. [38713]

Mr. Page: My Department does not forecasts of output and employment in the UK iron and steel industries.

Osprey Wave Project

Mr. Mullin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assistance his Department has given to applied research and technology over (a) research, (b) production and (c) newsletters of the Osprey wave power project; and if he will make a statement. [38375]

Mr. Page: My Department has directly assisted applied research and technology during the early phase of research and development on the OSPREY device through funding a wave tank testing experiment during 1992–93 at a cost of approximately £50,000 and a tow-out evaluation at an additional cost of £12,000.

My Department has also assisted ART through sponsoring an assessment of OSPREY's structure, carried out by Advanced Mechanics and Engineering, an independent engineering consultancy, at a cost of £25,000, and to date has funded around £130,000 of research and development into pneumatic turbines, carried out by the Queen's university of Belfast, which will have been of indirect benefit to ART as the purpose of the work was to provide testing facilities for turbines suitable for eventual deployment in the OSPREY device. This work is scheduled for completion in 1996 at a final cost of around £200,000.

My Department has also commissioned an independent study of the OSPREY device at a cost of around £17,000, conducted with full co-operation from ART.

A short article on the OSPREY device is due to appear in the next issue of "New Review" magazine, scheduled for publication in December 1995, which is devoted to new and renewable energy and fully funded by my Department. "New Review" has a circulation in excess of 30,000. Copies are sent to the libraries of the House of Commons and the House of Lords.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Mullin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what contribution his Department has made to research into renewable sources of energy during each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [38370]

Mr. Page: My Department has undertaken the following expenditure on research into new and renewable sources of energy during each of the last 10 years.

Year	Expenditure £ million
1985–86	13.2
1986–87	12.0
1987–88	16.3

Dock Workers (Merseyside)

Mr. Parry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions have taken place with the Mersey Docks and Harbour Company about the dismissal of dockers in Merseyside. [38738]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: None. The Government believe that the resolution of industrial disputes is entirely a matter for the parties concerned—enlisting, as with the case of the Mersey Docks and Harbour Company, the services of ACAS if both sides agree.

Inward Investment

Mr. William Powell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the inward investment to the United Kingdom in excess of £10 million made in each year since 1979. [38334]

Mr. Eggar: For the financial years 1979 to 1995, of the total number of inward investment decisions notified to my Department's Invest in Britain Bureau, in excess of £10 million were 625. In recent years these have included:

Siemens	1.1 billion
Samsung	450 million
Toyota	700 million
Nissan	250 million
Goldstar	40 million
Fujitsu	400 million

These figures are based on information provided by the companies at the time of the announcement of the decision to invest, and take no account of subsequent developments.

Product Use

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what legislation requires private businesses to inform their customers how they use a product once a transaction has been completed; and if he will make a statement. [39052]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: If a consumer wishes to put a product to some unusual use he should seek advice from the trader. The trader should then indicate whether it will be reasonably fit for the purpose or make it clear if he is not confident on the point. There is no legislation which requires private businesses to inform their customers how they should use a product.

High-tech Companies

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many high-tech industrial companies have been established in the United Kingdom during each of the last five years. [38636]

Mr. Page: The information requested is not readily available.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list for the four years leading up to the privatisation of the electricity industry and for the four years after (a) the retail prices index and (b) domestic electricity index, including all taxes at the relevant rate. [38179]

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 20 October 1995]: The new electricity companies were established in March 1990 and flotation occurred at several different stages thereafter. For convenience, 1990 has been taken as the year of privatisation. The information requested is set out in the table.

Year	Retail Prices Index (all items)	[1]Domestic electricity
1986	100.0	100.0
1987	104.1	99.5
1988	109.3	104.9
1989	117.8	112.5
1990	128.9	121.7
1991	136.5	133.9
1992	141.5	140.9
1993	143.8	140.4
1994	147.4	[2]136.9

Note:
[1] The electricity component of the RPI.
[2] Excludes VAT at 8 per cent. from 1 April 1994. The figure including VAT for 1994 would be 145.0.
Source:
Retail Prices Index compiled by the Central Statistical Office.

Domestic electricity prices, excluding VAT, have fallen faster than the all items RPI since 1990. Further price falls can be expected as a result of additional reductions in electricity distribution charges which take effect on 1 April 1996.

General Pinochet

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if officials of his Department or its agencies met General Pinochet of Chile during his recent visit. [37978]

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 19 October 1995]: No.

Private Coal Mines

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many licences were held by private licensed mines on 31 March and in May in (a) south Wales, (b) the remainder of the United Kingdom and (c) the United Kingdom; and how many miners were employed at these dates. [37628]

Mr. Page [holding answer 19 October 1995]: The Coal Authority informs me that:

(a) the numbers of licensed underground mines were as follows:

	At 31 March 1995	At 31 May 1995	At 18 October 1995
Great Britain
Licensed by British Coal under section 36(2)(a) of the Coal Industry nationalisation Act 1946	[1]140	24	24
Licensed by the Secretary of State/Coal Authority under section 26 of the Coal Industry Act 1994	18	63	71
Total	[1]158	87	95
South Wales
Licensed by British Coal under section 36(2)(a) of the Coal Industry Nationalisation Act 1946	87	5	5
Licensed by the Secretary of State/Coal Authority under section 26 of the Coal Industry Act 1994	1	33	39
Total	88	38	44

[1] Includes 115 mines whose licences expired on that date, about half of which were not producing coal at that time.

(b) while precise figures are not available, employment at these underground mines has remained at around 10,500 for Great Britain and 700 for South Wales.

Merseyside Docks

Mr. Parry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the Merseyside docks port operation being carried out by Drake International Port Services of Southampton. [37732]

Mr. Jonathan Evans [holding answer 19 October 1995]: No. Any operation being carried out by Drake International Port Services of Southampton on the Merseyside docks is a matter for the companies involved.

Mr. Davis: We have had a number of contacts with the New Zealand Government on this issue.

Mr. Michael Horne

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who has replaced Mr. Michael Horne in his Department; at what salary; and if he will make a statement. [38300]

Mr. Hanley: Mr. Michael Horne was replaced in his last appointment in the FCO by Mr. Shaun Cleary. Mr. Cleary is a grade 5 officer in HM Diplomatic Service and is paid on a salary range between £26,535 and £41,092.

Romania

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the state of negotiations with regard to Romania's application to join the Council of Europe; what assessment he has made of Romania's ability to accede to the European convention for the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms; and if he will make a statement. [38020]

Mr. David Davis: Romania has been a member of the Council of Europe since 7 October 1993.

Romania signed the European convention for the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms on 7 October 1993 and ratified on 20 June 1994.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the extent of reporting restrictions in place in Sri Lanka at the present time. [38458]

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contact the Minister of State had with representatives of the Tamil minority in Sri Lanka on his recent visit there. [38459]

Mr. Hanley: I met a number of representatives of the Tamil minority during my recent visit to Sri Lanka, including Mr. Douglas Devanda and Mr. Neelan Tiruchelvam.

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy on the Sri Lankan Government's proposals for devolution in Sri Lanka. [38460]

Mr. Hanley: We welcome the efforts of the Government of Sri Lanka to achieve a lasting political settlement to the conflict by issuing proposals for devolution in Sri Lanka.

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the extent to which renewed military action between Government forces and the Tamil Tigers in the north of Sri Lanka has caused civilian casualties; and if he will make a statement on the conflict. [38461]

Mr. Hanley: We do not have exact figures for civilian casualties caused in the renewed military action in the north of Sri Lanka. I raised this issue with the Sri Lankan Government during my official visit to Colombo from 8–10 October, and urged them to make every effort to avoid further civilian casualties.

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the reported bombing by Sri Lankan Government forces of a school at Nagar Kovil Makavithiya Layam in Vadamarachi on 22 September; and if he will make a statement on the incident. [38462]

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response has been received, from (a) the Sri Lankan Government and (b) the Tamil Tiger rebels, to Britain's offer to facilitate negotiations, made by the Minister of State on his recent visit to Sri Lanka. [38463]

Mr. Hanley: We have offered to facilitate negotiations between the Government of Sri Lanka and the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam on several occasions, but neither side has responded. There has been no change in this position.

Cyprus

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussion he has had and with whom on reports prepared by the Council of Europe on Cyprus; and if he will make a statement. [38619]

Mr. David Davis: None.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when representatives from the British high commission in Cyprus last visited the Karpas area of occupied northern Cyprus; and what report was made following that visit. [38487]

Mr. Davis: High commission staff regularly visit all areas of Cyprus. The high commissioner visited the Karpas area on 30 March this year for extensive contacts with the local community accompanied by officials from the humanitarian branch of the UN force in Cyprus, UNFICYP. The latter have the responsibility for safeguarding the welfare of the Greek Cypriots living in the Karpas, and visit them every week.

Islamic Countries (Defence and Security)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his assessment of the value of the contribution of the Islamic countries to international defence and security. [36574]

Mr. Hanley: The contribution of Islamic countries to international defence and security varies from country to country.

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: UN flags fly in Parliament square on UN Day.

Iran

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards Iran following the parliamentary human rights group's report on the position of women in Iran. [38769]

Mr. Hanley: Our policy on Iran remains unchanged since the reply given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Grantham (Mr. Hogg) on 25 January 1994 at column 144. We are concerned about the situation of women in Iran and raise this matter whenever appropriate.

Sudan

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the Sudan in relation to allegations of harbouring of terrorist groups. [39270]

Mr. Hanley: We regularly express our concern to the Sudanese Government about reports that Sudan supports the activities of extremist groups. My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary raised this with the Sudanese ambassador on 13 September. In particular, we regard as extremely serious allegations of official Sudanese complicity in the terrorist attack against President Mubarak in Addis Ababa on 26 June.

HEALTH

Deprivation Payments

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the reduction of deprivation payments to General Practitioners within the Oldham family health services authority area and the resulting decision to abandon plans to extend their premises and improve their services. [37421]

Mr. Malone: Deprivation payments are based on the Jarman index and 1991 census data. The move to 1991 census data, recommended by the independent Doctors' and Dentists' Review Body in its latest report, is one agreed by the profession and my Department. A generous transitional protection scheme has been agreed with the profession to protect those affected.

Cooking Fumes (Cancer)

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research is being undertaken by the NHS management executive or his Department into the possible occupational cancer risk for cooks from carcinogenic chemicals in cooking fumes. [37993]

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the number of anaphylactic incidents dealt with at hospital accident and emergency units in recent years. [38359]

Mr. Sackville: There were nearly 12 million new attendances at accident and emergency departments in national health service hospitals in England in 1994–95. Information about the reasons for attendance is not available centrally.

NHS Management

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on how the figure of £140 million in his press release 95/473 to be transferred from administrative costs to patient care is calculated; what cash amount he intends to release from cuts in administrative costs in (a) NHS trusts, (b) health authorities, (c) GP fundholding practices and (d) other areas; and if these sums will be retained by the trusts, health authorities and general practitioner practices which make the savings, or will revert to the NHS executive or his Department. [38380]

Mr. Malone: We expect planned spending on running district health authorities and family health services authorities and estimated spending by national health service trusts on managerial and non-clinical administrative staff to be reduced by 5 per cent. nationally in 1996–97 in cash terms. This is equivalent to an 8 per cent. reduction in real terms on the basis of the latest expected gross domestic product deflator for 1996–97 and is estimated to yield savings of some £140 million. I anticipate savings on health authority costs will amount to some £40 million in real terms and savings by trusts to some £100 million. The savings will be retained locally and will be available for patient care.

UKCC

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the members of the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting and the bodies responsible for appointing these members; and to whom they are responsible. [38390]

Mr. Sackville: The council has 60 members, of whom 40 are elected by the professions and 20 are appointed by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. The council is required to submit an annual report and accounts to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the policy of his Department as to the restoration of former nurses who have been struck off their professional register. [38386]

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had and with whom regarding the cases of (a) Dennis Thorpe-Price and (b) Subaschan Bunbuhn; and if he will make a statement as to their presence on the register of professional nurses. [38388]

Mr. Sackville: None. Registration is a matter for the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent discussions he has had with the Institute of Health Services Management regarding nurses who have been struck off their professional register. [38387]

Mr. Sackville: None.

Epilepsy

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to provide funding for the opening of centres of excellence in treating epilepsy throughout the country. [38403]

Mr. Bowis: The organisation of health services, including services for people suffering from epilepsy and the manner in which they are delivered, are matters for health authorities in their role as purchasers of services for their populations. They enter into arrangements with hospital and community trusts to ensure that the entire range of services is available, taking account of the needs of the local population and the priorities set for the use of the available resources.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the birth disorder sodium valproate syndrome and its connection with prescriptions following the misdiagnosis of epilepsy in mothers; and if he will make a statement. [38407]

Mr. Bowis: Many women with epilepsy need anti-epileptic medication in pregnancy to keep their seizures under control. When prescribing a drug in pregnancy, the doctor weighs the risks associated with no treatment against the risk of possible side effects of treatment. Without treatment, epileptics are likely to have major seizures, which could cause serious harm to both mother and unborn child.

Sodium valproate—Epilim—is a commonly used effective anti-epileptic. Like all anti-epileptic therapies, it has been associated with occasional foetal abnormalities, in particular spina bifida. Doctors are aware of this risk through the product data sheet and the British National Formulary, which recommends that women who become pregnant on sodium valproate should be offered screening and advised about the risks. A patient information leaflet is also available to inform women about these risks.

The education and training of health professionals is a matter for the relevant royal college. However, as part of the programme of co-ordinated initiatives on epilepsy which I announced on 17 January, Official Report, columns 576–77, we shall be seeking to raise awareness of this condition among general practitioners and primary care teams.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he intends to take to provide information about epilepsy and its treatment to doctors and the public. [38404]

Mr. Bowis: As part of the Department of Health's programme of co-ordinated initiatives on epilepsy, which I announced in the House on 17 January, we have:

Commissioned a new series of posters on epilepsy which aim to address the stigma associated with epilepsy by providing positive images of real people with epilepsy. Two of the posters were used to advertise National Epilepsy Week 1995 and two more will be issued shortly,

Provided £108,000 spread over three years to support the expansion of the British Epilepsy Association's freephone helpline and information service,

Provided £36,000 to support a nationwide programme of primary healthcare workshops on epilepsy run by the Continuing Care at Home Association, CONCAH,

Provided £40,000 over two years to support a joint Royal College of General Practitioners–National Society for Epilepsy Fellowship which will consider advice provided to general practitioners about the information and care that should be offered to people with epilepsy and those who care for them,

Provided funding for two innovative service development projects:

a. a total of £12,000 to support a project run by Doncaster health authority. This is an evaluation of a district epilepsy service involving an epilepsy clinic, guidelines for general practitioners, and a specialist epilepsy liaison nursing service.

b. a total of £83,000 to support a project run by general practitioners in Cheshire. This project is an evaluation of providing services to people with epilepsy, in the community, through a working collaboration between the general practitioners themselves and a specialist epilepsy centre, the David Lewis centre.

Awarded £90,846 to a joint Royal College of Physicians-National Hospital for Neurology project to develop national audit review criteria for the care of patients with newly diagnosed and established epilepsy,

Sponsored a major multidisciplinary conference on users of services, youth and primary care which aimed to share information between people working in the field and users of services and to encourage good practice throughout the NHS and the wider field. A report of the conference will be disseminated shortly.

Other possible activities aimed at professional and public education are under consideration.

Hospital Discharge Procedures

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to ensure that health and local authorities adhere to the general good practice on hospital discharge procedures issued by his Department in 1994. [38034]

Mr. Bowis: Performance of hospital discharge is monitored by the national health service executive.

Care for the Elderly

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the NHS's fulfilment of its responsibilities in providing in-patient care for elderly people. [38035]

Mr. Bowis: Health authorities are responsible for assessing the continuing health care needs of their local population. This includes continuing in-patient care for older people. Recent guidance set out national health service responsibilities in this area and requires health authorities to develop local policies and eligibility criteria for continuing health care. Copies of the guidance are available in the Library.

Cemfuel

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies his Department has commissioned into the possible health effects of burning cemfuel. [38570]

Mr. Sackville: We have commissioned no such studies.

Departmental Files

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department's file WOP/4/5 that was mislaid in Hannibal house in 1981 has yet been traced; what was the nature of its contents; and if he will make a statement. [39078]

Mr. Sackville: Yes. The file relates to radio and television licences for receivers used in national health service hospitals.

Asthma (Smoking)

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department is intending to take to inform (a) young female smokers and (b) the general public of the effect of maternal smoking on asthma; and if he will make a statement. [37588]

Mr. Sackville: Asthma in children is one of the many health problems associated with maternal smoking and symptoms of asthma are twice as common in the children of smokers. Information on this and the many other health problems caused by parental smoking forms an important part of the Department's anti-smoking campaign and is particularly emphasised in the smoking in pregnancy programme currently being run by the Health Education Authority.

Health Care Terms

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has had expressing support for a standard thesaurus for terms used in the caring services. [38027]

Mr. Sackville: The national health service has created a standard thesaurus of health care terms used by the clinical professions. This thesaurus is available in read coded format for use in computerised clinical information systems.

Expressions of support for the read coded standard thesaurus of health care terms have been received from the following organisations:

British Medical Association
Joint Consultants Committee
Conference of Medical Royal Colleges
Royal College of Nursing
Royal College of Midwives
Health Visitors Association
The Spinario Federation
College of Speech and Language Therapists
British Dietetic Association
Chartered Society of Physiotherapy
British Psychological Society
Royal Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain

The following organisations have supported a scoping project to assess the extension of the read codes thesaurus into the personal social services arena:

Association of Directors of Social Services
Social Services Inspectorate

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received registering dissatisfaction about the misunderstanding of terms used in the caring profession. [38026]

Mr. Sackville: In 1991, the chief executive of the national health service set up a working group consisting of representatives of the Conference of Medical Royal Colleges and their Faculties in the United Kingdom, the joint consultants committee, the general medical services committee of the British Medical Association and the NHS executive. The group's function is to advise him on the medically orientated NHS executive initiatives which have an information technology element and to strengthen the medical profession's contribution to this work. The group was later expanded to include the Royal College of Nursing, Royal College of Midwives, Health Visitors Association and the representative bodies of the professions allied to medicine.

The professional bodies on the working group pointed out that without a common language useful communication is impossible. It was immediately recognised as vital to establish an agreed thesaurus of clinical terms without which computerised clinical information systems in the NHS could not capture, store, compare and transfer data. It was also agreed that the professions had to take the lead in this project to ensure professional "ownership" and commitment.

The proposals to create the thesaurus of terms common to all sectors of the NHS was approved by the working group and subsequently endorsed by the clinical professions involved.

This common thesaurus of terms used by the medical profession, nursing professions and professions allied to medicine was subsequently incorporated into the read codes. The read codes are Crown copyright and are structured for use in computerised clinical information systems. The clinical professions have formally supported the adoption of the read codes as the underlying thesaurus for all NHS clinical information systems.

A scoping project to extend this thesaurus into the personal social services arena has commenced. The scoping project has the support of the social services inspectorate of the Department of Health and the Association of Directors of Social Services. This initiative supports the care in the community programme and in the broader context of inter-agency teamwork, for example between social and health services, has shown that there are substantial areas in which there is comparable need to be able to share the use of terms, and feel secure that they are appropriately understood.

Social Terms Scoping Project

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the cost so far of the social terms scoping project; and what are its estimated total costs. [38028]

Mr. Sackville: The social terms scoping project is a six month project which commenced on 1 May 1995. The cost at 30 September 1995 was £17,501. The estimated total cost is £34,383.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the remuneration of the Chairman and the project researchers of the social terms scoping project. [38025]

Mr. Sackville: The social terms scoping project is a six-month project which commenced on 1 May 1995.

The chairman is employed one day per week at the standard university rate and will receive £6,760 in total.

There are two part-time research workers. One research worker—0.6 whole-time equivalent—will receive £6,943 in total, and the second research worker—0.4 whole-time equivalent—will receive £6,702 in total.

These rates of pay are also based on standard university research grades.

Unregistered Children's Homes

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the names of those organisations mentioned in the national study of the social services inspectorate, published in August, on small unregistered children's homes whose homes do not achieve a satisfactory standard of care; and if he will make a statement. [38187]

Mr. Bowis: It is not social services inspectorate practice to do so in such studies and visits to a sample of homes during the course of the study were not inspections.

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will provide information on the numbers of staff working in small unregistered children's homes as a proportion of the social services inspectorate study (a) who had no relevant training, (b) who had no previous experience, (c) who were on short-term contracts and (d) who had been employed for less than six months; [38189]

(2) if he will make a statement on the percentage of children who have been placed in small unregistrable children's homes as emergency placements at the time of the social services inspectorate study into children's homes; [38190]

(3) if he will make a statement on the percentage of children who were at the time of the social services inspectorate study into children's homes (a) were not attending a local school and (b) were unregistered at a local school; [38191]

(4) if he will give information on the number of children placed in unregistered children's homes at the time of the social services inspectorate study he deems (a) to be in suitable accommodation and (b) to be at risk. [38194]

Mr. Bowis: This information was not sought as part of the recent social services inspectorate study.

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the numbers of children in unregistered children's homes at the time of the social services inspectorate study who were placed (a) more than 50 miles and (b) more than 100 miles outside their placing authority's area. [38192]

Mr. Bowis: Some 47 and 13 respectively.

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what new practice guidelines he is planning to issue to local authorities as a result of the social services inspectorate study into unregistered children's homes. [38193]

Mr. Bowis: I do not intend to issue new practice guidelines. The current regulations and guidance, when applied properly, provide adequate protection for children placed in unregistered children's homes. The report of the study, which has been issued to local authorities, indicates what is good practice.

Correspondence

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will send the hon. Member for South Hams a revised reply to his letter of 13 September regarding Mr. S. G. Horrocks of Brixham about charges for residential accommodation. [38835]

Mr. Bowis: I wrote to the hon. Member on 2 October and sent a further reply on 23 October.

White Report

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has informed all social service departments that his Department holds the index of names of former members of Islington social services department mentioned in the White report. [38900]

Mr. Bowis: It is not necessary to do so. Every social services department has received information on the procedures of the Department of Health's consultancy index and Islington council wrote on 1 June to every social services department agreeing to check against the White report the name of any former Islington employee currently employed by any local authority or child care agency.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 16 October, Official Report, column 153, if he will list the three social service departments which have made inquiries about the index of ex-employees of Islington council named in the White report. [38902]

Mr. Bowis: The Department's consultancy service index is operated on the basis of absolute confidentiality, and it is not our practice to provide information regarding which employers have sought checks against the index.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the net cost to the national health service, after taking into account reduction in income from prescription charges and savings on the overall national health service drugs budget, of allowing individual pharmacists to offer patients the option of paying the cost price where the drug costs less than the prescription charge. [37048]

Mr. Malone [holding answer 16 October 1995]: The current net cost to the national health service in England is estimated to be in the order of £90 million per annum.

This estimate is based on an assumption that all chargeable prescription items with a total cost of less than £5.25 would be dispensed privately. There is, however, no reliable way of estimating what proportion of patients and pharmacists might choose this option.

In appropriate cases, it is already open to pharmacists to offer patients non "prescription only" items as an alternative to using an NHS prescription and paying the prescription charge.

Public Immunity Certificates

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 19 July, Official Report, column 1286, if he will give details of the occasions on which the Secretary of State signed public immunity certificates in 1993 and 1994. [37414]

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 17 October 1995]: I am answering in relation to the two certificates served on defendants in 1993 and 1994. The first was signed in relation to proceedings against the Department of Health and the second in relation to an application for preaction discovery.

WALES

Pay Negotiations

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide in respect of his plan for pay delegation submitted to the Treasury (a) a description of the staff in each bargaining unit covered by the plan, distinguishing staff in HQ functions, agencies and agency candidates, and in other identifiable business units and (b) proposals for trade union recognition in each bargaining unit and the negotiating machinery to be put in place in each bargaining unit. [38274]

Mr. Hague: There are two bargaining units; the Welsh Office, excluding Cadw, covering some 1,900 staff; the Welsh Historic Monuments executive agency and Cadw, covering some 220 staff.

The Welsh Office proposes to recognise the Civil and Public Services Association, the National Union of Civil and Public Servants, the Institution of Professionals, Managers and Specialists and the First Division Association and to have single table negotiation covering all staff. In Cadw, CPSA NUCPS and IPMS are recognised.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many sites of special scientific interest in Wales have been denotified since 1981 on the grounds of a decline in their scientific interest. [38357]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is not held centrally in the form requested. However, since the establishment of the Countryside Council for Wales on 1 April 1991, this data has been included in their annual reports. Prior to 1991 it was collated centrally for England, Scotland and Wales by the nature Conservancy Council and was published in it's annual reports. The annual reports of both organisations are in the Library of the House.

Local Government Reorganisation

Sir Wyn Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total proposed membership of the new unitary authorities in Wales. [38023]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There are currently 1,273 councillors in the 22 new unitary authorities in Wales. On 16 June 1995, following consultation with local government, my right hon. Friend, the then Secretary of State for Wales issued directions to the Local Government Boundary Commission to conduct a review of electoral arrangements in the 22 unitary authorities. At the time he indicated that he had no desire to see a cut in councillor numbers . Copies of the directions have bene placed in the Library of the House.

Tir Cymen

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will ensure the expansion of the Tir Cymen scheme along the lines of the expansion of the countryside stewardship scheme in England. [38474]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Tir Cymen is a five-year experimental scheme which commenced in 1992. A full review of the scheme will be made towards the end of the experimental period, and decisions on its future will be made in the light of that review.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all the payments made by the Welsh Office for capital works at grant-maintained schools and occasions when such payments have not been paid at the appropriate stages or on the completion of the work. [38429]

Mr. Richards: A list of all grant payments made by the Welsh Office to grant-maintained schools for capital works will be placed in the Library of the House as soon as possible. There have been no occasions where grant payments have not been made at appropriate stages or on completion of work where the Department was satisfied that grant should be released.

Mr. Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he make will a statement about the administrative processes involving grant maintained schools and the Welsh Office in paying building contractors for the work carried out at grant maintained schools. [38430]

Mr. Richards: Building contractors are paid by grant-maintained schools following the issue of an architect's certificate which states the value of work undertaken. Where the work is being funded by the school's formula-based capital grant, the school applies to the Welsh Office for the grant prior to the commencement of work. Where the building work being carried out forms part of a "named" project under the grant-maintained schools capital building programme, the Welsh Office pays grant to the school against certified claims form supported by the architect's certificate.

As a precaution against overpayment of the total grant payable, and to ensure that the work is satisfactorily completed, grant payments on named projects are stopped once the level of grant reached 97.5 per cent. of the total approved grant, pending settlement at final cost stage. As soon as possible after completion of the work, schools are required to submit final cost documentation to the Welsh Office and following scrutiny and approval of the documentation, the final instalment of grant is released to the school.

Capital Receipts

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by local housing authority the amounts raised by sales of council homes to date and the amounts each local authority has available in capital receipts from these sales. [38431]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The cumulative amount of receipts from the sales of council homes since 1981 is set out in the following table. The usable receipt at the spot date of 31 March 1995 is also provided.

School Meals

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the entitlement to free school meals in (a) West Glamorgan, (b) Wales and (c) the United Kingdom from 1979 to the latest available date expressed (i) numerically and (ii) in percentage terms indicating the figures for (1) primary school pupils and (2) secondary school pupils and (3) total pupils. [38261]

Mr. Richards: The following table shows the number of children entitled to free school meals in maintained primary and secondary schools in West Glamorgan and Wales, and the percentage they represent of the total number of children on the school rolls. No comparable information is available for the United Kingdom. Data for West Glamorgan and Wales are not available prior to 1988, as information was not collected on the number of pupils entitled to free school meals.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 16 October, Official Report, column 114, concerning the number of applications awaiting departmental approval under the private finance initiative, if he will give the capital value of each of the projects being examined. [39273]

Mr. Hague: The estimated capital value of each of the projects which have been announced is: M4 relief road (£330 million); A465 Heads of the Valleys road (£175 million); new general hospital, Baglan (£40 million); staff residential accommodation, district general hospital, Llantrisant (£3 million); car park, University hospital of Wales, Cardiff (£5 million); day surgery unit, Nevill Hall hospital, Abergavenny (£1.5 million); cancer treatment centre, Glan Clwyd district general hospital, Rhyl (£15 million); community hospital, Chepstow (£6 million); medium-secure unit, north Wales (£3.5 million); OSIRIS, office automation system for Welsh Office (£13 million).

National Lottery

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place a copy in the Library of the guidance note sent to the non-departmental public bodies in Wales concerning the principles and eligibility rules under which matching funding for projects offered grants from the national lottery may be received; what is his definition of public funding for this purpose; and if he will list for each non-departmental public body how many grants offers have been (a) made and (b) subsequently withdrawn. [39121]

Mr. Hague: I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

WDA: Cynon Valley

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement giving a detailed response to the legal opinion of Vernon Pugh, QC on the Grant Thornton report of 7 December 1994 on the actions of the Welsh Development Agency in relation to Gadlys road and Tirfounder fields which was enclosed with the letter to him of 21 March from Landare Investments Limited. [39272]

Mr. Hague: My officials have already made clear that it is not for them to judge the merits of Mr. Pugh's opinion or to offer a view on it. I have nothing to add.

Employee Fraud

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total number of cases of all forms of fraud committed by employees of his (a) Department, (b) agencies and (c) non—departmental public bodies for each year from 1991–92 to 1994–95; and for each of these years, what was the total monetary sum (i) misappropriated in such frauds and (ii) subsequently recovered. [39134]

Mr. Hague: The information requested is in the following table.

ERDF Grants

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his meeting with the member of the European Commission responsible for regional development in Brussels on Wednesday 4 October, in relation to the application of the additionality principle of his Department's grant-in-aid to the Welsh Development Agency; and when he expects to supply the additional information on the funding of the Welsh Development Agency to the Commission. [37531]

Mr. Hague: I had a constructive meeting with the Commissioner for Regional Development, and the problem has been resolved.

TRANSPORT

M25 (Service Area)

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what conclusions were reached when his Department last undertook a comprehensive survey of possible sites for a motorway service area on the western quadrant of the M25. [38437]

Mr. Watts: The last such survey was carried out in July 1984 and led, in 1988, to an announcement that the Department would promote an MSA at Iver. Uncertainties over finance and the effect on an MSA of M25 widening meant, however, that no planning application was submitted. Instead, in 1989, the Department announced a fresh search for an MSA site on the western quadrant. Shortly afterwards, the decision was taken to deregulate the provision of new MSAs and the proposed site search was abandoned. The current Iver MSA proposals are purely private applications submitted under the deregulated arrangements.

I will arrange to send my hon. Friend copies of the 1984 survey report and of the 1989 announcement of the fresh site search.

Railway Speed Restrictions

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many K2 speed restrictions exist on the rail line between Paddington and Plymouth; if he will list them; and what was the date and reason for their imposition. [38836]

Mr. Watts: Railtrack inform me that the total number of speed restrictions currently in place is approximately 16. All of these restrictions have been in place for between one and 14 months and in each case the reason for the restriction is the condition of the track.

Employee Fraud

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total number of cases of all forms of fraud committed by employees of his (a) Department, (b) agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies, for each year from 1991–92 to 1994–95; and for each of these years, what was the total monetary sum (i) misappropriated in such frauds and (ii) subsequently recovered. [39137]

Mr. Norris: The figures requested are not readily available and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

National Air Traffic Services

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to reply to the Second Report of the Transport Committee on the privatisation of National Air Traffic Services (HC 36). [39275]

Mr. Norris: The Secretary of State has responded to the recommendations made by the Transport Select Committee. It is for the Committee to decide when and how to publish that response.

Mr. Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport to what extent the recommendations contained in the Second Report of the Transport Committee on the privatisation of National Air Traffic Services (HC 36) that the Safety Regulation Group's Air Traffic Services Standards Department should be transferred to a body separate from the Civil Aviation Authority has been accepted by his Department; what progress has been made towards the implementation of this recommendation; and if he will make a statement. [39276]

Mr. Norris: The Secretary of State has responded to the Committee's report. It is for the Committee to decide when and how to publish that response. It would be inappropriate for me to comment more fully on the issues raised until the Select Committee publishes the responses to its recommendations.

Bull Bars

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation banning the fitting of steel bars as bumpers to (a) four-wheel drives and (b) ordinary private vehicles; and if he will make a statement. [39018]

Mr. Norris: The Transport Research Laboratory is currently analysing police reports of accidents involving bull bars which occurred in 1994. The results will not be available until towards the end of the year. We shall then decide what legislation if any, is needed.

Newbury Bypass

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration his Department has given to the environmental balance between the principle route alternatives in respect of Greenham Common air base and the Newbury bypass; and if he will make a statement. [39060]

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency.

I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 24 October 1995:

As you know, the Minister for Railways and Roads, Mr. John Watts, has asked me to write in reply to your Parliamentary Question about the Newbury Bypass.

The Study Team commissioned by the then Secretary of State, Dr. Brian Mawhinney, did consider whether the closure of the Greenham Common Air Base had opened new possibilities for an eastern bypass of Newbury. A copy of their report is enclosed and you will see that their conclusion was that the overall balance remained in favour of a western bypass. The conclusion was endorsed by the then Secretary of State.

West Coast Main Line

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out the major components of his announced £7 million cost of a study of the re-equipping the west coast main line and the estimated components and total cost of its modernisation. [39320]

Mr. Watts: The overall costs of the west coast main line investment programme is estimated at some £1 billion. Nearly £7 million of European funding has been secured for 1995. This money will be used to finance the feasibility and design works for the modernisation project and go towards work to enable Eurostar trains to run international services on the route from next year.

Road Signs (Metrication)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what plans he has for the replacement of existing road signs to include metric distances; [38876]

(2) what plans he has for the introduction of metric distances for all new road signs. [38877]

Mr. Watts: None.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for the Doncaster travel-to-work area the current numbers of (a) casual and (b) fixed-term appointments in each Department of Transport office; and what were the figures 12 months ago. [39055]

Mr. Norris: According to the Department's personnel information systems, the numbers of casual and fixed-term appointments in my Department in the Doncaster area at 1 October 1995 and those of 12 months ago are given in the table.

Address	Casuals 1994	Casuals 1995	Fixed-term 1994	Fixed-term 1995
Wellsyke road, Doncaster	4	1	0	0
Shaftesbury avenue, Doncaster	1	2	0	0
Doncaster road, Rotherham	2	4	0	0
St Peter's house, Sheffield	2	6	0	1

Municipal Bus Undertakings

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the management-employee buy-outs of municipal bus undertakings which have since been sold on to private operators. [38756]

Mr. Norris: Municipal bus undertakings which are bought out by management-employee teams become private sector companies. My Department does not formally monitor changes of ownership within the bus industry.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, what is his policy in respect of compelling local authorities to dispose of their municipal bus companies and to bring forward the necessary legislation in this Parliament. [38892]

Mr. Norris: Our policy continues to be to encourage local authorities to sell their bus companies, as many have already done. As and when a suitable legislative opportunity arises, we shall seek powers to compel authorities still owning bus companies to sell them.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what considerations he takes into account when deciding whether or not to approve the sale of a municipal bus undertaking to a management-employee buy-out. [38891]

Mr. Norris: The decision on whether a municipal bus company is put up for sale and the conditions attaching to that sale are solely matters for the owners, but under the Transport Act 1985 the consent of the Secretary of State is needed to the arrangements made. Since 1992 it has been policy not to grant consent to a sale, whether to a management-employee buy-out or otherwise, unless it has followed a competitive tender.

Rail Fare Increases

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all cases of which his Department has received notification of increases in rail fares deliberately introduced in order to reduce demand; and if he will make a statement. [38132]

Mr. Watts: The setting of rail fares is a commercial matter for train operators. Operators are not required to notify my Department of their reasons for increases in individual fares.

From 1 January 1996 fares will be subject to the regime announced by the Director of Passenger Rail Franchising.

Motorway Lighting

Sir Michael Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made in reducing the glare in the night sky caused by the lighting of motorways; what is his policy for ensuring that motorway service areas do not add to the loss of night sky caused by their illumination; and if he will make a statement. [38354]

Mr. Watts: It has been a requirement of motorway lighting schemes designed since February 1993 that the impact of lighting at night on dark landscapes should be minimised using an appropriate degree of special light control whenever lanterns are being provided or replaced. Examples of modern lanterns can be seen on M40 junctions 3 to 5.

It is for the local planning authority to assess the environmental effects of lighting at motorway service areas. My Department's role is limited to ensuring that the lighting does not have an adverse effect on road safety on the motorway.

Railway Property Sales

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whom Railtrack will have to consult after privatisation before selling or leasing its land or other property. [38307]

Mr. Watts: Although, as now, there will be no specific requirement after privatisation for Railtrack to consult before selling or leasing its land or other property, the rigorous closure procedures set out in the Railways Act 1993 will continue to apply in respect of any proposal by Railtrack to close a part of its operational passenger network or any railway facility that it operates.

Rural Roads

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what new proposals he has to protect the safety and integrity of green roads or lanes. [38851]

Mr. Watts: The Government's position on the regulation of vehicular use of byways is most recently set out in the White Paper, "Rural England—A Nation Committed to a Living Countryside", Cm 3016, published on 17 October. A section devoted to the subject appears on page 127.

Railtrack Employees Share Offer

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many shares will be issued free or at a reduced price to Railtrack employees when the company's shares are put on the market; what he estimates the total value of employees' free shares and discounts will be; and how many employees will be eligible for these benefits; [38306]

(2) how many shares and share options will be issued free or at a reduced price to Railtrack directors when the company's shares are put on the market; what he estimates the total value of directors' free shares and discounts will be; and how many directors will be eligible for these benefits. [38305]

Mr. Watts: My right hon. Friend announced on 25 September the Railtrack employee share offers as part of the intended stock market flotation of Railtrack. The offers include:

free shares for each eligible Railtrack employee worth approximately £160 at the offer price plus a further £2 worth of shares for each year of continuous service int eh rail industry;

a matching offer of two free shares for every one purchased by eligible Railtrack employees up to a maximum value of approximately £250—that is, free shares of up to approximately £500;

discount of 20 per cent. for eligible Railtrack employees on up to approximately £1,400 worth of shares at the offer price—that is, a discount of up to £280;

priority over shares offered to the public to the value of approximately £18,000 at the offer price, including the shares purchased through the discount offer.

The priority offer, excluding the discount element, will also be offered to Railtrack pensioners.

It is too early to say how many shares will be issued or what the total value will be or how many employees and directors will be eligible. This will depend on the share price, the level of take-up and the number of eligible employees and directors at the time.

There will be no share options for Railtrack directors.

Motorway Resurfacing

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many miles of concrete motorway have been resurfaced in black-top; and what factors caused it to be used. [38413]

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Christopher Gill, dated 24 October 1995:

As you know, the Minister for Railways and Roads, Mr. John Watts, has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question asking how many miles of concrete motorway have been resurfaced in black-top; and what factors caused it to be used.

Figures are not available for years prior to 1992/93. The lengths of concrete motorway in England resurfaced in black-top in recent years are as follows:

Financial Year	Miles
1992–93	1.8
1993–94	15.6
1994–95	9.3

Motorways with a concrete road surface can be resurfaced in black-top as part of normal maintenance operations. This would be carried out for two main reasons—as a surface treatment or as a strengthening treatment. A surface treatment is required when the skidding resistance of the road surface falls below specified levels of where the concrete surface is showing signs of distress. A strengthening treatment is required when the structural condition of the pavement has deteriorated to the point where it is no longer able to carry the predicted future traffic. Overlaying with black-top is one means of providing the additional strength and extending the pavement life. Alternatively, concrete can also be used as an overlay treatment.

Piracy

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for the past 12 months how many attacks by pirates on British shipping have taken place on the high seas; and if he will make a statement. [39027]

Mr. Norris: During the last 12 months there has been one report of a piracy attack on the high seas against a ship registered in the UK or the Crown dependencies. This was against the UK-registered ocean-going yacht, the Longo Barda, attacked off Somalia in April 1995.

Air UK

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from Air UK in the last three years concerning the designation of civil air routes in eastern areas of the United Kingdom. [38121]

Mr. Norris: I am not aware that the Department has received any representations from Air UK on this subject in the last three years. However, I understand that the Civil Aviation Authority received a letter in December 1992.

Solent Buoys

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those buoys in the Solent for which Trinity House is responsible; and what powers he has to require Trinity House to pass them out to another competent authority. [37906]

Mr. Norris: Trinity House is responsible for the following lights in the solent area:

Prince Consort;

Gurnard;

Gurnard Ledge;

East Lepe;

Salt Mead;

West Lepe;

Hamstead Ledge; and

Sconce

The Secretary of State has no powers to require Trinity House to transfer buoys to another authority. Under section 33 of the Ports Act 1991, it is for the appropriate general lighthouse authority to determine, with the consent of the Secretary of State, whether or not to transfer buoys to a harbour authority.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest estimate of the gross cost to the public purse of British railways in the years 1998 to 2001 if the privatisation plans are implemented. [38460]

Mr. Watts [holding answer 23 October 1995]: The privatisation process has irresistible momentum. The Government remain committed to continuing to provide financial support to the railways. We believe that privatisation will bring efficiency improvements, competition and innovation, from which passengers and taxpayers will benefit, and which will become increasingly evident over time. The major area of cost will be for the provision of passenger services. The level of this cost will be determined by market competition through the process of franchising the passenger train operating companies. No estimate of the cost of public sector support has been made beyond 1995–96.

DEFENCE

Low Flying

12. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received concerning problems of low flying. [36570]

Mr. Soames: My Department has received a number of representations from hon. Members and the general public about military low flying.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the dates, locations, numbers, types and nationalities of aircraft, nature of breach, disciplinary actions taken against aircrew and lessons learned from each of the confirmed breaches of low flying regulations during 1994. In cases where the nationality of the aircraft is shown as TTTE, the aircraft came from the Tri-national Training Establishment at RAF Cottesmore which trains aircrew of the Royal Air Force, German air force and Italian air force using aircraft provided by all three nations.

Formal disciplinary action under the service discipline Acts was taken against the pilot of the Royal Navy Hunter responsible for the breaches at Langar airfield on 10 February 1994, who pleaded guilty to one charge of conduct to the prejudice of good order and naval discipline and one charge of annoyance by flying under the naval discipline Act for which he was severely reprimanded and fined. In cases involving UK aircrew where formal disciplinary action is not appropriate, aircrew who have breached regulations may be interviewed by their station commander or other appropriate senior officer. Such action could be recorded on individual's career records and affect flying status and promotion prospects. It is not our policy to release details of such action. It is the responsibility of senior officers to ascertain what lessons there are to be learnt from such incidents; central records are not maintained.

Reports on breaches by foreign aircrew are passed to their relevant national authorities, which whom responsibility for any further action rests.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of low-flying sorties carried out over the United Kingdom by each aircraft type in each month from January 1994 to the latest available date. [38120]

Mr. Soames: The number of sorties by aircraft type booked in the United Kingdom low flying system in each month from January 1994 to August 1995, the most recent month for which figures are available, were as follows:

1994

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what was the minimum authorised altitude for flights over the United Kingdom by the Italian air force Tornados deployed to RAF Cottesmore from 3 to 7 July; and if the aircraft were permitted to descend below that height when within (a) low flying area 13 and (b) the Spadeadam range danger area; [38128]

(2) what was the minimum authorised altitude for flights over the United Kingdom by the Italian air force AMX aircraft deployed to RAF Leeming from 19 to 23 June; and if the aircraft were permitted to descend below that height when within (a) low flying area 13 and (b) the Spadeadam range danger area; [38126]

(3) what was the minimum authorised altitude for flights over the United Kingdom by the Italian air force AMX aircraft deployed to RAF Leeming from 3 to 7 July; and if the aircraft were permitted to descend below that height when within (a) low flying area 13 and (b) the Spadeadam range danger area; [38125]

(4) what was the minimum authorised altitude for flights over the United Kingdom by the Italian air force Tornados deployed to RAF Cottesmore from 24 to 28 July; and if the aircraft were permitted to descend below that height when within (a) low flying area 13 and (b) the Spadeadam range danger area. [38127]

Mr. Soames: In each case, the authorised minimum separation distance for the Italian aircraft within the United Kingdom low flying system, including low flying area 13, was 500ft. Within the Spadeadam range danger area the aircraft were permitted to descend to 250ft.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what responsibilities are held by authorising officers concerning the pre-flight checking of low-level flight profiles for (a) safety and (b) conformity with low flying regulations. [38136]

Mr. Soames: Authorising officers are responsible for ensuring that low-level sortie plans comply with the regulations and procedures in the United Kingdom military low flying handbook, and that aircrew are suitably qualified to execute the planned sortie safely.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 13 January, Official Report, columns 272–74, at what altitude and speed the aircraft were found to have been flying at the time of the two sonic boom incidents; and if either of the aircraft was carrying out a simulated attack or interception at the time of the incident. [38320]

Mr. Soames: The information requested is as follows:

Date	Estimated height	Estimated speed
21 July 1993	12,800	Mach 1.01
11 August 1993	25,000	Mach 1.02

The aircraft involved in the incident on 21 July was engaged in air combat manoeuvring and the aircraft involved in the incident on 11 August was running in to commence a simulated attack.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the RAF police are tasked to investigate breaches of low flying regulations in cases where the breach also leads to an air miss report being filed. [38138]

Mr. Soames: It is not our usual practice to initiate an RAF police investigation if, in the course of an investigation of an air miss report, it appears that a breach of low flying regulations may have occurred, but it is open to the chain of command of the aircrew concerned to request such an investigation if they believe there may be grounds for subsequent disciplinary action.

If the alleged breach of low flying regulations is reported separately, an RAF police investigation may be started, but this will normally be terminated when it becomes apparent that an air miss investigation into the same incident is in progress.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many sorties are required for (a) pilots and (b) navigators to qualify in use of the thermal imaging airborne laser designation pod; and how many of these sorties are required to be at low level. [38129]

Mr. Soames: To become qualified in the use of the TIALD pod, RAF Tornado pilots and navigators are required to fly four medium-level and six low-level sorties, and RAF Jaguar pilots five medium-level sorties.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of flying hours' experience held by the aircrew involved in each of the RAF fast jet low-level accidents listed in his Department's evidence to the Defence Committee, HC 120 (1989–90) pp.144–153, and HC 314 (1993–94), pp.29–30. [38137]

Mr. Soames: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 10 January, Official Report, column 105, if he will list the dates, numbers, types and nationalities of aircraft, for the four alleged breaches of the Eshott avoidance area which were subsequently not confirmed. [38321]

Mr. Soames: Details of the four alleged breaches of Eshott microlight site in 1992 where a breach was suspected but could not be confirmed by RAF police investigations are as follows:

Date	Number and type of aircraft	Nationality
3 August	1 x Tornado	Italian Air Force
6 August	1 x Tornado	RAF
6 August	1 x Tornado	RAF
14 September	1 x F111	USAF

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes were made to the boundaries of low flying area 1 in April 1993; and what notification of any such changes was made to (a) the media, (b) hon. Members, (c) the local authorities in the area concerned and (d) civil aviation interests. [38123]

Mr. Soames: The boundary between low flying area 1 and low flying area 18 was moved eastwards by approximately 15 miles. It is not our practice to notify hon. Members and the local media of all changes to the United Kingdom low flying system, and none of the individuals or bodies listed was notified at the time. Details of the change were, however, passed to the Defence Committee and published on page 25 of the House of Commons Defence Committee report, HC 314 of Session 1993–94, on low flying.

Complaints from the Public

13. Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many complaints were received by his Department from Welsh members of the public in (a) 1985, (b) 1990 and (c) 1994. [36571]

Mr. Soames: We have no way of knowing how many members of the public who complain to our Department are Welsh. We deal with all complaints as quickly and sympathetically as possible.

Trafalgar Class Submarines

14. Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to award the contract for the construction of batch 2 Trafalgar class submarines. [36572]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I hope to be in a position to place a prime contract for the construction of batch 2 Trafalgar class submarines next year.

UNPROFOR

15. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future role of UNPROFOR. [36573]

Mr. Portillo: Subject to the outcome of peace negotiations, we would expect UNPROFOR to be replaced by a NATO-led implementation force. The Government welcome the progress so far, but much remains to be done and UNPROFOR will continue to have a vital role to perform while the peace talks continue and until the implementation force is in place.

Overseas Wars

16. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the Government's policy on involvement in wars overseas. [36576]

Mr. Portillo: The United Kingdom is committed to the defence of its dependent territories and, under article 5 of the Washington treaty, to assist a NATO ally should its territory come under attack. In addition, we shall continue to play an appropriate role—political, diplomatic or military—in international efforts to promote peace and stability.

Reserve Armed Forces

17. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures he proposes to enhance the role and status of the reserve armed forces over the next 12 months. [36577]

Mr. Soames: We aim to introduce a Reserve Forces Bill as soon as possible. I announced to the House on 30 March the publication of the Bill in draft for consultation. More than 500 written responses have been received, the great majority supportive of our proposals. Many useful detailed observations were made and the draft Bill is being revised to take account of them.

Intelligence-gathering Satellites

18. Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence with which countries the United Kingdom is collaborating or discussing collaboration on intelligence-gathering satellites. [36578]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The Western European Union is currently studying the possibilities of co-operation on a European satellite observation system. The United Kingdom is contributing fully to that work.

Hydrographic Service

19. Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the number of ships available to the hydrographic service. [36579]

Mr. Soames: There are currently six RN vessels available to the hydrographic service. There are three coastal survey vessels, HMS Bulldog, Beagle and Roebuck, the ocean survey vessels HMS Hecla and Herald and an inshore survey launcher, HMS Gleaner. HMS Scott, the replacement for HMS Hecla, is under construction as part of the ongoing programme to upgrade the capability of the hydrographic service. The hydrographic service also charters suitable commercial survey vessels which are used by RN survey teams in support of the civil hydrographic requirement.

Anti-missile Defence

20. Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement of progress on the feasibility study on anti—missile defence. [36580]

Mr. Arbuthnot: A contract was awarded in October 1994 to a consortium led by British Aerospace to carry out a pre-feasibility study to identify ballistic missile defence systems to counter potential threats to the United Kingdom, the dependent territories and our forces deployed overseas. The study, which is scheduled to run for some 18 months and is proceeding according to schedule, will identify practical defensive architectures against a range of scenarios taking account of performance criteria, costs, timescales and technical risk. This advice will inform subsequent policy consideration, including whether the UK has a requirement for ballistic missile defence.

Official Hospitality

21. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much was spent on official hospitality by his Department in 1994–95 and in 1995 to date. [36581]

Mr. Soames: During financial year 1994–95 my Department spent £4.867 million on official hospitality, and as at 1 October 1995 £2.14 million has been spent during the current financial year. These figures include expenditure incurred by the Ministry of Defence itself, by formations and establishments of the armed forces at home and abroad, and by individual officers occupying command and international appointments for which entertainment allowances are payable.

RAF Northolt

22. Sir Michael Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the number of military air traffic movements at RAF Northolt for the most recent 12-month period for which figures are available. [36582]

Mr. Soames: There were 7,750 military air traffic movements at RAF Northolt during the period 1 October 1994 to 30 September 1995. Additionally, there were 2,085 civil movements on Ministry of Defence business during the same period.

Western European Union

23. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met his counterparts in the WEU to discuss the further development of a common defence policy; and if he will make a statement. [36583]

Mr. Soames: WEU Foreign and Defence Ministers last met in Lisbon in May this year. The outcome was published in a communiqué of the meeting, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. They will meet again in November.

Bosnia

24. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the situation in Bosnia. [36584]

28. Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on Bosnia. [36588]

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to the oral answer given to the hon. Member for Neath (Mr. Hain) earlier today by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British troops are currently serving in Bosnia; and if he will make a statement. [36847]

Mr. Soames: Following the relocation of 24 Airmobile Brigade to the UK as part of the reconfiguration of United Nations forces requested by the UN Secretary General, almost 5,000 UK ground troops will remain in the former Yugoslavia. In addition, there are some 3,000 Royal Navy and Royal Air Force personnel deployed in the Adriatic theatre in support of UN and NATO operations.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many humanitarian aid convoys to Sarajevo were escorted over Mount Igman by United Nations forces during August and September 1995; and approximately what tonnage of relief supplies was delivered by that route. [38328]

Mr. Soames: No United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees humanitarian aid convoys were escorted over Mount Igman by UNPROFOR during August and September. Aid convoys from non-governmental organisations were escorted over this route during the same period, but the UN has been unable to provide statistics on the numbers or tonnage involved.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the average minimum temperature at the British Army positions on Mount Igman during the last two weeks of September; and when the soldiers serving at these positions were issued with cold weather clothing. [38045]

Mr. Soames: The average minimum temperature at the British positions on Mount Igman during the last two weeks of September was minus 1 deg C. Winter clothing was issued in the first half of September to personnel in exposed positions such as observation posts; the balance was issued over the period 23 to 27 September.

Helicopters

25. Mr. Mark Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if Britain's requirements for attack and support helicopters now meet the United Kingdom's needs into the next century. [36585]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The orders which were announced during the 1995—for 67 Apache attack helicopters for the Army and 14 Chinook MkII and 22 utility EH101 support helicopters for the Royal Air Force—will ensure that the United Kingdom's requirements for these capabilities will be satisfied for the foreseeable future.

Land Mines

26. Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will ban the export of self-destruct anti-personnel land mines. [36586]

Mr. Arbuthnot: No. It would not be right to ban completely the export of a weapon which we may in future need to import for our own armed forces.

New Office Accommodation

27. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many staff have been or are planned to be accommodated in new office accommodation. [36587]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Detailed information relating to all the new-build office accommodation is not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost. Four new office accommodation projects in excess of £10 million in value have been approved centrally since 1991 to accommodate some 8,800 staff in total. All of these are part of wider strategies which result in significant savings to the taxpayer. They are the new Procurement Executive headquarters at Abbey Wood near Bristol, an additional office block at Andover for HQ Quarter Master General's staff, a new personnel and training command headquarters at RAF Innsworth and a new logistic command headquarters at RAF Wyton.

French Nuclear Tests

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what communications he has had with his French counterpart on nuclear testing since July. [36751]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Nuclear testing was one of a wide range of defence issues discussed by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State during his meeting with the French Defence Minister in Paris on 27 September.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what access the United Kingdom will have to information or data resulting from the current French nuclear testing programme. [38457]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The UK has neither asked for, nor been offered, information or data resulting from the current French nuclear test programme.

Nuclear Weapons (France)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list each of the memoranda of understanding which currently exist between Britain and France with regard to all aspects of nuclear weapons, outlining the purpose of each, the date on which each one was signed and whether its text is classified; on what dates each one has been amended; and if any other countries are party to these memoranda. [38455]

Mr. Arbuthnot: It is not our practice to reveal details on contacts with France on defence nuclear matters.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will define the current status of the technical discussions between Britain and France, referred to in para. 25 of the Commons report of the Defence Committee, "Progress of the Trident Programme", HC 350, on issues related to nuclear weapons stewardship, hydrodynamic experiments and computer simulations; which Ministers and officials have taken part in these discussions; and what subjects were covered. [38456]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Nottingham, South (Mr. Simpson) on 16 October 1995, Official Report, column 37.

Helicopter Accident, Wales

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to publish the report of the inquiry into the cause of the accident on 12 August 1993 at Padarn Lake, Llanberis, involving an RAF Wessex helicopter. [38097]

Mr. Soames: The RAF board of inquiry into this accident has been protracted by the complex technical investigation. It is planned to release the findings shortly.

Royal Naval College (Irradiation Facilities)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the extent to which the Royal Naval College at Greenwich irradiation facilities have been used for commercial purposes. [39260]

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Naval Recruiting and Training Agency, under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive of the NRTA to reply to the hon. Member.

Letter from A. D. Ferguson to Mr. Llew Smith, dated 24 October 1995:

The Secretary of State for Defence has asked the Chief Executive of the Naval Recruiting and Training Agency (NRTA) to reply to your Parliamentary Question, about the extent to which the irradiation facilities at the Royal Naval College at Greenwich have been used for commercial purposes. I am replying on behalf of the Chief Executive who is away.

Whilst it is Ministry of Defence policy to make use of any irreducible and temporarily unallocated training capacity wherever it is possible to do so, it is not the case that RNC Greenwich has provided irradiation facilities for commercial purposes. RNC Greenwich is part of the recently created NRTA and the Agency operates in accordance with the MOD policy and HM Treasury guidelines to market spare training capacity at its shore training facilities and thereby generate income.

The Navy's Department of Nuclear Science and Technology (DNST), together with its low power nuclear reactor (known as JASON) are located at RNC Greenwich and are also part of the NRTA. Whilst DNST has a number of irradiation facilities other than JASON (including X-radiation and Gamma radiation facilities), in the context of your Parliamentary Question you will wish to be aware that DNST has provided only two training courses on a commercial basis during the past 12 months. The first being a one day training session for university students where the students observed JASON, but did not use it as an irradiation facility. The second was a three week course on instrument calibration. During this course, one practical session made use of JASON, but, again, not as an irradiation facility.

I hope that you will find the foregoing to be helpful.

Next Steps Agencies

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about possible defence agency status for the Director General Naval

Bases and Supply and Director General Ships organisations. [39420]

Mr. Soames: I have decided that the Director General Naval Bases and Supply and Director General Ships organisations, within the Naval Support Command, should be considered as candidates for defence agency status under the next steps initiative. Prior options studies will be undertaken to establish whether agency status or other options would be appropriate. Comments and ideas would be welcome from any interested parties. These should be sent by 15 December 1995 to D. G. Jones Esq, Director General Naval Bases and Supply, Management suite, Room 13, Block C, Ensleigh, Bath BA1 5AB or R. V. Babington Esq, Director General Ships, Spur 12, Block B, Foxhill, Bath BA1 5AB as appropriate.

Air Defence Fighter Aircraft

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has with the United States authorities concerning the leasing of F-16C aircraft for use as air defence fighters by the Royal Air Force. [38130]

Mr. Arbuthnot: My Department is currently examining proposals to upgrade the weapon systems of the Tornado F3 air defence fighter. A routine part of our evaluation procedure is to examine the comparative costs of alternative options. We have, in this context, contacted the United States Department of Defence for information concerning F-16 aircraft.

Dodman Point Naval Firing Range

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many days firing practice has taken place since the naval firing range opened at Dodman Point in Cornwall; and on how many of those days safety boats have been present. [38479]

Mr. Soames: There have been 16 naval gunfire support training serials in the exercise areas off Dodman Point since the Operational Sea Training organisation moved to Plymouth this summer. Firing has taken place during five of these, at each of which a range safety craft was present.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when firing practice is taking place at Dodman Point naval firing range in Cornwall; on which occasions safety boats have been present throughout the firing; and for what period of time they have been absent. [38480]

Mr. Soames: Naval gunfire support training will be carried out in the sea exercise areas off Dodman Point on up to 72 occasions per year. Details of the specific timings of the individual firing serials are being published in advance in the local press and are also being broadcast through the Gunfacts system. A range safety craft has been present throughout all the firings which have been completed to date.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what regulations are in force regarding the use of safety boats during firing practice at Dodman Point naval firing range in Cornwall. [38478]

Mr. Soames: There are no specific regulations governing the use of safety boats during firing practice off Dodman Point. The requirement for such a boat is decided on a case by case basis by the Royal Navy, taking account of the particular conditions and circumstances of the firing. The main methods of ensuring that the range is clear are through visual and radar observation from the firing ship, and observation from the helicopter which is present.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans has he for allowing the use of MoD airfields to export livestock from the United Kingdom or for the sale of MoD airfields to exporters of livestock; and if he will make a statement on this point. [38704]

Mr. Soames: We have no plans to allow the use of operational MoD airfields for the export of livestock from the United Kingdom. I am not aware of any specific offer from companies to purchase any redundant airfield for this purpose at this time.

Defence Expenditure

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will commission a study of the cost savings that would be made from linking British defence expenditure to the average level of out western European partners. [39250]

Mr. Soames: No. United Kingdom defence expenditure is determined by the Government's assessment of the UK's defence needs and spending priorities. It would be wrong to link defence spending to the average of other countries' defence spending.

RAF 100 Squadron

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library the specification used under the market-testing initiative in respect of contracts involving RAF 100 Squadron; how many firms bid for these contracts; and which firms were successful. [38378]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The statement of requirement used in respect of the strategic contractorisation of target towing facilities at RAF 100 Squadron is an integral part of the contract which has been placed and is, therefore, considered to be contracts in confidence. As such, it cannot be made available in the Library of the House. Six contractors bid for the contract, which was won by Hunting Aviation.

Regimental and Military Museums

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money will be provided out of MOD funds to pay for staff in each regimental or military museum in the United Kingdom in 1995–96. [38382]

Mr. Soames: Seventy regimental museums will receive a total of around £1.6 million funding from MOD towards staff costs in 1995–96. Separately, MOD provides a grant in aid of £3.2 million to the National Army Museum which is applied to the museum's operating costs and purchase grant.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if we will ensure that his Department's funding for the museum of the Royal Dragon Guards and Prince of Wales, Own Regiment in York will be maintained in future years at a sufficient level to keep this joint regimental museum open; [38384]

(2) what are the terms of reference of his Department's review of funding for regimental museums; and when the conclusions of the review will be made public. [38383]

Mr. Soames: An internal MOD study earlier this year suggested, that savings might be possible in MOD funding for regimental and corps museums. Work is continuing on how savings could be achieved and the impact this would have on the continued existence of these museums, but no decisions have yet been made.

Tornado Aircraft

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the location of the Tornado event to be held in 1996. [38124]

Mr. Soames: We are not aware of any substantial Tornado event in 1996.

Navigator Flying Training

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to privatise Royal Air Force navigator flying training. [38142]

Mr. Soames: There are no plans to privatise Royal Air Force navigator flying training.

Air Miss, Humberside

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the US air force F15 aircraft involved in an air miss incident with an Icelandair Boeing 737 off Humberside on 19 August 1994 were found to have penetrated controlled airspace; and if he will make a statement. [38141]

Mr. Soames: The United States air force aircraft was operating legitimately within controlled airspace under air traffic control instruction at the time of the alleged incident. The pilot of the civil airliner has now withdrawn his report of an air miss, based on air traffic control evidence.

Army Careers Information Office, York

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends to close the Army careers information office in Micklegate, York. [38385]

Mr. Soames: No decision has yet been taken on when the Army careers information office in Micklegate, York should close.

Jaguar Aircraft (Stress Corrosion)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the circumstances of the damage to Jaguar T.2A, serial number XX839; and what is the current status of the aircraft. [38119]

Mr. Soames: During a routine major servicing of Jaguar T.2A, serial number XX839, some relatively small stress corrosion cracks were identified in part of the fuselage structure. The aircraft is being held temporarily at St. Athan awaiting delivery of repair parts from the manufacturer.

RAF Waddington

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what hydrazine incident response capability exists at RAF Waddington; and how many hydrazine incidents have occurred at RAF Waddington in each of the last three years. [38143]

Mr. Soames: All RAF Waddington's fire crash and rescue personnel are fully trained—and continue to receive refresher training—in hydrazine emergency handling procedures. Apart from a minor incident on 17 October 1995, which was successfully handled in accordance with standard procedures, there have been no other incidents involving hydrazine at RAF Waddington in the past three years.

Flying Regulation Breaches

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the dates, locations, numbers, types and nationalities of aircraft, nature of the breach, disciplinary actions taken against aircrew and lessons learned from each of the confirmed breaches of flying regulations other than low flying regulations during 1994. [38139]

Mr. Soames: Unlike breaches of low flying regulations, no cental record is maintained of breaches of general flying regulations which are much more wide ranging and varied. As a result, the information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, details of incidents with flight safety implications are notified to the appropriate authority.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the methods of BSE transmission since the ban on certain forms of offal in animal feed. [36422]

Mrs. Browning: This Department has an extensive programme of research on BSE. Results are published in scientific journals. Details are also contained in the latest report of the Spongiform Encephalopathies Advisory Committee—"Transmissible Spongiform Encephalopathies—A Summary of Present Knowledge and Research", published in February this year. In addition, they are detailed in the regular reports on BSE which MAFF makes to the House. Copies of these reports are available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases have been discovered of prohibited forms of offal being put into animal feeds since the ban was introduced, and if he will make a statement. [36426]

Mrs. Browning: We are not aware of any cases of Specified Bovine Offals being put directly into animal feeds since the ban was introduced. However, the fact that we are continuing to see cases of BSE in animals born after the introduction of the feed ban in July 1988 suggests that there has been some continued leakage of BSE infective material into feed. The results of recent surveillance at slaughterhouses and head boning plants, announced in the House on 19 July, Official Report, 19 July 1995, columns 1467–68, also suggested that this was a possibility.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the rate of enforcement of the ban on the use of certain forms of offal in animals feeds, with particular reference to restricting BSE transmission; and if he will make a statement. [36424]

Mrs. Browning: The state veterinary service regularly monitors the enforcement of the controls in slaughterhouse and elsewhere, on specified bovine offals, which are required to be separated and disposed of by incineration or burial. The results of recent surveillance of slaughterhouses and head boning plants were announced in the House on 19 July, Official Report, 19 July 1995, columns 1467–48.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of maternally transmitted BSE have been recorded in the United Kingdom herd, for each of the last seven years; and how many cases of BSE have been recorded for each of the last seven years. [36421]

Mrs. Browning: There is no experimental or epidemiological evidence available to confirm that maternal transmission of BSE occurs. Results of research to test the hypothesis that the disease might be transmitted maternally will not be available until 1997, when a definitive cohort study will be completed. It is already clear, however, that if maternal transmission does occur, it does so too infrequently to be detected with current statistical techniques or to sustain the epidemic.

The following list of the number of confirmed cases of BSE in United Kingdom up to 13 October 1995. The cases prior to 21 June 1988 are recorded by date of clinical onset of disease and the cases thereafter are recorded by date of restriction.

1987: 435
1988: 2,469
1989: 7,137
1990: 14,181
1991: 25,032
1992: 36,681
1993: 34,371
1994: 23,943
1995: 9,602

It is not possible to identify routes of transmission for each individual suspect given the long incubation period BSE, and considerable potential for exposure via feed. Evidence gathered when individual cases are investigated forms the basis of a statistical analysis on a population basis.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the budget of his Department to ensure regulations relating to BSE and the use of offal in feeds have been enforced, and if he will make a statement. [36425]

Mrs. Browning: The BSE manpower budget for this Department, excluding agencies, for the current financial year is £4.2 million. It is not possible, without disproportionate costs, to identify enforcement costs separately.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the budget and how many staff are involved in monitoring the prohibited forms of bovine offal entering human food. [36727]

Mrs. Browning: Enforcement of the controls on specified bovine offal in slaughterhouses and head boning plants is the responsibility of the Meat Hygiene Service. The MHS currently employs 778 red meat inspectors in day to day enforcement work at red meat plants—pig, sheep and cattle—which includes the enforcement of the SBO controls. The cost of this work is not recoverable from the industry.

The total budget for these staff for the current financial year is £12,180,000. It is not possible, without disproportionate costs, to identify from among the non-recoverable costs the enforcement costs from the SBO controls alone.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in how many cases in the last five years prohibited forms of offal have been found entering human food; and what fines have been imposed. [36728]

Mrs. Browning: No such cases have been notified to this Department. However, until 1 April 1995 local authorities were responsible for enforcement of the controls on specified bovine offal in slaughterhouses and head boning plants. Information on enforcement before that date is not therefore held centrally. It is not possible, without disproportionate costs, to collect and collate this information from local authorities.

Since 1 April 1995 the Meat Hygiene Service has been responsible for enforcement of the controls. We know of no instances where SBOs have entered the human food chain. We are aware of four cases where small amounts of SBO had been left attached to carcases after dressing but these were properly removed before the carcases left the premises.

Codex Alimentarius Agreement

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans his Department has to establish maximum residue limits for hormones in meats following the recent codex alimentarius agreement. [36423]

Mrs. Browning: Decisions by the Codex Alimentarius Commission to adopt maximum residue limits are not binding on codex member countries. They are taken into account when the Community establishes MRLs under regulation (EEC) 2377/90 which are then applicable in all member states. Before MRLs can be considered, applications must be submitted by pharmaceutical companies.

The use of hormonal growth promoters in food producing animals has been banned throughout the Community since 1988. It also applies to meat and meat products imported from third countries. As a result of the ban, Community MRLs have not been set for growth-promoting hormones and residues surveillance is based on analysis to the minimum level of quantification. It is for the European Commission to consider whether or not the Codex decisions will have any effect on the current prohibition.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what subsidies were paid out for environmentally sensitive areas in England in (a) 1992–93, (b) 1993–94, (c) 1994–95 and (d) 1995–96; and how many individuals were recipients of these payments in these years. [37130]

Mr. Boswell: The Ministry paid the following sums to ESA agreement holders in England:

	Amount paid (£000s)	Number of recipients
1992–93	10,461	3,265
1993–94	16,235	4,514
1994–95	19,367	6,141

The above figures relate to United Kingdom financial years (i.e. 1 April to 31 March).

It is estimated that £30 million will be paid in 1995–96 to about 7,000 recipients.

Game Rearing Industry

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has had from the game rearing industry regarding the ban on Emtryl. [37430]

Mrs. Browning: We have received a number of representations from the game rearing industry, including the Game Conservancy Trust and the Game Farmers Association.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence Ministers received from the Veterinary Medicines Directorate about the ban on dimetridazole. [37428]

Mrs. Browning: We are aware of the concerns over this ban, and a number of options to overcome the consequential problems of the game rearing industry are under active consideration.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effect of Emtryl on the economies of those areas of rural Britain where game birds are bred. [37432]

Mrs. Browning: To official assessment has been made. We are aware however, that the banning of dimetridazole could lead to flock losses as high as 50 per cent. or more. This is why we are working with game bird organisations to try to find a solution.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the policy of Her Majesty's Government in respect of the recent European Union ban on the chemical dimetridazole sold under the trade name Emtryl. [37422]

Mrs. Browning: The Government opposed the proposal to prohibit the therapeutic use of dimetridazole—Emtryl—by its inclusion in annex IV of Council regulation (EEC) 2377/90, on the grounds that the scientific data could enable a maximum residue limit to be set to protect consumers and because of the animal welfare problems which would result from a ban.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what weighting was given to the United Kingdom position on the European Union decision to ban Emtryl. [37431]

Mrs. Browning: The position of the UK was accorded its due weight under the normal procedures of the Community. Decisions on entries in the annexes of Council regulation (EEC) 2377/90 are taken at regulatory committee by qualified majority voting. If referred to the Council of Agriculture Ministers, the contre filet procedure applies.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what alternative drugs are available to breeders of game birds to control hexamitiasis and trichomoniasis in larger flocks. [37429]

Mrs. Browning: We are not aware that there are any satisfactory alternative medicinal products available to the game rearing industry for the treatment of these conditions.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if Her Majesty's Government will now take steps to suspend the European Union ban on Emtryl pending further investigations on alternative disease control agents. [37433]

Mrs. Browning: We are considering a number of options to try to assist the game rearing industry as a result of this prohibition.

Pesticides

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what monitoring is carried out by or for his Department to ensure (a) that pesticide residues on horticultural produce remain below recommended levels and (b) that the amount of pesticides sprayed on to horticultural crops remains below recommended levels. [37747]

Mrs. Browning: Monitoring of both home-produced and imported food for pesticide residues is carried out for the Government's working party on pesticide residues. Some 3,000 to 4,000 samples are analysed each year at a cost of over £2 million.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research has been carried out by or on behalf of his Department into the effects on humans of pesticide levels which exceed recommended levels, with special reference to the long-term low-level effects of pesticides on humans. [37745]

Mrs. Browning: The Department does not carry out or directly commission any such research. However, before any pesticide is permitted for use, a thorough assessment of its potential impact on humans, including long-term effects, is carried out based on research carried out by the applicant company on that specific pesticide. This assessment will identify the level at which no adverse effects will be seen and use is only permitted if it is expected to lead to human exposure substantially less than that level. The assessment also identifies the effects that may begin to be seen at high levels.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what guidelines there are to control (a) the amount of pesticides sprayed on to horticultural crops and (b) the levels of pesticide residues on fresh fruit and vegetables. [37748]

Mrs. Browning: For each approved pesticide the maximum permitted usage rate, which may vary from crop to crop, will be set out on the product label. In some cases, a minimum interval between application of a pesticide and harvesting a crop will also be specified. It is an offence for a pesticide user to breach these statutory conditions of use. The conditions are set so as to ensure that, when observed, they do not give rise to unacceptable levels of residue on and in crops.

For many pesticides, statutory maximum residue levels have been set which reflect the greatest amount of pesticide that should be found in a crop which has not been treated according to the approved conditions of use. The statutory code of practice for the safe use of pesticides on farms and holdings provides general guidance on the application of pesticides.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what pesticide products have been licensed for use in horticultural production since 1972; and what is the proprietary name, the manufacturing company, the exact ingredients and the date of the licence in each case. [37746]

Mrs. Browning: Pesticides approved as of 31 October 1994 are listed in the HMSO publication "Pesticides 1995". However, the detailed information requested could only be provided at disproportionate cost. Ministers only approve the marketing or use of a pesticide if thorough evaluation establishes that it is effective and poses no unacceptable risk to human beings, non-target species or the wider environment.

Pigs

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are his plans with regard to the welfare of pigs. [38004]

Mrs. Browning: The Welfare of Livestock Regulations 1994, S.I 2126 implemented EU directive 91/630 laying down minimum standards for the protection of pigs, including minimum space requirements for weaners and rearing pigs which will fully come into force on 1 January 1998. The regulations also maintained the requirement that the use of sow stalls and tethers should be phased out by the end of 1988 and banned the use of sweat box systems from 1 July this year.

We await with interest the outcome of the Farm Animal Welfare Council's review of the welfare of outdoor pigs.

The EU directive is due for review in 1997 and we have reminded the Commission of the importance of keeping to this timetable. We remain committed to securing harmonisation of EU legislation on the basis of our own high standards.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to repeal or amend the prohibition on sow stalls and tethers provided for by the Welfare of Livestock Regulations 1994; and if he will make a statement. [38007]

Mrs. Browning: We have no such plans.

Milk and Dairy Inspections

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to bring milk and dairy inspection charges into line with those in Scotland. [38150]

Mr. Baldry: None. Inspections in England and Wales are carried out by ADAS and the costs recovered from producers. In Scotland, inspections are carried out by environmental health officers and the costs met by the local food authorities.

Intervention Stocks

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next expects the Intervention Board to release for distribution stocks of (a) butter, (b) cheese and (c) wine; and if he will make a statement. [38295]

Mr. Baldry: I have no such plans for release of stocks of butter from intervention for distribution under the surplus food scheme. Neither cheese nor wine is held in intervention in the United Kingdom.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information his Department possesses as to the quantities of nuclear wastes dumped (a) in Hurd deep off Alderney and (b) the Beaufort dyke off Scotland and Northern Ireland by the United Kingdom; and if he will place in the Library copies of all reports on the disposal of radioactive waste in these two locations held by his Department. [39254]

Mr. Baldry: No nuclear waste has been disposed of in the Beaufort dyke. Very low-level radioactive waste was disposed of in the Hurd deep from 1950 to 1963. Full details are contained in "Report of the Independent Review of Disposal of Radioactive Waste in there Northeast Atlantic" by Professor F. G. T. Holliday. This report was placed in the Library of the House on publication in 1984.

Orange Juice

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the price of orange juice; what assessment he has made of future trends in prices; and which authorities influence the price charged in the United Kingdom. [39279]

Mrs. Browning: There is a wide variety of types of orange juice, including premium juice made from freshly squeezed oranges, long-life juice made from imported concentrate, and mixtures with other fruit juices. The retail price depends on the type of juice, the cost of manufacture and packaging, the pricing and promotional policy of the retailer and other factors. I see no way of predicting future price trends with confidence, given the number of variables involved.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the amount of the import levy on non-EC orange juice being imposed in the present month; what will be the impact on retail prices; what is the object of the levy; and what assessment he has made of whether the levy conforms to the EU's general agreement on tariffs and trade obligations. [37630]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 19 October 1995]: Imports of orange juice into the European Union from non-preferential sources are at present subject to an ad valorem duty of either 18.4 per cent., or 40.6 per cent., depending on the nature of the product, and in most cases a specific duty of 24.8 ecu—currently about £20—per 100 kg. Preferential arrangements apply to imports from a range of countries, for example imports from Israel within a quota are subject only to any specific duty payable.

Given the range of duty rates and variety of product lines concerned, the impact on retail prices cannot readily be assessed.

These duties form part of a system of Community preference that has existed for many years: on 1 July 1995, the variable levy that existed before that date was replaced by a specific duty required under the GATT settlement. I am satisfied that these duties conform to the EU's obligations under that settlement.

Live Animal Transport

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the average journey distance of a quadraped livestock animal to its place of slaughter for each of the last 15 years. [38422]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 20 October 1995]: The Department does not collect such information and has no plans to do so.

Abattoirs

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of abattoirs in the UK by convenient capacity categories for each of the last 15 years. [38445]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 20 October 1995]: The Department does not hold figures on the individual or total capacity of slaughterhouses in Great Britain and has no plans to collect this information centrally. The Meat and Livestock Commission's annual publication entitled "The Abattoir Industry in Great Britain"—available from the MLC—ISBN 0904650.33.2—contains information on the numbers of British abattoirs for the period requested, and discusses the changes in capacity that have occurred since 1982.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Short-time Working

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimates her Department has made of the number of companies currently on short-time working; and how many employees are affected by such short-time working. [37513]

Mr. Forth: In August 1995—provisional—8,000 operatives were affected by short-time working. Further information can be obtained from table 1.11 of the Employment Gazette, copies of which are in the House of Commons Library. Figures for the number of companies on short-time working are not available.

Sir David Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much was spent per (a) primary and (b) secondary school pupil in each of the local education authorities in England in the most recent year for which figures are available at constant prices. [37665]

Mr. Robin Squire: The following table sets out for each LEA in England the net institutional expenditure per pupil in LEA maintained pre-primary/primary schools and secondary schools.

Sir David Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much was spent per pupil in Staffordshire (a) in primary schools and (b) in secondary schools in each of the past 25 years, at constant prices. [37671]

Mr. Squire: The table shows expenditure by Staffordshire local education authority on (a) pre-primary and primary pupils combined, and on (b) secondary pupils from 1974–75 and 1993–94, the latest year for which figures are available. Equivalent figures prior to 1974–75 are not readily available centrally. The figures differ from those in my answer of 28 February 1995, Official Report, column 536, because firm figures are now available for 1993–94, and because a revised GDP deflator has been applied.

Surplus School Places

Sir David Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many surplus school places there were and what was their cost in each local education authority in England in the most recent year for which figures are available. [37666]

Mrs. Gillan: For the numbers of surplus school places in each local education authority I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to the hon. Member for St. Ives (Mr. Harris) on 9 December 1994, Official Report, columns 410–14. At a national level, the average premises-related cost of maintaining a surplus place is estimated to be £182 a year for a primary school and £303 a year for a secondary school at 1995–96 prices. The actual cost and the scope for realising savings from removal of surplus places in practice in each local education authority will depend on local circumstances.

Barnsley and Doncaster TEC

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many of the directors of Barnsley and Doncaster TEC have received payments from TEC funds for services provided by the TEC; what these were and when; and if such payments will continue in the current financial year, and in 1996–97. [38293]

Mr. Paice: The activities of Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council are governed by the TEC licensing agreement, which provides that no director, except where he holds office as managing director or chief executive of the TEC, shall receive any remuneration from the TEC or a subsidiary of the TEC from payments made to the TEC by the Secretary of State. All directors give their time freely for TEC and TEC partnership activities. The chief executive's remuneration is reported in the TEC's annual report, a copy of which is placed in the Library.

Careers Service Inspectorate

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when the policy of publishing the inspectors' reports following careers service inspections, mentioned in the answer of 30 November 1993, Official Report, column 518, was changed and when it was reported to the House. [38318]

Mr. Paice: The policy of publishing inspection reports has not changed. Inspections of aspects of careers service work will start later this year and reports will be published. The Chief Inspector of Careers Service has published two annual reports on the work of the Careers Service since the enactment of the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Act.

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will the public reports by the inspectorate of careers services since the enactment of the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Act 1993. [38155]

Mr. Paice: The public reports by the inspectorate of careers services since the enactment of the TURER Act 1993 are as follows:

The Careers Service annual report 1994–95

The Careers Service annual report 1993–94

Pay Bargaining

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will provide in respect of her plan for pay delegation submitted to the Treasury (a) a description of the staff in each bargaining unit covered by the plan, distinguishing staff in Headquarters functions, agencies and agency candidates, and in other identifiable business units and (b) proposals for the trade union recognition in each bargaining unit and the negotiating machinery to be put in place in each bargaining unit. [38275]

Mr. Robin Squire: The pay delegation plan for the Department for Education and Employment bargaining unit, excluding the Employment Service, includes the following staff, covered by the union agreement described:

Indigenous Populations

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans the Government have to ratify ILO convention 169 on indigenous and tribal populations. [38317]

Mr. Forth: ILO convention 169 has no practical application in the UK. The Government do not propose to ratify it.

School Internet Links

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, how many schools and what percentage of the total are currently linked to the Internet; what is the cost of linking those schools not hitherto connected; and if she will make a statement. [38584]

Mr. Robin Squire: Estimates of the number of schools currently connected to the Internet, and other relevant issues, will be covered in a paper to be published next month by the UK Education Departments outlining the way forward for superhighways in education.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress has been made on the introduction of the formulation of a national policy on the provision of special education. [38790]

Mr. Forth: The Education Act 1993 requires the Secretary of State to issue a code of practice on the identification and assessment of special educational needs. The code, which was issued in May 1994 and came into effect from September that year, gives practical guidance to local education authorities, schools and other agencies on identifying, assessing and monitoring all children with SEN. The Department is monitoring carefully the implementation of the code.

Unemployment Benefit Fraud

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the total amount saved by unemployment benefit fraud investigators in the last financial year; what evidence is required for each individual signing off unemployment benefit to be counted in the total figure for unemployed fraud figures; what is the assumed number of weeks that a unemployed fraudulent claim would have on average continued if not investigated; what research is the basis for the assumed number of weeks that an unemployed fraudulent claim would have on average continued if not investigated and what consideration has been given to the continued accuracy of this research; and what safeguards exist against Department of Social Security inspectors exaggerating the benefit savings for investigations into fraudulent benefit claims in an attempt to meet Department targets. [37592]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 24 October 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about benefit fraud investigation.

In 1994/95 78,231 clients withdrew their claim to benefit after being investigated by Employment Service (ES) Inspectors. This resulted in gross benefit savings of £92,061,095. After deducting the cost of the benefit fraud organisation, the net savings were £64,556,652.

Safeguard exist through the checking and validation process performed by fraud staff, their managers and Audit. ES Inspectors authorise each saving/sign off, provided there is a link between the saving/sign-off and the last recorded action of the investigation and the claim is closed or modified within 10 working days of that action.

Inspector Manager, who manage 10–15 ES Inspectors, check a minimum of 10% of all cases where a saving/sign-off is claimed to ensure that they are valid. All client prosecutions are authorised by Senior Inspector Managers who also arrange for an annual audit of savings/sign-off cases, where a proportion of cases are checked for validity. The cases checked include some which have not previously been validated.

Benefit savings are calculated by multiplying the weekly amount of benefit in payment, at the time the client signs-off/modifies their claim, by 22. This 22 week figure was identified by Department of Social Security research in 1982 and represents the number of weeks clients would have remained on the register if they had not been investigated by ES Inspectors.

Since 1982 there have been several similar studies undertaken by Benefits Agency and the ES, the last such study was in 1994. This is an ongoing process and has confirmed that the 22 week multiplier is still valid.

I hope this is helpful.

Social Affairs Council

Ms Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on the outcome of the EU Social Affairs Council of 5 October. [37709]

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury St. Edmunds (Mr. Spring) on 19 October 1995, Official Report, column 379.

Employment Service Agency

Mr. Hinchcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many persons unemployed for over (a) one year and (b) two years were placed in employment by the Employment Service agency in 1994–95. [38526]

Mr. Forth: In Great Britain during the financial year 1994–95 the Employment Service placed into jobs 556,600 people who had been claimant unemployed for six months or more. This represents an increase of 20 per cent. over the previous year. This is the extent of the readily available information.

School Premises Regulations

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate she has made of the cost of ensuring that all schools meet the requirements of the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981. [38765]

Mrs. Gillan: The information about school premises that is available to the Department is not sufficient to allow such an estimate to be made.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many responses she has had to the consultation on the Education (School Premises) Regulations; and how many were in favour of proposed changes. [38767]

Mrs. Gillan: A total of 111 responses were received by the Department before the consultation period formally came to an end on 18 October. They are still being analysed. We shall make available a summary of the responses in the usual way.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many schools meet the requirements in the Education (School Premises) Regulations in respect of (a) space allocation, (b) washrooms and (c) staff rooms. [38768]

Mrs. Gillan: The information requested is not held centrally.

Education Authority Capital Spending

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what amounts have been requested by way of capital spending in 1996–97 by each local education authority; and what has been the total amount requested in England. [38766]

Mrs. Gillan: The closing date for the submission of capital bids by local education authorities was 13 October. The bids are therefore still being analysed by the Department.

Nursery Education

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what method of funding the Government envisage for the new nursery classes under the consultation for removing the requirements to publish statutory proposals to establish nursery classes in the maintained, grant-maintained, voluntary and county school sector. [39148]

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is currently consulting interested parties on removing the requirement for the maintained sector to publish statutory proposals to establish new nursery classes. The consultation letter discusses a number of options and their funding implications. These will be considered in light of the responses to the consultation letter.

Student Union Membership

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students have chosen to exercise their right not to be a member of a students union following the enactment on 21 September 1994 of the Education Act 1994, section 22, subsection 2(c) relating to the rights of students; and from which institutions unions students have exercised this right. [39147]

Mr. Forth: This information is not available as it is not collected centrally.

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what factors led her not to intervene in the case of Mr. Michael Johnson's appearance before the industrial tribunal on 23 May; what factors underlay her delay in intervening in the case under the terms of the Education Act 1944 and the Education Reform Act 1988; when she expects to intervene in this case; and what factors allowed her to intervene in the case of Jennifer Watson under this legislation. [39146]

Mr. Robin Squire: It is not my right hon. Friend's practice to seek to usurp the functions of industrial tribunals through the exercise of her powers under sections 68 and 99 of the Education Act 1944. My right hon. Friend is still considering certain points of law in the case of Mr. Johnson and hopes to conclude her consideration in the near future. In the case of Mrs. Watson, my right hon. Friend concluded that the appointment of a particular governor to the disciplinary panel constituted a breach of natural justice of a kind that no sensible governing body acting with due appreciation of its statutory duties could have decided to adopt.

School Leavers

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many school leavers there were in each of the past five years from maintained and independent sectors; and what percentage in each category were intending to enter degree or teacher training courses. [38901]

Mr. Robin Squire: Information on school leavers is no longer collected by the Department. The numbers of school leavers in maintained and independent sector schools in England for the latest two years for which information was available are as follows:

Number of school leavers of which intended to enter degree or teacher training courses

	1990–91	1991–92
Maintained schools	494,130 11 per cent.	474,450 13 per cent.
Independent schools	47,740 46 per cent.	44,750 54 per cent.

Employee Fraud

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the total number of cases of all forms of fraud committed by employees of her (a) Department, (b) agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies, for each year from 1991–92 to 1994–95; and for each of these years, what was the total monetary sum (i) misappropriated in such frauds and (ii) subsequently recovered. [39140]

Mr. Forth: The number of cases of all forms of fraud committed by Department for Education and Employment staff for each year from 1991–92 to 1994–95 and the sums involved and subsequently recovered are as follows:

	Number of cases	Amount involved £	Amount recovered £

Notes:

1. The figures for DFEE have been produced from the annual Treasury returns submitted by the Employment Department and the Department for Education.
2. Where thefts have occurred but no perpetrator identified these cases have been excluded.
3. The figures represent the year in which the frauds were reported to Treasury, not necessarily when they were committed.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many pupils attended each school taking part in the assisted places scheme in the last academic year; how many in each case were on an assisted place; and what was the percentage on the assisted places scheme. [37933]

Mrs. Gillan [holding answer 19 October 1995]: The information requested, which relates to England only and to the academic year 1994–95, is given in the following table.

Careers Service

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the total spending on the Careers Service by local authorities in England and Wales in each financial year since 1990–91; and what is the expected expenditure in 1995–96. [38256]

Mr. Paice [holding answer 23 October 1995]: From 1 April 1994, the duty of providing the Careers Services became the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Employment. Prior to that date, services were funded via local education authorities through the rate support grant and these figures are unhypothecated.

The estimated outturn of spend by the Employment Department for 1994–95 for the Careers Service in England was £187.4 million. In 1995–96, the Department for Education and Employment plans to spend £211.2 million on the Careers Service.

Responsibility for the Careers Service in Wales rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was their spending on the Careers Service through each of the five West Yorkshire metropolitan district councils in each financial year since 1990–91; and what is the expected expenditure in 1995–96 for each of the individual councils. [38257]

Mr. Paice [holding answer 23 October 1995]: From 1 April 1994, the duty of providing the Careers Service became the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Employment. Prior to that date, services were funded via Local education authorities through the rate support grant which is unhypothecated.

Spend under Careers Service instruments of direction issued by the Secretary of State for Employment to the five West Yorkshire metropolitan district councils in 1994–95 was:

Bradford: £1,598,302
Calderdale: £546,000
Kirklees: £1,103,000
Leeds: £1,849,991
Wakefield: £985,000

In 1995–96 only Leeds and Wakefield remain under direction from the Secretary of State. Their budget allocations are:

Leeds: £2,041,000
Wakefield: £1,126,000

Since 1 April 1995, careers services in Bradford have been delivered by Careers Bradford Ltd. and in Calderdale and Kirklees by Calderdale and Kirklees Careers Service Partnership Ltd. These are both private limited companies and details of their income and expenditure will be available in their annual reports next year.

Residual payments to local authorities for 1994–95 activities have been made in 1995–96 as follows:

Bradford: £144,700
Calderdale: £45,977
Kirklees: £100,001

Additional expenditure relating to careers libraries and careers guidance has been made available through the training and enterprise councils in West Yorkshire. In 1994–95 this amounted to: £1,622,725. In 1995–96 the allocation is £894,721. For 1995–96 the careers guidance element has been included in the Careers Service contracts for two TEC areas.

Cooking Fumes (Cancer)

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what research is being undertaken by the Health and Safety Executive into the possible occupational cancer risk for cooks from carcinogenic chemicals in cooking fumes. [37992]

Sir Paul Beresford: I have been asked to reply.

The Health and Safety Executive is undertaking a review of the published literature on a number of potential health problems which might affect those occupationally engaged in food handling and preparation. The incidence of cancer is one area under scrutiny. Once that review is completed, the HSE will consider whether there is cause for particular concern and, if so, whether further research could contribute to the control of risks to those working in this area.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the latest estimate of the number of medical examinations for the all-work test of incapacity which have been scheduled but have not yet taken place. [38508]

Mr. Burt: The administration of incapacity benefit is a matter for Mr. Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ursula Brennan to Mr. Keith Bradley, dated 23 October 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the latest estimate of the number of medical examinations for the all-work test of incapacity which have been scheduled but have not yet taken place. Mr. Mathison is away from Leeds on Benefits Agency business and he has asked me to reply on his behalf.

The number of medical examinations scheduled but not yet carried out as at 1 October 1995 was 64,247. This figure is made up of four weeks appointments scheduled from 1 October 1995 and includes an extra 33 per cent, which our experience has shown, fail to attend their appointment. The figure is provisional and subject to change.

Mr. Litherland: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people (a) passed and (b) failed the new incapacity benefits all work test in the Greater Manchester areas. [38587]

Mr. Burt: The administration of incapacity benefit is a matter for Mr. Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Ursula Brennan to Mr. Robert Litherland, dated 23 October 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the number of people that a) passed and b) failed the new Incapacity Benefit All Work Test in the Greater Manchester area. Mr. Mathison is away from Leeds on Benefits Agency business and he has asked me to reply on his behalf.

Information is not available in the form that you requested for the Greater Manchester area. However, I can tell you that, for the period from 13 April to 30 September 1995, 16,984 people passed the all work test and 1,556 failed the all work test in the Manchester Lead Site. The Lead Site includes the Manchester Disability Benefits Centre and the following Benefits Agency District Offices, many of which are located within the Greater Manchester area:

South Cheshire
Manchester Central Manchester Trinity
Manchester South
Oldham
Sale/East Cheshire
Salford
Stockport
Tameside
Blackburn/Accrington
Bolton/Farnworth
Burnley/Pendle/Rossendale
West Pennine
Wigan/Leigh

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many medical reports in respect of incapacity benefit have been carried out in each region; what is the average delay in producing a report; and how many are outstanding at the latest date. [37090]

Mr. Burt: The administration of incapacity benefit is a matter for Mr. Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Jeff Rooker, dated 23 October 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about how many medical reports in respect of Incapacity Benefit have been carried out in each region; what is the average delay in producing a report; and how many are outstanding at the latest date.

Figures for the Benefits Agency's Medical Services (BAMS) operations are not available by region, they are however, available for each of the 11 major medical services centres. The BAMS computer system records the number of medical examinations carried out rather than the number of reports. A medical report is produced following each medical examination and reports are normally written on the day the examination is carried out.

Figures for the number of medical examinations carried out this year, in the period ending 31 August, are at Annex A.

However, figures are not available for the average delay in producing a report, nor for the number of reports outstanding.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if leaflet 1B214 describing the new all work test is available in all DSS/Benefits Agency offices, including those in Birmingham; and from what date. [36616]

Mr. Burt: IB 214 is a detailed leaflet on the incapacity benefit all-work medical test, produced primarily for advisers. The leaflet has been available since May to anyone who rings the freeline number—0800 868868—and it has been available from DSS local offices since mid-August 1995.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how the new incapacity benefit will affect those suffering from asthma. [38312]

Mr. Burt: The new medical test of incapacity takes account of the effect of all medical conditions. The basis of the test is the effect of a medical condition on the ability to work and not he medical condition itself. The symptoms of conditions such as asthma may vary in intensity across time from mild to severe. The new test is designed to take account of the variability of symptoms and is not a snapshot of the claimant's capacity to work at a point in time.

Bronchitis and Emphysema

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to receive the report from the advisory body on the review of the Chronic Bronchitis and Emphysema Regulations; and if he will make a statement. [36740]

Mr. Roger Evans: I understand that the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council expects to complete its review and submit a report to Ministers in the new year. The Government will consider carefully any recommendations that the council makes.

Lone Parent Premium

Mr. John Marshall : To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people received the single parent's premium in each since its inception; and what has been the cost of the premium in each of these years. [37159]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information available is set out in the table.

The lone parent premium forms part of the calculation of the total potential amount of benefit in income support, housing benefit and council tax benefit. It is not possible to apportion costs between the various allowances and premiums that make up the total potential benefit in those cases where the amount paid is less than the total.

Notes:

1. Sample size 1 in 100.
2. Council tax benefit replaced community charge benefit from April 1993. Above figures include community charge benefit.
3. Figures have been rounded to the nearest 10,000.
4. Housing benefit/council tax benefit/community charge benefit figures include estimates due to the data collection procedure in Scotland.
5. The housing benefit/council tax benefit/community charge benefit analysis excludes recipients of housing benefit/council tax benefit with income support and the overlap between housing benefit/council tax benefit/community charge benefit.
6. Housing benefit/community charge benefit figures are not provided for 1988–89 as it is not possible to accurately estimate the overlap between housing benefit and community charge benefit, at that time community charge benefit applied only in Scotland.

Share Option Schemes

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated current cost to the Exchequer in (a) lost income tax and (b) lost national insurance contributions of companies paying low-paid employees earning below tax and national insurance thresholds via share options. [37074]

Mr. Heald: The Inland Revenue does not hold centrally collated information regarding tax revenue forgone under relieved share option schemes. However, a sample of such schemes available to the Inland Revenue indicates that very few employees currently earning below income tax and national insurance thresholds realise gains under share option schemes which would otherwise have brought them into income tax. Information regarding national insurance contribution revenue forgone is not available.

Student Benefits

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many full-time higher education students suspended their courses due to sickness or personal circumstances and then claimed for social security benefits, for each year from 1985; and what is the total estimated annual cost of such claims. [38405]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is not available.

Pay Bargaining

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide in respect of his plan for pay delegation submitted to the Treasury (a) a description of the staff in each bargaining unit covered by the plan, distinguishing staff in headquarters functions, agencies and agency candidates, and in other identifiable business units and (b) proposals for trade union recognition in each bargaining unit and the negotiating machinery to be put in place in each bargaining unit. [38280]

Mr. Burt: In line with the Government's Civil Service White Papers, "Continuity and Change" and "Carrying Forward Continuity and Change", at April 1996 DSS will have six bargaining units; Benefits Agency, Child Support Agency, Contributions Agency, Information Technology Services Agency, War Pensions Agency and DSS headquarters. Each bargaining unit will have responsibility for all staff up to and including unified grade 6, including professional equivalents.

DSS headquarters will also have responsibility for the pay of staff in the five non-departmental public bodies related to the Department Central Adjudication Service, Independent Review Service for the Social Fund, Independent Tribunal Service, Pensions Ombudsman's office and the Executive Office of the Occupational Pensions Board.

All six units have recognised the Civil and Public Servants Association and the National Union of Civil and Public Servants for collective bargaining purposes. Additionally, BA, ITSA and headquarters have recognised the Association of First Division Civil Servants and BA and headquarters have recognised the Institution of Professionals, Managers and Specialists. The War Pensions Agency has a small number of staff represented by the Transport and General Workers Union whose pay will follow the settlement reached between the Ministry of Defence and the TGWU.

Those bargaining units which took delegation in 1994—BA, CA and ITSA—and in 1995—CSA and WPA—agreed bargaining mechanisms with unions for past negotiations and these have been either single-table or multi-table. Arrangements for 1996 will be agreed in due course.

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the number of recipients and cost

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is set out in the table.

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: I will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Maintenance Payments

[37591]

Mr. Heald: I will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Mr. Heald: The information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Government Publications

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which institutions in the USA are designated depositories for United Kingdom Government publications produced through HMSO. [38329]

Mr. Horam: Her Majesty's Stationery Office has no deposit arrangements with designated institutions in the USA or elsewhere overseas.

Pay Bargaining

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will provide, in respect of his plan for pay delegation submitted to the Treasury, (a) a description of the staff in each bargaining unit covered by the plan, distinguishing staff in HQ functions, agencies and agency candidates, and in other identifiable business units and (b) proposals for trade union recognition in each bargaining unit and the negotiating machinery to be put in place in each bargaining unit. [38281]

Mr. Horam: The Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster's responsibilities cover several Departments\agencies which are classed as separate bargaining units for the purpose of pay delegation:

Cabinet Office/Office of Public Service has 1,283 staff covering support, clerical, executive, specialist and open structure grades based in London, Norwich and Basingstoke. Meeting planned with the Association of First Division Civil Servants, the Institution of Professionals, Managers and Specialists, the National Union of Civil and Public Servants and the Civil and Public Services Association to discuss negotiating machinery.

Her Majesty's Stationery Office already has pay delegation for its clerical, executive and managerial staff which now number about 2,000 and for its printing, technical and maintenance staff which now number about 900. HOME DEPARTMENT

Victims Charter

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to update the victims charter. [38916]

Mr. Maclean: We hope to publish a new victims charter later this year.

Private Security Industry

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to respond to the first report from the Home Affairs Select Committee on the private security industry (HC, 1994–95, 17). [33915]

Mr. Maclean: The Government are studying in detail the recommendations of the Select Committee and will issue a substantive response as soon as possible.

Mr. Stephen Laudat

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of the transfer directives and any subsequent order made under the Mental Health Act 1983 section 47(1) in March 1992 in respect of Mr. Stephen Laudat, together with any relevant medical correspondence. [39342]

Miss Widdecombe: Medical reports recommending the transfer of a prisoner to hospital under the Mental Health Act 1983 are confidential and may not be placed in the Library. Information concerning the circumstances of Mr. Laudat's transfer to hospital is given in the report of the independent inquiry into the circumstances of the killing of Mr. Brian Bennett by Mr. Laudat. A transfer and restriction direction authorising Mr. Laudat's removal from HMP Wandsworth to the interim secure unit at Hackney hospital under sections 47 and 49 of the 1983 Act was issued on 19 March 1992.

Automatic Fingerprinting Recognition System

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those police authorities which are currently contracted to the computer firm Cambridge Neurodynamics Ltd. for its automatic fingerprinting recognition system; and if he will make a statement. [39036]

Mr. Maclean: I know of no police authority which has entered into a direct contractual relationship with Cambridge Neurodynamics Ltd. for automatic fingerprint recognition facilities; but I understand that CNL does provide such facilities to South Yorkshire police under the terms of a sub-contract.

Closed Circuit Television (Sale of Tapes)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to ensure that tapes from CCTVs installed in public places and which show members of the public in embarrassing or compromising positions are not sold on to commercial organisations for use in films or videos. [38906]

Mr. Maclean: Access to, and control of, images recorded by closed circuit television is a matter for the operator's of such systems to regulate. The Government strongly recommend that all CCTV operators adopt codes of practice suitable to their systems covering such matters as tape access and the use to which the images are put. Advice on developing such codes of practice is contained in the Home Office guidance booklet "CCTV—Looking Out For You", a copy of which is in the Library. Approximately 20,000 copies of the booklet have now been distributed.

Life Sentenced Prisoners

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many life sentenced prisoners released on licence in the period 1990 to 1994 were subsequently recalled. [38632]

Miss Widdecombe: Provisional data show that there were 485 life sentence prisoners released on licence between 1990 and 1994 inclusive; of whom 35 had their licence revoked and were subsequently returned to prison.

Women's Refuges

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment has been made by his Department of the match between the numbers of women's refuges and trends in the levels of domestic violence. [38468]

Mr Maclean: The official and ministerial groups on domestic violence are currently examining the extent of refuge provision. The underlying trends in domestic violence are particularly hard to ascertain due to the hidden nature of the crime. For this reason, measures are also being considered to improve the quality of the statistical information available on the level of domestic violence.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many interpreters are offered at women's refuges; in what regions they are offered; and what languages they speak. [38473]

Mr. Maclean: Information on the number of interpreters at women's refuges is not recorded centrally, and is a matter for individual refuges.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, what (a) medical facilities and (b) advice facilities are available at women's refuges. [38465]

Mr. Bowis: I have been asked to reply.

Occupants of women's refuges are entitled to the same range of medical facilities as any other member of the public who registers with a general practitioner. The range of advice facilities available varies considerably, depending to a large extent on the particular problems of the users of the refuge.

Prison Statistics

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the nationality of (a) men and (b) women who were being held in each prison in England and Wales as at 15 October for immigration offences; [38377]

(2) if he will list the number of (a) men and (b) women who were held in each prison in England and Wales as of 15 October, for immigration offences. [38389]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the temporary director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Cox, dated 25 October 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about the nationality and number of (a) men and (b) women who were held in each prison in England and Wales as of 15 October, for immigration offences.

The latest available provisional information is for 30 September 1995 and is given in the attached table, a copy of which will be placed in the Library of the House.

Confiscation Orders

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects agreement to be reached between Government Departments on the commitment to produce a confiscation order for the proceeds of crimes from counterfeit goods; and if he will make a statement. [34663]

Mr. Maclean: Such agreement has now been reached and I shall be bringing forward an order shortly which will add a number of counterfeiting and copyright offences to schedule 4 to the Criminal Justice Act 1988 thereby enabling a confiscation order to be made by magistrates courts.

2001 Census

Mr. Calcum Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration is being given to extending throughout the United Kingdom in the 2001 census the questions on Gaelic previously asked in Scotland in earlier censuses. [38310]

Mr. Sackville: I have been asked to reply.

The case for including questions in the 2001 census will be considered in 1998 on grounds of usefulness and acceptability to the public. Consultations with major users of census data are already underway. The Government's proposals will be published in a White Paper and the final selection will be subject to parliamentary approval. Far more questions are proposed than can be included. The burden on the public needs to be kept to a minimum.

Child Victims of Domestic Violence

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what procedures are in place to look after child victims of domestic violence and keep them away from their violent parents. [38467]

Mr. Bowis: I have been asked to reply.

The Government attach a high priority to the safety and welfare of children. The Children Act 1989 makes provision for the temporary or permanent removal of a child from its home if it is in the child's best interest to do so, and provides powers for local authorities to assist a person who is, or is likely, to cause a child to suffer ill treatment, to find alternative accommodation.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Barlow Clowes

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement setting out the legal aid funds which have been made available to Mr. Peter Clowes at each stage of the legal proceedings leading to his conviction for matters relating to the collapse of the Barlow Clowes companies and his subsequent attempts to obtain parole; if he will specify at each of those stages the sums paid or liable to become payable to Ms Cherie Booth QC, or practices in which she has an interest; if he will identify those specific steps which have been taken by the Legal Aid Board to verify Mr. Clowes' claims to have insufficient financial resources to finance his own legal advice; and if he will make it his policy to ensure that public funds are not in future used to finance parole applications for convicted fraudsters. [39324]

Mr. John M. Taylor: Details of legal aid paid to lawyers acting on behalf of Mr. Peter Clowes at each stage of the legal proceedings leading to his conviction for matters relating to the collapse of the Barlow Clowes companies are shown in the table. No payments have yet been made in support of the judicial review proceedings taken out against the Parole Board's decision not to grant parole to Mr. Clowes. Our records indicate that none of these payments were made, or are liable to be made, to Ms Cherie Booth QC or practices in which she has an interest. The Legal Aid Board has had inquiries made into Mr. Clowes' statement of means and has granted civil legal aid on the basis of the information provided. Further investigations are being carried out by the Benefits Agency. Because of the confidentiality provisions of the Legal Aid Act 1988 I cannot disclose any details of the application. Nor can I comment on whether or not legal aid should be used to support similar applications in future as every application for legal aid has to be judged on its individual merits.

Mr. Derek Laffey

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when Mr. Derek Campion Laffey, WPD reference M2/1124557, will be called to his appeal tribunal, date of appeal, 14 December 1993. [38517]

Mr. John M. Taylor: Mr. Laffey's appeal was received by the pensions appeal tribunals on 19 July 1995 and has been ready to be listed since 11 August. The appeal is expected to be heard at Leeds in March 1996.

Legal Education and Conduct

Mr. Nick Hawkins: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when the Lord Chancellor's advisory committee on legal education and conduct intends to publish its fourth annual report. [39994]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor's advisory committee on legal education and conduct will publish its fourth annual report on Friday 27 October. Copies will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Salaries

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make a statement about the salaries covered by the Ministerial and other Salaries Order. [39781]

Mr. Newton: During the debate on Members' salaries in November 1993, Official Report, 3 November 1993, column 457 I announced that, henceforth, the level of ministerial salaries should normally be increased by the same proportion as those of hon. Members, and that Ministers in the other place would receive the same increase, in cash terms, as their counterparts in this House receive from their combined ministerial and reduced parliamentary salaries.

That arrangement will be applied this year, giving Ministers in this House an increase of 2.7 per cent. and Ministers in the other place the corresponding cash increase.

The draft Ministerial and other Salaries Order to implement these changes from 1 January 1996 was laid in the House on Monday 23 October. The details are set out in the tables.

In accordance with the resolution of 3 November 1993, the same percentage increase will be applied to the reduced parliamentary salary paid to Commons Ministers and paid office holders, increasing it from the current rate of 24,985 to £25,660 on 1 January 1996.

Norman Shaw Buildings

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee how many bicycle racks are provided in the Norman Shaw South building for hon. Members and people working in the Norman Shaw North and Norman Shaw South buildings. [39225]

Mr. Michael J. Martin: Fifteen.

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee how many hon. Members and members of the staff of the House work in the Norman Shaw North and Norman Shaw South buildings. [39224]

Mr. Michael J. Martin: One hundred and thirty-eight hon. Members and 37 staff of the House work in these two buildings.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Pay Delegation

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will provide in respect of his plan for pay delegation submitted to the Treasury (a) a description of the staff in each bargaining unit covered by the plan, distinguishing staff in headquarters functions, agencies and agency candidates, and in other identifiable business units and (b) proposals for trade union recognition in each bargaining unit and the negotiating machinery to be put in place in each bargaining unit. [38283]

Mr. Tony Newton: The Privy Council Office pay delegation plan submitted to the Treasury covers all staff of the Department, which is a single bargaining unit. All staff are employed in the discharge of headquarters functions; there are no agencies, agency candidates or other identifiable business units. The plan does not envisage trade union recognition for pay bargaining purposes. The Department, which has only 38 staff, is predominantly non-unionised. In these circumstances, given the numbers involved, trade union recognition would be inappropriate. It is, however, proposed to arrange for the election of staff representatives.

TREASURY

Loss of Employment (Compensation)

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the tax-free limit of £30,000 as termination payment for loss of office compensation by employees remains in force; and what plans he has to alter these arrangements. [37069]

Mr. Jack: The exemption from tax for the first £30,000 of payments made to an individual as compensation for loss of employment, remains in force where the conditions laid down in sections 148 and 188 of the Taxes Act are met.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the ratios which determine the division of public expenditure on health care, education and housing between England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland; and how these have changed in the last five years. [37998]

Mr. Waldegrave: The division of public expenditure provision on health care, education and housing in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland is determined by the respective Secretaries of State. An analysis of general government expenditure on these and other services can be found in the "Statistical Supplement to the Financial Statement and Budget Report 1995–96".

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what was United Kingdom taxation as a proportion of gross domestic product in 1994; and what was the figure for other European Union countries; [38819]

(2) what was United Kingdom public expenditure as a percentage of gross domestic product in 1994; and what was the figure in other OECD countries; [38825]

(3) what was United Kingdom taxation as a proportion of gross domestic product in 1994; and what was the figure in other OECD countries; [38827]

(4) what was United Kingdom public expenditure as a proportion of gross domestic product in 1994; and what was the figure for other European Union countries. [38818]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Figures for UK public expenditure and taxation are available in "CSO Financial Statistics", and GDP figures are available in "Economic Trends". Figures for other EU and OECD countries can be found in the OECD "Economic Outlook" of June 1995. All publications are available in the House of Commons Library.

Business Loans

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average interest rate for loans to business; and what are the comparable figures for the Group of Seven leading industrial nations. [38828]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Specific data on average interest rates for loans to businesses are not generally available. However, a Bank of England report, in the February 1993 "Quarterly Bulletin", showed that lending to small firms was largely related to money market rates. It is likely that lending to larger firms is also predominantly money market rate-related, although fixed rate finance has become more popular in recent years. Money market rates will therefore provide a broad guide to the general trend in interest rates on loans to businesses.

Data on comparable money market rates for the G7 countries can be found in "International Financial Statistics" published by the IMF.

Tax and Prices Index

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what considerations led his Department to cease publishing the monthly tax and prices index; and if he will make a statement. [39042]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Publication of the tax and prices index has not been discontinued. Data can be found in tables 5 and 6 of "Retail Prices Index", CSO monthly Business Monitor MM23. There are also available from the Central Statistical Office on request.

Structural Funds

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the entitlements for 1995–96 resulting from the carry forward of underspends allowed under the new end-year flexibility scheme for structural funds relating to the 1994 to 1999 programme period. [39964]

Mr. Waldegrave: A new end-year flexibility scheme has been introduced to allow Departments to match the level of public expenditure provision in their own programmes to the flow of EU receipts in any particular year. For the new structural funds programme period which started in 1994 and runs until 1999, the eligible Departments will be able to carry forward into the following year underspends on all their expenditure relating to the European regional development fund, the European social fund, and the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund—objective 5b. A list of entitlements for 1995–96, totalling £191,594,000, is shown in the following table.

Entitlements for 1995–96 resulting from the carryforward of underspends relating to the 1994–99 Structural Funds Programme Period

Department	£ Thousands
Department of Trade and Industry	1,500
Department of the Environment	16,328
Department for Education and Employment	139,887
Welsh Office	10,000
Scottish Office	23,879
Total structural funds	191,594

Subject to parliamentary approval of any necessary supplementary estimates, individual cash limits will be increased as appropriate when entitlement is taken up.

Take-up of end-year flexibility under the new scheme will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Scot Inquiry

Mr. Byers: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 19 July, Official Report, column 1256, on what date Customs and Excise delivered the public interest immunity certificates in the Ordtec case to the Scott inquiry. [38260]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 24 October 1995]: Copies of the public interest immunity certificates were sent to the inquiry on 18 July 1995 and the associated bundle of documents, as prepared for the Court of Appeal, was provided to the inquiry by the 20 July 1995.

Sanitary Products

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will reduce the rate of VAT on women's necessary hygienic products. [38771]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 24 October 1995]: I cannot anticipate my right hon. and learned Friend's Budget statement.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on the application of VAT to sanitary towels and tampons. [38770]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 24 October 1995]: Treasury Ministers receive a small number of representations from hon. Members and the public on this subject from time to time.

Alcoholic Drinks (Taxation)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to reduce the present duty levels on spirits to equalise the tax treatment of spirits and the tax treatment of other alcoholic drinks. [39144]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 24 October 1995]: Each year prior to making his Budget decisions the Chancellor of the Exchequer reviews the levels of taxation on alcoholic beverages including spirits. Consideration is given to a wide range of social, economic and health factors as well as the revenue effect.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

HIV/AIDS

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what strategy the ODA has for combating the spread of HIV/AIDS in developing countries. [37750]

Mr. Hanley: ODA's strategy for combating the spread of HIV/AIDS was set out in a speech by my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development, on 26 April 1994; copies of her speech will be placed in the Libraries of the House. In summary, our goal is to help people in developing countries avoid HIV infection and, if they are infected, better cope with the miseries it causes, in a way that is sustainable and makes use of all available resources. Since 1987, we have learnt about the need for a multisectoral response to HIV/AIDS and the need to provide better care for people with HIV, as well as prevent their infection.

We provide assistance through bilateral and multilateral channels. We involve NGOs as well as Governments, often incorporating lessons learnt through pilot projects and research. We support the establishment of the new joint and co-sponsored UN programme on HIV/AIDS.

Fay Report

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps his Department has taken following the Fay report to recover money lost by the Crown Agents as a result of their association with companies controlled by the Barclay brothers; and if he will make a statement. [38372]

Mr. Hanley: As noted in annexe IV to the statement by the Government on the report of the Fay committee of inquiry on the Crown Agents on 1 December 1977, House of Commons paper 49 of Session 1977–78, the Crown Agents, acting in accordance with a general directive from the then Minister of Overseas Development and on advice from professional advisers, sold the relevant debts for £3 million.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what losses were made at (a) actual and (b) 1995 prices by the Crown Agents as a result of their investments with Barclay Hotels. [38373]

Mr. Hanley: As set out in annexe IV to the statement by the Government on the report of the Fay committee of inquiry on 1 December 1977, House of Commons paper 49 of Session 1977–78, the Crown Agents realised a loss on disposal of their interest in 1976 of £6.5 million—in 1995 prices, £24.7 million.

China

Miss Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 4 July, Official Report, column 110, if he will outline the details of the reports his Department has received on alleged abuses of reproductive rights in China. [37615]

Mr. Hanley: We have received reports from organisations and observers outside China of practices in some parts of China relating to forced abortion, punishment for evasion of family planning regulations and coercion to accept particular forms of contraception, including sterilisation. We continue to take every appropriate opportunity to express our deep concerns about these reports in our discussions with the Chinese Government.

Indonesia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on aid to Indonesia. [36884]

Mr. Hanley: Our policy on aid to Indonesia remains as set out by my hon. Friend, the then Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in answer to the hon. Member for Croydon, North-West (Mr.Wicks) on 16 January, Official Report, column 296.

Road Casualties

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people were (a) killed and (b) injured in road accidents in the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [37967]

Sir John Wheeler: The information is as follows:

Persons killed	Persons injured	Serious	Slight
1990
185	11,576	1,993	9,583
1991
185	10,129	1,648	8,481

1992
150	11,114	1,841	9,273
1993
143	10,957	1,725	9,232
1994
157	11,937	1,648	10,289

The Government's target to reduce the total number of people killed and seriously injured on Northern Ireland's roads by one third by the year 2000 compared with the baseline 1981–85 average[1] is identified in the recently published road safety plan for Northern Ireland, to which the RUC is a signatory. This target has been universally accepted and is a focus for organisations and individuals involved in road safety.

The current trend in deaths and serious injuries would indicate that this target is in line to be accomplished through a continuance of the multi-agency approach to road safety education and with the full support and determination of the community.

The RUC will continue to provide a substantial, sustained and co-ordinated effort, involving road safety education and enforcement of more serious road traffic offences, to address accident causes and trends. Resources will be deployed towards a number of identified priority areas: speed, reckless/careless driving, drinking and driving, young drivers, pedestrians and child safety.

Note:

[1] The baseline 1981–1985 average for fatal and serious casualties is 2362. The target, to be reached by the year 2000, is 1575.

Public Inquiry (Carrickfergus Harbour)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the total costs incurred by the Department of the Environment (NI) in respect of public inquiries regarding Carrickfergus harbour, Country Antrim, to date; and if he will make a statement on the future development of Carrickfergus harbour, and adjacent land. [38721]

Mr. Moss: Information on the cost to the Department of the Environment (NI) of public inquiries regarding Carrickfergus harbour is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Carrickfergus harbour is in the ownership of Carrickfergus borough council, which is responsible for its future development.

The Department of the Environment (NI) and the borough council have formed a partnership to re-develop land adjacent to Carrickfergus harbour for housing, retail, commercial and other uses and are currently negotiating with a potential developer for the site.

George Finbar Ross

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what considerations have led to the interval between the issue of prosecution directions by the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland in respect of George Finbar Ross and the decision regarding his extradition; and if he will make a statement. [38046]

Sir John Wheeler: Directions to prosecute George Finbar Ross were issued by the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland on 3 May 1995.

Since that time, the question of seeking the extradition of Mr. Ross has been under active consideration. Crown Counsel has been requested to advise on a number of relevant matters. That advice is awaited.

It is the practice of the relevant authorities not to give details of the actions being taken to secure the apprehension of wanted persons or the progress thereof. To do so could undermine the effectiveness of those actions.

Planning Inquiries

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland in what circumstances planning applications for new shopping developments will be referred to local public inquiries. [38351]

Mr. Moss: Where a planning application for a new shopping development is classified as of major importance, as defined in article 31 of the Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991, the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland may call a public inquiry to consider valid planning representations about, and objections to, the proposal. The principal matters which the Department takes into account in forming a judgement as to whether to call an inquiry are:

(i) the provisions of the development plan and relevant planning policies;

(ii) decisions on previous planning applications relevant to the site in question;

(iii) the nature and validity of the representations and objections; and

(iv) the views of the district council as to whether an inquiry would be appropriate.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Treaty Ratification

5. Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has to reform the procedures for the ratification of treaties. [36856]

Mr. Hanley: There are no plans to change our procedures.

Turkey

21. Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with his European partners regarding Turkey's relationship with the European Union. [36875]

22. Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's Government's relations with Turkey. [36876]

During his visit to Ankara on 6 September, my right hon. and learned Friend underlined the importance we attach to reinforcing bilateral links and to developing further Turkey's relationship with western and European institutions. He also referred to the importance of Turkey respecting international norms on human rights. A copy of a speech he gave in Ankara has been placed in the Library of the House of Commons.

Former Yugoslavia

23. Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to meet his American and European counterparts to discuss developments in the former Yugoslavia. [36877]

25. Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the prosecution of persons charged with war crimes in the former Yugoslavia. [36879]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The tribunal has issued eight indictments against 46 individuals so far. All these have been Serbs but non-Serbs are currently being investigated. Judge Goldstone has indicated that indictments will be issued within two months. The first trial, against Dusko Tadic, a guard in the Omarska POW camp, has already heard preliminary motions and is currently receiving witnesses.

29. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to prevent further human rights abuses and ethnic cleansing in the former Yugoslavia. [36885]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: During recent visits to the former Yugoslavia, my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary and I made clear to all parties our condemnation of human rights abuses and atrocities.

We fully support the work of the war crimes tribunal and believe those who have committed atrocities should answer in court for their actions.

Subsidiarity

24. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implementation of the principle of subsidiarity as set out in the Maastricht treaty. [36878]

Mr. David Davis: Subsidiarity has taken root in the EU. There has already been a sharp drop in the number of new legislative initiatives. At the 1996 IGC, the UK will bring forward specific proposals with the support of other member states further to entrench subsidiarity in the treaty.

European Policy

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last discussed with other European Foreign Ministers European policy on foreign and security affairs; and if he will make a statement. [36880]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We have played a leading role in supporting the UN Secretary-General's efforts to enhance UN peacekeeping capacity. In particular, we have helped strengthen the UN Department of Peacekeeping Operations and have supported the Secretary-General's attempts to improve UN rapid reaction capability. We are also helping to enhance the capability of African states to undertake effective peacekeeping.

French Nuclear Testing

30. Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to his French counterpart since July in regard to French nuclear testing in the Pacific. [36886]

Mr. David Davis: I have discussed this question with my French counterpart on a number of occasions.

Middle East

31. Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of the middle east peace process. [36887]

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply which was given earlier by my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary.

European Elections

32. Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in which other European Union states British citizens can vote or stand in those countries' local elections. [36888]

Mr. David Davis: British citizens will be able to vote and stand in the local elections of any country of the European Union, under the same conditions as nationals of that country, once those countries have passed the necessary domestic legislation. Such legislation has already been passed in Denmark, Sweden, Ireland and Austria, and is under way in the remaining countries of the European Union. Limited exceptions may be made in areas with a high concentration of non-nationals, or when an elected office involves influence at national level.

European Political Union

33. Sir David Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to meet his counterparts in the European Union to discuss greater political union. [36889]

Intergovernmental Conference

35. Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his preparations for the European intergovernmental conference. [36891]

Mr. David Davis: We are continuing to develop Britain's approach to the intergovernmental conference. The study group preparing for the intergovernmental conference is continuing its work and will report to the Madrid European Council in December.

Cuba

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the United Kingdom's trade relations with Cuba. [38018]

Mr. Nelson: I have been asked to reply.

The United Kingdom enjoys normal trading relations with Cuba, and the Government's policy is to support the efforts of UK firms to exploit the growing civil market opportunities which will arise as Cuba progresses with the reform of its economy along market-oriented lines. Her Majesty's Government will continue to urge on the Cuban Government the importance of an early settlement of outstanding debts to UK firms.

The Government signed a bilateral investment promotion and protection agreement with Cuba on 30 January 1995. It entered into force on 11 May 1995. Such agreements are designed to encourage investor confidence and investment flows by setting high standards of investment protection binding in international law. They are important to British companies thinking of investing overseas, because they contain strong commitments from other Governments about the way British investment will be treated. The agreement with Cuba is one of almost 80 concluded by the United Kingdom to date.

Cuba is on the United Kingdom list of destinations for which export licences for certain goods are subject to special licensing procedures. There are no Untied Kingdom of EC restrictions on imports from Cuba, apart from those applied to imports from all sources, such as on certain firearms and fissile materials; specifically, there are no quantitive restrictions for trade policy purposes.

My hon. Friend the Minister for Science and Technology paid a second visit to Cuba in September to further strengthen bilateral relations, including the development of trade and investment. He opened the new embassy building in Havana and signed an operating agreement on behalf of the Commonwealth Development Corporation with the Cuban Government, paving the way for further British investment in support of economic reform.

Human Rights (Kenya)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what actions Her Majesty's Government have taken so far to put pressure on the Kenyan Government to stop human rights violations. [38016]

Mr. Hanley: We have drawn our concerns about aspects of the human rights situation to the attention of the Kenyan authorities.

Cyprus

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all Ministers who have visited Cyprus in the last three years to discuss the issue of Cyprus. [38486]

Mr. David Davis: None, although British Ministers maintain regular contact with leading figures in both Cypriot communities. The then Foreign Secretary, the right hon. Member for Witney (Mr. Hurd) met President Clerides and Mr. Denktash while visiting the island for Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting in October 1993.

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made towards the accession of Cyprus to the European Union; and if he will make a statement. [36862]

Mr. Davis: The Cannes European Council reaffirmed that accession negotiations will start six months after the conclusion of the IGC, and taking account of its outcome.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information the European Commission has requested from Her Majesty's Government for its special meeting on 23 October on nuclear testing. [39255]

Mr. David Davis: None.

Bosnia

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current position in Bosnia. [36874]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: Although skirmishing has continued in north-west Bosnia,. the situation is generally much quieter following the ceasefire which came into effect on 12 October. We remain concerned about the continuing tense situation in eastern Slavonia.

We call on all sides to abide by the terms of the ceasefire agreements and to co-operate fully with the UN.

UN Peacekeeping Operations

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent review he has made of the scale and resourcing of United Nation's peacekeeping operations. [36871]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The United Nations Secretary-General reports regularly to the Security Council and the fifth committee on peacekeeping operations. We keep their scale and resourcing under constant review in the light of these reports.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Magistrates (Secret Societies)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 17 July, Official Report, column 904, how many magistrates in the Duchy of Lancaster included freemasonry when asked by advisory committees to list their outside interests. [38411]

Mr. Freeman: Advisory committees do not keep these statistics. Candidates are asked to give their outside interests, which are discussed during interviews. Advisory committees ask for this information to learn about a candidate's involvement in the local community. Some candidates volunteer the fact that they are freemasons.

Being a freemason is neither a qualification nor a disqualification for appointment as a magistrate.

On appointment, all magistrates take a judicial oath to administer justice without fear or favour, affection or ill will.

DEFENCE

University Air Squadrons

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the existing university air squadrons in the United Kingdom and those which he plans to relocate or close during the next three years. [39349]

Mr. Soames: The existing university air squadrons are as follows:

Aberdeen, Dundee and St. Andrews
Birmingham
Bristol
Cambridge
East Lowlands
East Midlands
Glasgow and Strathclyde
Liverpool
London
Manchester and Salford
Northumbrian
Oxford
Queens
Southampton
Wales
Yorkshire

Current proposals include the closure of Queen's university air squadron at the end of the 1995–96 academic year, and the relocation of East Lowlands university air squadron to RAF Leuchars by 1 April 1996.

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the need for alternative training facilities for members of the university air squadron of Queen's university, Belfast; and if he will make a statement. [39352]

Mr. Soames: Should the decision be taken to close Queen's university air squadron, alternative training facilities would in future be made available at other squadrons on the mainland for RAF sponsored students in Northern Ireland. Additional travelling expenses would be met by the Department.

RAF Units (Northern Ireland)

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the units and formations of the Royal Air Force currently in Northern Ireland with their locations; and what plans he has for changes to that list over the next three years. [39350]

Mr. Soames: The following units of the Royal Air Force are currently based in Northern Ireland.

Units	Location
3 Squadron RAF Regiment	RAF Aldergrove
230 Squadron Puma	RAF Aldergrove
27 Squadron Wessex	RAF Aldergrove
Queen's University Air Squadron	Belfast City Airport
No. 13 Air Experience Flight	Belfast City Airport

The Department has proposed the closure of Queen's university air squadron at the end of the 1995–96 academic year. This has been the subject of consultation with trade unions and other interested parties, and all representations will now be fully and carefully considered before any final decision is taken. Should Queen's UAS close, No. 13 Air Experience Flight, which shares accommodation with the UAS, would also close. It is, however, proposed to reactivate No. 664 Volunteer Gliding school to continue to provide flying experience for air cadets in Northern Ireland.

Derek Campion Laffey

Mr. Hinchcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what was the reason for the discharge of 14190562 S/Sgt Derek Campion Laffey, Royal Corps of Transport; [38514]

(2) what estimate he has for the number of persons advised of discharge procedures by 14190562 S/Sgt Derek Campion Laffey, Royal Corps of Transport; [38515]

(3) what information was available to 14190562 S/Sgt Derek Campion Laffey, Royal Corps of Transport (a) during service and (b) at date of discharge; and if he will place it in the Library. [38516]

Mr. Soames: Mr. Laffey was discharged from the Army in June 1968. The information requested is not, therefore, readily available. Mr. Laffey's service documents have been requested from the records office at Hayes and my noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available from those documents. A copy of the letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Nuclear Test Veterans

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the number of veterans of British nuclear tests who were alive at the start of the study conducted into the effects of radiation on them by the National Radiological Protection Board; what is his estimate of the number still alive; and if he will make a statement. [39214]

Mr. Soames: Out of over 20,000 veterans' studies by the National Radiological Protection Board, more than 3,000 would have died—over 900 of them from cancer—if the veterans had suffered the same death and cancer rates as members of the public in the same age groups. In fact, fewer than 2,800 veterans died—fewer than 800 from cancer—these figures being no higher than for the matched control group in the NRPB study. It follows that there has been no overall excess of death or cancer among test participants.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what studies his Department has made into the value of having an overarching sub-Department dealing with veterans' affairs; when he last met representatives of the Government of the United States of America to discuss this matter; when he next plans to meet them to discuss this matter; and if he will make a statement. [39210]

Mr. Soames: My Department has not carried out any studies into the value of having a sub-Department for veterans' affairs. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has not had any meetings with representatives of the Government of the United States of America to discuss this matter, nor has he any plans to do so.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy on the study by the National Radiological Protection Board into the effects of radiation on veterans of British nuclear tests; what instructions, advice and guidance he has given to the NRPB on the continuation of its study since the publication of its latest report; and if he will make a statement. [39215]

Mr. Soames: The studies conducted by the National Radiological Protection Board concluded that there has been no overall excess of death or cancer among British nuclear test participants. No instructions, advice or guidance have been given to the NRPB since the publication of the report in December, 1993, although we have made it clear that we see no need for a further study into the health of test veterans.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what categories of written or recorded oral evidence, computerised data and other information gathered by the National Radiological Protection Board before, during and after its study into the effects of radiation on veterans of British nuclear tests is available for public inspection; what categories are not available for public inspection; what written or recorded oral evidence, computerised data and other information arising from this study has been destroyed or lost; and if he will make a statement. [39211]

Mr. Soames: Information available to the public is contained in the National Radiological Protection Board's report "Mortality and Cancer Incidence 1952–90 in United Kingdom Participants in the UK Atmospheric Nuclear Weapon Tests and Experimental Programmes", published in December 1993. Personal details including recorded radiation dosage are available only to the individuals to whom they refer or their next of kin. We are not aware of any evidence having been destroyed or lost.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if it is his policy that the National Radiological Protection Board should continue its study into the effects of radiation on veterans of British nuclear tests; what proposals he has to assist them; and if he will make a statement. [39213]

Mr. Soames: We have no plans to sponsor any further studies.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions his Department has had with representatives of foreign Governments who pay and have paid compensation to veterans of nuclear tests; what conclusion he has drawn as to the reasons they have decided to take such action; and if he will make a statement. [39209]

Mr. Soames: Among British nuclear test veterans there has been no overall excess of death or malignant disease, so the question of compensation does not arise. I am not aware of detailed discussions with foreign Governments on the matter, but I understand that in the USA, some ex-service veterans involved in former atmospheric nuclear test programmes may receive a pension and entitlement to free medical care.

Royal Flight

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions in 1994–95 the royal flight was used by members of the royal family; and how many of these flights were by fixed-wing aircraft. [38862]

Mr. Soames: During the financial year 1994–95, the Queen's flight was used by the royal family on 870 occasions; 479 of these flights were in fixed-wing aircraft.

Mr. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes have taken place since 1992 in the organisation of the royal flight and in the methods of allocating and seconding costs. [38861]

Mr. Soames: On 1 April 1995, following a Cabinet Office efficiency scrutiny of royal and VIP communications flying, the Queen's flight amalgamated and collocated with No. 32 Squadron at RAF Northolt to form No. 32 (The Royal) Squadron. Prior to financial year 1994–95, costs represented the total operating costs of TQF, but included some flying by entitled non-royal users which could not be separately identified because of disproportionate cost. From financial year 1995–96 onwards, costs are calculated on the proportionate usage by entitled members of the royal family of No. 32 (The Royal) Squadron. The general costing philosophy remains as before. From 1995–96, private flying by the royal family becomes a charge to the Privy purse and no longer falls to class I votes.

Exercise Brilliant Foil

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who was the sponsor for Exercise Brilliant Foil, held between 18 and 22 September; and if he will make a statement. [39031]

Mr. Soames: Exercise Brilliant Foil was sponsored by Commander Air Forces North West Europe. It was a large-scale, multinational exercise, involving non-UK based foreign aircraft, designed to maintain the operational capabilities of the United Kingdom's air defence forces. It also provided valuable training for NATO offensive forces.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his Department's letter of 4 September, what factors led to his Department making available in the Vote Office copies of CM 2920, "The Atomic Weapons Establishment-Contractual Indemnities", on 14 August. [39259]

Mr. Arbuthnot: On 6 July, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence laid a departmental minute before the House seeking its approval for certain indemnification arrangements in respect of the Atomic Weapons Establishment. In such a case, if no objections are raised during the ensuing 14 days, it is normal procedure for parliamentary approval to be assumed. Accordingly, CM 2920, which describes the arrangements, was published by HMSO on 14 August.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Thurrock Borough Council

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answer of 29 June, Official Report, column 782, if he will publish the replies he has received from the solicitors acting on behalf of the (a) hon. Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman) and (b) the chief executive of Thurrock borough council in respect of the video sent to him; and if he will make a statement. [38715]

The Attorney-General: No. Neither of the letters referred to in my answer to the hon. Member of 29 June, Official Report, column 782, required a response. The solicitors acting on behalf of the hon. Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman) did, however, request some further information.

Mr. Asil Nadir

Mr. Cox: To ask the Attorney-General what recent discussion he has had and with whom concerning Mr. Asil Nadir; and if he will make a statement. [38488]

The Attorney-General: I frequently discuss with the director of the Serious Fraud Office matters of departmental interest including the progress of current investigations and prosecutions. He keeps me informed of significant developments in cases including the Polly Peck case. It is my practice not to divulge the substance of discussions about current cases.

Prosecutions (Northern Ireland)

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Attorney-General how many cases were sent forward for prosecution by the Northern Ireland Director of Public Prosecutions over the last 12 quarters, specifying the numbers of people so charged during those quarters; and if he will make a statement about the implications of the figures. [38482]

The Attorney-General: Statistics are not kept by the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland in the form as sought in the question. The director keeps statistics in relation to the number of files submitted to him for his decision. Statistics are also kept as to the number of persons prosecuted. These are as follows:

Quarter	Files received	Prosecutions directed (persons)
1992 July–September	2,854	2,192
1992 October–December	2,748	2,126
1993 January–March	2,720	2,111
1993 April–June	2,570	1,975
1993 July–September	2,571	1,942
1993 October–December	2,708	2,072
1994 January–March	2,898	2,229
1994 April–June	2,934	2,294
1994 July–September	3,056	2,442
1994 October–December	3,087	2,474

Serious Fraud Office

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Attorney-General what jurisdiction and role the Serious Fraud Office has in Scotland. [39220]

The Attorney-General: The Serious Fraud Office was established by section 1(1) of the Criminal Justice Act 1987. The power of the director of the Serious Fraud Office to investigate offences involving serious or complex fraud is confined to those justiciable in England, Wales or Northern Ireland. By virtue of section 17(2) of the 1987 Act the investigative powers of the director under section 2 of that Act—the powers to require the production of documents and the answering of questions—are exercisable in Scotland in connection with offences committed in England, Wales or Northern Ireland. Provision is made in section 2(19) for the director to apply to a sheriff in Scotland for a warrant to be granted under section 2(4) and (5) to search premises in Scotland and to take possession of documents found therein.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

National Lottery

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) if the companies which successfully tendered for the national lottery contracts for (a) telecommunications links with lottery computer terminals, (b) software, (c) ticketing and consultancy services and (d) advice on consumer trends and retail development with the lowest cost bids in each case; [28723]

(2) how many companies tendered for the contract to provide Camelot with (a) telecommunications links with the national lottery computer terminals, (b) software for the national lottery, (c) ticketing and consultancy services for the national lottery and (d) advice on consumer trends and retail development. [38722]

Mr. Sproat: This is an operational matter for Camelot Group plc. I have therefore asked the director general of the national lottery, who is responsible for regulating the operation of the lottery, to write to the hon. Member, placing copies of his response in the Libraries of the House.

Downe House, Kent

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assistance her Department is giving in saving for the nation Charles Darwin's home, Downe house, at Downe, Kent; and if she will make a statement. [39072]

Mr. Sproat: My Department is providing grant-in-aid of £28.7 million in 1995–96 to the natural history museum, which took over the administration of Downe house in 1993. Decisions on how to spend this money are a matter for the trustees of the museum.

Media Concentration

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will make a statement on the European Commission's proposed directive on media concentration; and what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the concept of cross-European media regulations. [39234]

Mr. Sproat: The European Commission has not yet put forward proposals for a directive in this area, but has instead undertaken a series of consultations among member states and other interested parties. The Government's position is set out in our response to EC questionnaire No. III on "Pluralism and Media Concentration in the Internet Market", which is available in the Library of the House. Our view is that the media industry cannot be treated on the same basis as other sectors of the economy. Ownership restrictions are an essential safeguard for plurality and diversity and, as such, are distinct from the separate question of controls on anti-competitive behaviour. We believe that member states are best placed to assess where the balance lies in securing both economic and cultural objectives, and do not therefore support the case for introducing harmonising legislation at the European level.

HEALTH

Correspondence

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to reply to the letter of 8 September sent to his Department from the Nottinghamshire local medical committee; and if he will make a statement. [38322]

Mr. Sackville: A reply was sent today.

Suicides

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total number of recorded suicides in each year since 1979. [38366]

Mr. Bowis: The information is shown in the table.

Recorded deaths from suicide in England and Wales in years 1979–1994, ICD9[1] Code E950-E959.

Asthma

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the under-diagnosis of asthma with particular reference to schools since 1989; and if he will make a statement on the diagnosis of asthma. [38314]

Mr. Sackville: The Department has not commissioned or evaluated any studies specifically on under-diagnosis of asthma. Diagnosis is a matter of professional judgment. However, we are concerned about the burden which results from asthma and its increasing incidence, particularly in children. We shall continue to work with the medical profession, the Department of the Environment, the National Asthma Campaign and other interested parties to improve our knowledge of the causes of asthma and to make life as normal as possible for those who suffer.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to undertake a comprehensive review of the causes and effects of asthma; and if he will make it his policy to create a unified national strategy to combat asthma, involving his Department and other interested bodies. [38315]

Mr. Sackville: The Government already support an extensive programme of asthma research, particularly through the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant in aid from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

In 1992, the Department of Health asked the Committee on the Medical Effects of Air Pollutants to advise on the possible links between outdoor air pollution and asthma. Its report "Asthma and Outdoor Air Pollution" was published on 19 October 1995, and copies have been placed in the Library. In addition, the Departments of Health and of the Environment, in collaboration with the Institute for Environment and Health and the National Asthma Campaign, are organising an important conference on the possible causes and successful management of asthma, to be held on 23 November 1995.

A wide-ranging review of the available information on the causes and effects of asthma, entitled "Asthma—An Epidemiological Overview", was published by the Department of Health in March 1995, a copy of which is available in the Library. Under the chronic disease management programme, introduced by the Department of Health in July 1993, over 90 per cent. of general practitioners are providing organised programmes of care for people with asthma.

Hospital Discharge Procedures

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations he has received concerning hospital discharge procedures; and if he will make a statement. [38036]

Mr. Bowis: We have received a number of representations concerning hospital discharge procedures. National health service and social services departments should work together to ensure that integrated and sensitive hospital discharge arrangements are in place.

Accident and Emergency Departments

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what percentage of patients presenting themselves to accident and emergency departments within (a) the London area and (b) England in 1994 were seen by a doctor more than four hours after arriving; [38625]

(2) what information his Department collects regarding waiting times for patients to be seen by a doctor after arriving in accident and emergency departments; [38629]

(3) what percentage of patients presenting themselves to accident and emergency departments within (a) the London area and (b) England in 1994 were seen by a doctor within two hours after arriving. [38624]

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally. All hospitals should have a locally set standard on the time patients should wait before receiving treatment in an accident and emergency department once their initial need for treatment has been assessed and will collect information on this standard.

Ms Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what percentage of patients admitted to hospital via an accident and emergency department waited more than four hours between the decision being made by a doctor to admit them and being admitted to a ward within (a) the London area and (b) England in 1994; [38627]

(2) what percentage of patients admitted to hospital via an accident and emergency department waited less than two hours between the decision being made by a doctor to admit them and being admitted to a ward within (a) the London area and (b) England in 1994. [38626]

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally at present. Since April 1995, there has been a patients charter standard that a patient admitted to hospital via an accident and emergency department can expect to be given a bed as soon as possible, and certainly within four hours. From April 1996, this standard will be improved to two hours. Information relating to this standard will become available in due course.

Ms Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had regarding waiting times for patients to be seen by a doctor after arriving in accident and emergency departments; and if he will make a statement. [38628]

Mr. Sackville: My right hon. Friend has frequent discussions with interested parties on many aspects of patient care including the organisation of accident and emergency departments.

Internet

Sir Wyn Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has for connecting the NHS to the Internet. [38744]

Mr. Sackville: Framework contracts have been awarded to British Telecom and Mercury for wide area network services to establish a national health service-wide electronic communications infrastructure. This will provide an information super-highway dedicated to the NHS which will, in turn, be able to be connected to the global Internet through secure, centrally managed, gateways. These gateways will allow controlled access from the NHS-wide network but will prevent unauthorised intrusion from the Internet. Demonstration testing of the secure gateway between the NHS-wide networking services and the global Internet is under-way.

Medicines

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for reducing the cost to the NHS of medicines which are an alternative to those previously containing chlorofluorocarbons as a propellant. [38870]

Mr. Malone: We have no such plans.

Birth Defects

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by regional health authority the percentage of parents who have declined to abort a pregnancy when told their child may have a birth defect for each of the last four years. [39017]

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which NHS trusts have approached his Department with proposals for the involvement of private sector bodies in the provision of treatment facilities within NHS hospitals. [39062]

Mr. Sackville: National health service hospitals and facilities have always been built by private sector bodies. I have previously listed projects approved under the private finance initiative for the provision of facilities for the NHS, including the nature of the project. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan) on 18 October Official Report, column 280.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance his Department has issued to health authorities and NHS trusts relating to the involvement of private sector bodies in the provision of facilities for treatment within the NHS. [39061]

Mr. Sackville: The national health service executive issued guidance about the private finance initiative under HSG(95)15 in March 1995, copies of which are available in the Library. I also refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Dulwich (Ms Jowell) on 16 October Official Report, columns 141-42 and to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Havant (Mr. Willetts) on 4 February 1994 Official Report, columns 977-78.

Alcohol

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the population in each age cohort drank alcohol at least once each week, for each of the last five years, by gender. [38775]

Mr. Bowis: The available information is shown in the table.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the cost to the NHS of alcohol-related patient episodes, for each of the last five years. [38777]

Mr. Malone: There is no generally accepted method of producing such estimates.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the population in each age cohort drank more than the recommended amount of alcohol per week, for each of the last five years, by gender. [38776]

Mr. Bowis: The available information is given in the table.

They refer to adults only. The Government's advice on sensible drinking is currently being reviewed by an inter-departmental group of officials in light of the latest scientific and medical evidence.

Oral Contraceptives

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the procedures adopted by his Department in respect of the brands of oral contraceptives about which a public warning was given on 19 October, with special reference of when the decision to give the warning about contraceptives was taken; when general practitioners and doctors working in family planning clinics were notified; and how the notification was given. [39353]

Mr. Sackville: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State made a statement in the House on 23 October.

Smoking

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the cost to the NHS of tobacco-related patient episodes, for each of the last five years. [38774]

Mr. Sackville: The relationship between tobacco use and individual patient episodes is not straightforward. The best available assessment, from the Health Education Authority's 1993 report "The Smoking Epidemic—A Prescription for Change", estimated that the cost to the NHS of treating smoking-related diseases is £610 million.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the population in each age cohort by gender, were regular smokers, for each of the last five years. [38773]

Mr. Sackville: Estimates of smoking prevalence are not carried out on a year-by-year basis. The available information is shown in the table.

Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if the quinquennial review of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority will include a reconsideration of the current exclusion from its membership of individuals who have ethical objections to the use of living human embryos for experimental purposes; and if he will make a statement; [39280]

(2) what steps he intends to take to implement the policy of Her Majesty's Government that the membership of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority should be balanced; and if he will make a statement. [39281]

Mr. Sackville: The Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1992 sets down basic requirements for the balance between lay and scientific membership of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority. Care is taken in making appointments to ensure that the authority has access among the membership, to the relevant expertise, skills and personal qualities necessary to carry out its functions. No individual is excluded from membership of the authority because of his or her personal convictions. However, it is important before appointing members to ascertain whether they have any specific views which may make it difficult for them to participate in the full range of the authority's activities. These include granting licences for embryo research.

Mrs. Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he intends to make during the course of the quinquennial review of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority of the conflict between the need responsibly to control experiments on human embryos in accordance with strict criteria and the need to generate income through fees charged upon the granting of licences authorising such experimentation. [39282]

Mr. Sackville: It was a decision of Parliament during the passage of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1992 that part of the running costs of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority should be met from fees. I am not aware of any evidence of a conflict of interests resulting from these arrangements. I will consider the matter again should the findings of the quinquennial review call for such action.

Mrs. Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what information he has concerning the number of human embryos which have been killed in each year since the establishment of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority and in accordance with licences issued by that authority; what fees were raised by such licences in each of those years; and what is the resultant cash revenue per human embryo death so far realised by the authority; [39283]

(2) if he will list by period of membership those individuals who have served on the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority; if he will indicate in the case of each member the total number of (a) licences and (b) human embryo deaths which were authorised by the authority during that individual's terms of service; if he will indicate in each case the revenue raised by such licences in that period; and if he will calculate the cash revenue per human embryo death realised during the period of the term of office of each of those individuals. [39284]

Mr. Sackville: Details of the membership of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority are set out in the authority's annual reports, the fourth of which was published on 11 October 1995. Copies of all annual reports are available in the Library.

Information about the number of embryos is not available in the form requested. Information about the number of embryos donated for research, the number of research licences issued and income generated by them is shown in the table. The Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act requires the written consent of the man and woman who donated the gametes before any research is undertaken.

The amounts allocated to the United Kingdom under the three regional objectives of the structural funds, 1, 2 and 5b, are shown in the table. Almost 100 per cent. of the 1989 to 1993 allocations were committed to projects in the regions concerned.

ISDN

Mr. Allen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the role of ISDN as a transmission technology; and what proposals he has to make it more widely available. [39236]

Mr. Ian Taylor: ISDN is one of a number of complimentary technologies that together will provide us with the digital networks necessary to support advanced telecommunications services and applications.

ISDN has been available in the UK for several years, but recent EC decisions on ISDN terminal standards and the growth of interest by British business in high-speed connection to the Internet are likely to increase demand for ISDN substantially. The extent to which ISDN services are available is obviously a commercial matter for the telecommunications operators.

With this in mind, the Government consulted in the summer on their proposals to hold a competition to award licences to run radio fixed-access systems. Such a system operating nationally at 10 GHz is intended to provide the minimum bit rate of 144 kbps necessary for an ISDN service as an alternative to the service already offered by BT and some cable operators.

Mr. Allen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade for what reasons an ISDN connection in the United Kingdom costs more than in France and Germany; and what measures he is taking to address this. [39235]

Mr. Taylor: The pricing of ISDN services is a matter for the commercial judgment of service providers. Both my Department and the Office of Telecommunications are aware of the level of relative prices of ISDN services in the UK compared to France and Germany. As both the latter markets are yet far from liberalised, there is little available information about whether the prices for ISDN charged there can be justified in relation to underlying costs. Oftel is considering the inclusion of ISDN services in BT's price cap when it is next reviewed.

The introduction of effective competition will also contribute to bringing prices down and this lies behind the Government's policy of licensing alternative infrastructure such as radio fixed access systems. Operating at 10 GHz these could provide an alternative ISDN service to that offered by BT and some cable providers.

Manufactured Exports

Mr. Alexander: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the current estimate of the number of United Kingdom companies and firms which are engaged in the regular exporting of manufactured goods. [38745]

Mr. Oppenheim: According to HM Customs and Excise, there were approximately 112,000 exporting firms in the United Kingdom in 1994. This figure includes shipping agents but excludes firms that are below the United Kingdom VAT registration threshold.

Copyright

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he plans to implement the new term directive on copyright. [38857]

Mr. Ian Taylor: A large number of submission were received in response to the consultative draft of legislation to implement this directive which was circulated to interested parties earlier this year. Consideration has now been given to the many points raised in these submissions, as a result of which we have concluded that a substantial number of changes to the proposed legislation are desirable. The draft is being revised, and regulation will be laid before both Houses as soon as possible.

Export Licences

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what export licences have been granted to British companies for defence-related equipment sales to Guatemala in each of the past five years. [37975]

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 19 October]: I have recently placed in the Library of the House details of all export licences issued in respect of arms, and of military and security equipment, for the years 1993 and 1994. The information is broken down by category of goods, as defined in the appropriate Export of Goods (Control) Order; and by the number of licences issued in each category to every country of destination, including Guatemala. For the years 1990 to 1992 inclusive, the relevant information is as follows:

Year	EGCO category	Number of licences
1990	—	Nil
1991	—	Nil
	ML3	3

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many licences for the export of arms and ammunition were (a) issued and (b) applied for and refused for Indonesia between 1 January 1994 and 1 August 1995; and what were the items for which licences were refused. [37653]

Mr. Nelson: I have recently placed in the Library of the House details of all export licences issued in respect of arms, and of military and security equipment, for the year of 1994. The information is broken down by category of goods, as defined in the appropriate Export of Goods (Control) Order, and by the number of licences issued in each category to every country of destination, including Indonesia. In 1994, two licences were refused for Indonesia in the categories: ML1, ML2, ML3, ML4, ML6, ML9, ML10, ML11, PL5018, PL5021, and PL5030. For these categories of goods, and in the period 1 January to 1 August 1995, the numbers of licences issued and refused for Indonesia were 23 and three respectively.

Mr. Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many licences for the export of arms and ammunition were (a) issued and (b) applied for and refused for each of the countries of central and south America for (a) 1994 and (b) between 1 January 1995 and 1 August 1995. [37654]

Mr. Nelson: I have recently placed in the Library of the House details of all export licences issued in respect of arms, and of military and security equipment, for the year of 1994. The information is broken down by category of goods, as defined in the appropriate Export of Goods (Control) Order, and by the number of licences issued in each category to all countries of destination, including all those in south and central America. In 1994, nine licences were refused for Argentina for the categories: ML1, ML2, ML3, ML4, ML6, ML9, ML10, ML11, PL5018, PL5021, and PL5030. No other licence applications were refused for these goods to the other countries of central and south America.

For these categories of goods, and in the period 1 January to 1 August 1995, the numbers of licences issued and refused to the relevant destinations were as follows:

Export Market Information Centre

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many British companies have used his Department's export market information centre since its establishment. [38452]

Mr. Oppenheim: Since its establishment in 1989, the export market information centre has received over 120,000 visits. In addition, around 37,000 telephone inquiries are being received each year by the centre.

Television Programmes

Mr. Grocott: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the balance of trade in television programmes (a) in 1985, (b) in 1990 and (c) in the latest year for which figures are available. [37916]

Mr. Oppenheim: The information, which is available only for films and television together, is published by the Central Statistical Office in the United Kingdom balance of payments—the Pink Book. The publication is available in the Library of the House.

Post Office

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library the KPMG report on the Post Office commissioned by his Department. [38583]

Mr. Oppenheim: This report is confidential between the Government, their advisers, and the Post Office board.

National Engineering Laboratory

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give details of the funding commitments which have been given to Assessment Services Ltd. as part of the purchase agreement for the takeover of the National Engineering Laboratory. [38184]

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 23 October 1995]: The Department is committed on behalf of industry over a five-year period to supporting the national measurement system through a programme of research and technology transfer at the National Physical Laboratory, the Laboratory of the Government Chemist and the National Engineering Laboratory. Flow measurement work at NEL is an integral part of this. NEL has won other contracts under DTI's innovation and technology support budget. The Department will also be placing further work under these programmes in the next five years. The total of this guaranteed work at NEL is £30.2 million spread over five years.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the negotiated price paid by ASL for the National Engineering Laboratory. [38183]

Mr. Taylor [holding answer 23 October 1995]: The Department and Assessment Services Ltd. signed on 23 October the assets purchase agreement and the framework agreement and supporting documents for the purchase of the National Engineering Laboratory, subject to the resolution of certain property issues which is expected shortly. Completion is planned to take place on 31 October as originally proposed.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the (a) tonnage and (b) cash value of (i) steel exports from the United Kingdom and (ii) aerospace exports in each of the last five years. [37991]

Mr. Oppenheim: The available information is given in the following table.

Regional Industrial Support

Mr. Macshane: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list by (a) amount, (b) company and (c) regional government funds, grants on tax relief schemes offered to foreign companies investing in the United Kingdom each year since 1990. [38712]

Mr. Oppenheim: The question is unclear. If the hon. Gentleman would clarify the information he is seeking, I will endeavour to answer. However, the hon. Gentleman may care to note that the main instrument of regional industrial support is the regional selective assistance scheme. Details of the grants given can be found in the "Annual Report of the Industrial Development Act 1982".

Prawns and Shrimps

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what have been the annual imports of prawns or shrimps from (a) Iceland, (b) Norway and (c) the Faroe Islands for each year since 1980 by volume and value. [37957]

Coal Industry

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the Coal Authority's actual budget figures for (a) 1994–95 and (b) 1995–96 to prevent or control water pollution from mine workings, including the cost of pumping operations transferred from British Coal; and if he will make a statement. [39026]

Mr. Page: The Coal Authority's annual report and accounts for 1994–95 record that the authority is spending in excess of £1 million a year pumping and discharging minewater into rivers. The Coal Authority's main targets for 1995–96 include agreeing with the National Rivers Authority and the river purification boards in Scotland a list of "priority sites" for remediation, together with initial costings for the most significant of these, by 31 December 1995. In these circumstances, it would be premature for the Coal Authority to establish a separate budget.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the land and property in the Don Valley constituency which currently remains in the ownership of British Coal Property. [39554]

Mr. Page: This is a matter for British Coal.

Telephone Codes, Reading

Sir Gerald Vaughan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the costs to local businesses and residential telephone users of changing the dialling codes for the Reading area twice within one year; if he will require BT through Oftel to consider compensation for those affected; and if he will make a statement. [39246]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Numbering issues are the responsibility of the Director General of Telecommunications. However I understand that no existing Reading numbers will need to change their codes until 1998. Any changes reflect demand for new telecoms services.

Realising our Potential Awards

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what assessment his Department has made of the success of the realising our potential awards; [38910]

(2) what action he is taking to ensure the quality of projects receiving realising our potential awards. [38909]

Mr. Ian Taylor: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Colchester, North (Mr. Jenkin) on 19 October 1995, Official Report, column 314.

Technology Foresight Programme

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what collaborative projects with industry the technology foresight programme has identified for funding. [38908]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The technology foresight programme has produced 16 reports. These contain some 400 recommendations, many of which might be addressed by collaborative projects between academia and industry. Some of these priorities can be taken forward in more than one collaborative project—for example, the foresight vehicle priority of the transport foresight panel is being reflected in 15 collaborative project themes. Some collaborative projects identified in the foresight programme are already being taken forward through the Link mechanism—see the table. The foresight challenge, which was launched in September 1995, is expected to identify many more collaborative projects; the closing date for the first round of outline applications under the challenge is 20 November 1995.

New research projects in the public and private sectors may take account of foresight findings as existing projects are concluded.

Road Accidents

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people were (a) killed and (b) injured in road accidents in the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [37990]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is given in the following table.

	Fatal	Non-fatal	Total
1981–85 average	641	26,502	27,142
1990	546	26,675	27,221
1991	490	24,849	25,339
1992	463	23,709	24,172
1993	399	22,016	22,415
1994	363	22,220	22,583

The continuing fall in the number of fatalities to the lowest on record is very encouraging and good progress is being made towards achieving the Government's target of reducing overall causalities by one third by the year 2000 compared with 1981–85 average. The Scottish Office and local authorities will continue to take forward road safety initiative designed to contribute towards achieving the target.

Pay Delegation

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide in respect of his plan for pay delegation submitted to the Treasury (a) a description of the staff in each bargaining unit covered by the plan, distinguishing staff in HQ functions, agencies and agency candidates, and in other identifiable business units and (b) proposals for trade union recognition in each bargaining unit and the negotiating machinery to be put in place in each bargaining unit. [38278]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: At April 1996 six distinct pay bargaining units are expected to operate within the Scottish Office and its associated departments. The approximate number of employees in each unit, distinguishing agency and HQ staff, are:

	Agency Staff
Scottish Prison Service	4,500
Historic Scotland	780
Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency	280
Scottish Courts Service	870
Registers of Scotland	1,120

The core departments of The Scottish Office, plus remaining Agencies and Associated Departments, form a single central bargaining unit; covering some 5,960 staff, 670 of whom serve in Agencies, the remainder on HQ functions.

For the central unit discussions are in progress on trade union recognition and possible future bargaining arrangements. In each of the separate agency bargaining units, the chief executive has responsibility for pay negotiations.

Child Prostitution

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to hold centrally information in respect of the number of cases of child prostitution that are reported; and if he will make a statement. [38297]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Child prostitution is neither a separate criminal offence nor a statutory ground for referring a child to a children's hearing and is therefore not recorded as such. Where a child under the age of 16 becomes involved in prostitution, the child is considered more as a victim rather than an offender. The child is invariably referred by the police to the reporter to the children's panel who decides whether there should be a reference to a panel to consider whether compulsory measures of supervision may be appropriate. An adult involvement in the matter would be referred by the police directly to the procurator fiscal. I am satisfied that in these cases we have in place the necessary system of referrals and procedures to ensure that the action which is taken in relation to the child is in the best interests of the child's welfare.

Electoral Registration

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the latest estimates of those aged 17 years and over, plus 63 per cent. of those aged 16 years, for each parliamentary constituency in Scotland together, in each case with the equivalent electoral registration figures also expressed as a percentage of these population figures. [36777]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 23 October 1995]: The information requested is given in the table. The population figures have been prepared by a method that involves a certain degree of approximation and therefore must be treated with some caution.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will order a Scottish Office investigation into the causes of the financial difficulties of Aberdeen Royal Hospitals trust and Highland Communities trust, with a view to publishing a report, on the matter. [38499]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 23 October 1995]: The Aberdeen Royal Hospitals NHS trust and the Highland Communities NHS trust have reported to the Scottish Office Department of Health forecast deficits for 1995–96. These matters are being addressed by the trusts and health boards concerned and by the Department. All NHS trusts are required by statute to publish an annual report and audited accounts at the appropriate time.

Paisley

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will put measures in place to allow Paisley to obtain city status. [39180]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: City status in Scotland can be achieved only through the granting of a royal charter. It has no statutory significance in Scotland. No royal burgh charter has been granted in modern times and there are no plans to revive the practice.

Computers in Schools

Sir Wyn Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what statistics he has on the change in the number of computers available to pupils in schools in Wales in the last decade. [38410]

Mr. Richards: Surveys of microcomputers in schools were undertaken in 1986, 1988 and 1992. The 1986 survey covered only a third of primary schools, and special schools were covered only in 1992. The following table shows the average number of pupils per microcomputer, in those primary, secondary and special schools who responded to the surveys.

Number of pupils per microcomputer

	1986	1988	1992
Primary schools	97	68	34
Secondary schools	55	30	14
Special schools	—	—	6

Film Industry

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate his office has made of the total amount of financial support provided by local authorities for the film industry in Wales for each of the last three available years; what is his assessment of the support which will be provided by the unitary authorities after April 1996; and if he will make a statement. [38133]

Mr. Richards: Information on local authority funding for the film industry in Wales is not held centrally. It will be for unitary authorities to decide on future levels of funding in the light of their available resources.

Drug Prevention Week

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what financial provision his office has made to support Drug Prevention Week Wales; what is the funding level for drug prevention in Wales (a) in total and (b) as a proportion of the figure in England; and if he will make a statement. [38135]

Mr. Richards: Drug Prevention Week was a police initiative; they and the agencies working with them were responsible for funding it.

Welsh Office funding for combating drug misuse is generally made available through general allocations to and various grant schemes operated by health and local authorities. It is not possible to identify separately the total amounts spent on drug prevention.

University Research

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales in what way the Welsh Office co-ordinates and administers scientific research carried out at Welsh universities. [38737]

Mr. Richards: Public funding for research in higher education in Wales is directed through two distinct channels. General funds, for use at institutions' discretion, are allocated by the Higher Education Funding Council for Wales from grant in aid provided by the Welsh Office and are used to support basic and strategic research. The allocation of funding to individual institutions reflects the assessed quality of research undertaken at each institution. Specific funding for particular research projects undertaken by an institution is provided by the appropriate research council.

The Welsh Office provides advice to the HEFCW on the general policies to be adopted in the allocation of funding for research. Neither the Department nor the funding council seeks to co-ordinate research undertaken in the higher education institutions.

Renovation Grants (Rhondda)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he proposes to take in relation to the recent findings about the operation of the renovation grant system by Rhondda borough council and if he will make a statement. [38616]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Responsibility for the day-to-day operation of the renovation grant system rests with district councils. Any suggestion of malpractice should be placed before the monitoring officer, district auditor, local government ombudsman or the police to investigate. The district auditor has already carried out a full inquiry and reported on renovation grants in Rhondda.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what information he has for the journey times for each of the lorries containing livestock that were taken from Shoreham to Dieppe aboard the Northern Cruiser on 17 May; [34864]

(2) what action he has taken in respect of sheep that died during their export to France and Shoreham on 17 May; [34868]

(3) if he will make a statement on the transportation of livestock on the Northern Cruiser from Shoreham on 17 May with particular reference to (a) the suitability of the vessel for livestock transportation and (b) the prevailing weather conditions; [34872]

(4) what account was taken of the presence of a pregnant ewe in granting a certificate for the consignment of sheep exported on 17 May from Shoreham. [34869]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 19 July 1995]: It is, of course, the master's responsibility under the law not to carry animals if in his judgment there are grounds for believing that, due to adverse weather conditions, the voyage will be attended by serious risk to the animals of injury, suffering or death. It does on occasion happen, particularly during the winter months, that the master of a livestock vessel cancels a sailing because of adverse weather. This was not the case on 17 May, but I understand that the vessel was held in port while weather checks were made. Information about the journey times of the lorries on this voyage is given in the table.

The local authority has completed its investigation with regard to the two dead sheep and the third animal which had given birth. The deaths of the sheep and the birth of a lamb do not in themselves amount to conclusive evidence of infringements, and the local authority will have needed to consider the available evidence in this respect. The local authority has in fact concluded that in this case it did not have evidence to support a prosecution. All the animals in the consignment had been certified as fit to travel, which suggests that the ewe which gave birth was showing no obvious sign of being pregnant and about to give birth at that time.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what is his policy regarding the export of live farm animals for slaughter or further fattening to countries outside the European Union; [38006]

(2) what plans he has to permit the export of live farm animals for slaughter or further fattening to countries outside the European Union; and if he will make a statement. [38009]

Mrs. Browning: There is no intention of changing our long-standing policy of permitting the export of food animals only to those countries with standards at least equivalent to those in force within the European Union on the protection of animals during transport and at slaughter.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many alleged infringements of the laws designed to protect the welfare of animals in transit have been dealt with by his officials during the last two months in (a) Dover and (b) Brightlingsea; and how many prosecutions have been brought in respect of such infringements; [38010]

(2) whether it is his policy that his officials should continue to inspect every consignment of animals exported through Dover and Brightlingsea; and if he will make a statement. [38011]

Mrs. Browning: During the months of August and September, all consignments of animals for slaughter or further fattening exported from Dover and Brightlingsea were monitored by officials. This kind of monitoring brings to light a number of incidents ranging from the detection of actual welfare problems to minor documentary discrepancies: within this range there can be welfare problems that do not involve an infringement, and cases where intervention by Ministry staff anticipates and prevents problems or infringements from occurring.

At Dover during the period in question, officials dealt with 43 incidents, of which three were subsequently referred to the local authority—which is, I understand, considering two of these for possible prosecution. At Brightlingsea, officials dealt with 11 incidents during the period. Four were referred to the local authority for action and dealt with either by verbal warning, formal caution or by statutory notice requiring remedial action to be taken. I understand that one case is being considered for prosecution.

We intend for the time being to maintain this level of monitoring in the ports.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what is his policy on the export of horses for slaughter; [38005]

(2) what plans he has to amend or repeal the minimum values system which prevents the export of horses for slaughter; and if he will make a statement. [38008]

Mrs. Browning: We remain committed to the minimum values system for exported equines, and have no intention of amending or repealing it.

DNA Nucleotides

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his letter 90854, of 23 September to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, if he will make a statement on his consultation with legal experts and scientists about the Torry research and development project, and the Bartlett-Davidson patent, relating to patenting of DNA nucleotides sequencing for identification of animal species. [37299]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 23 October 1995]: I am not yet in a position to make a statement.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what is his policy on the export of horses for slaughter; [38005]

(2) what plans he has to amend or repeal the minimum values system which prevents the export of horses for slaughter; and if he will make a statement. [38008]

Mrs. Browning: We remain committed to the minimum values system for exported equines, and have no intention of amending or repealing it.

Pay Delegation

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will provide in respect of his plan for pay delegation submitted to the Treasury (a) a description of the staff in each bargaining unit covered by the plan, distinguishing staff in headquarters functions, agencies and agency candidates, and in other identifiable business units and (b) proposals for trade union recognition in each bargaining unit and the negotiating machinery to be put in place in each bargaining unit. [38279]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The following is the information:

A. Bargaining Units

There will be the following four pay bargaining units from 1 April 1996:

	Bargaining unit	Grades
1	Core-MAFF	all grades
	Pesticides Safety Directorate[1]	all grades
	Veterinary Medicines Directorate[1]	all grades
	Directorate of Fisheries Research[2]	for grades other than those below
2	Directorate of Fisheries Research	for marine industrials/non-industrials and shore-based industrials
3	Central Science Laboratory[1]	all grades
4	Central Veterinary Laboratory[1]	all grades

[1] Agency.
[2] Canidate Agency.

Note:
ADAS and Meat Hygience Service are not covered by the MAFF pay delegation plan because they have already taken pay delegation from April 1994 and 1995 respectively.

B. Trade Union Recognition and Negotiating Arrangements

For the bargaining units list above:

1. Single table negotiations have been agreed with the FDA, IPMS, NUCPS, and CPSA.

2. Multiple table negotiating arrangements will continue with GMB, NUMAST and TGWU.

3. Single table negotiations have been agreed with the IPMS, NUCPS and CPSA.

4. Discussions on single table negotiations are in progress with IPMS, NUCPS, CPSA and GMB.

Animals (Transport)

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to amend the Animal Transport Order 1994 to take into account the increase of trailer size to 3.7 metres. [38153]

Mrs. Browning: A number of representations have been made to us about the increase in the size of trailers commonly used by farmers to transport livestock on short journeys. We are currently consulting on revisions of the Welfare of Animals during Transport Order 1994 and we are considering in that context how to update the current legislative requirements to reflect current practice.

Fisheries

Dr. Godman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent discussions have taken place with Fisheries Ministers and officials of the Irish Republic regarding the harmonisation of fishing regulation in the Irish sea; and if he will make a statement. [38443]

Mr. Baldry: Officials in the UK Fisheries Departments are in frequent touch with officials of the Irish Republic's Departments of the Marine. I met the Irish Minister of the Marine in Dublin on 18 September when we discussed a range of fisheries questions including the regulation of fisheries in the Irish sea. All countries that fish in the Irish sea do so under the rules of the common fisheries policy.

Departmental Fraud

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total number of cases of all forms of fraud committed by employees of his (a) Department, (b) agencies and, (c) non-departmental public bodies, for each year from 1991–92 to 1994–95; and for each of these years, what was the total monetary sum (i) misappropriated in such frauds and (ii) subsequently recovered. [39136]

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 24 October 1995]: The analysis of reported cases of fraud committed by employees of the Department and its agencies is set out in the table:

Financial year	Number cases	Value	Amount recovered
1991–92	6	£3,000	See note
1992–93	3	£1,000	See note
1993–94	4	£14,000	£5,000 recovered £5,000 not recovered £4,000 under prosecution
	1	—Still under investigation—
1994–95	No new cases

Details of amounts recovered for earlier years are not readily available.

Details of frauds committed by staff of non-departmental public bodies for 1991–92 are not readily available. No frauds have been reported to the Department in respect of the years 1992–93 onwards.

Toxic Waste

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what nuclear and toxic waste was deposited in the Beaufort dyke and in other areas of the North channel and the Irish sea in each of the last 20 years. [38591]

Mr. Baldry: The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food is responsible for licensing the disposal of waste at sea around the coast of England and Wales. The Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department performs a similar function in Scottish waters which includes Beaufort's dyke as do the Department of the Environment Northern Ireland in their waters. No nuclear waste has been dumped in the Irish sea, North channel or Beaufort's dyke. The Ministry has granted a number of licenses for the disposal of sewage sludge, industrial waste and dredged material in the North channel and Irish sea. None of this waste was toxic. The annual "Aquatic Environment Monitoring Report" published by the Directorate of Fisheries Research contains details of all licenses issued and copies are placed in the Library of the House.

Fish Conservation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy in respect of implementing the days at sea limitation provision of the Sea Fish Conservation Acts after the recent rejection of the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations case against it by the European Court of Justice. [39354]

Mr. Baldry: I welcome the European Court of Justice's clear endorsement of the legality of the measures adopted by this House in 1993. However, after two years' delay while the legal processes have been taking place, I would not see it as being sensible to implement now the planned arrangements which were based on levels of fishing in 1991.

There have, in addition, been a number of developments in EU fisheries policy, including the new EU effort ceilings applying to all member states fishing in western waters, the enforcement of which is currently under discussion in the Fisheries Council. We also need to take account of the fact that the Council will soon be discussing the next stage of the multi-annual guidance programme to apply from 1997, in which it is expected that the concept of effort management will be extended further.

Against the background, I do not at present see it as appropriate to reactivate the days at sea policy. We need to look ahead in the wider context of EU policy developments and the growing role envisaged for effort management. This will need careful consideration in close consultation with the industry in order to find the best way of securing a proper balance between the legitimate activities of our fishermen and the need to conserve the fish stocks on which they depend for tomorrow's catches.

Meanwhile, we will continue to monitor the effort currently being deployed to ensure that it does not undermine the reductions in capacity which we are securing through the decommissioning programme.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will pay the costs incurred by the NFFO in its action against the days at sea limitation in the Sea Fish Conservation Acts. [39355]

Mr. Baldry: This case arose as a result of a judicial review sought by the NFFO of measures which had been adopted by both Houses of Parliament. The measures adopted by Parliament have been found by the European Court of Justice to be compatible with EU law. The question of costs, including the Government's defence costs, will be dealt with by the UK courts when they consider the rulings of the European Court of Justice.

Mr. Michell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the total costs incurred in setting up the machinery for implementing and adjudicating the days at sea provisions of the Sea Fish Conservation Acts. [39356]

Mr. Baldry: Implementation of the Sea Fish Licensing (Time at Sea) (Principles) Order 1993 was suspended pending the outcome of a legal challenge initiated by the United Kingdom fishing industry, which the European Court of Justice has not upheld. Because of the suspension, the provisions of the legislation relating to the operation of a tribunal were not put into effect. Costs associated with preparatory work on the policy within Government prior to the suspension are estimated at approximately £555,000.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he proposes to hold with fishermen's organisations and what proposals he intends to put up for technical conservation measures following the decision by the European Court that those are lawful methods of restraining fishing effort. [39357]

Mr. Baldry: Technical conservation measures already apply to all sectors of the fishing industry. Consultations have recently taken place on new measures affecting fixed gear. Further discussions are planned for both the North sea and western waters fisheries. The Government will not put forward any proposals without discussing them with the industry.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has for increasing the saithe quota for British fishermen and for stopping the dumping of saithe. [39358]

Mr. Baldry: If the fishing industry would like an increase in its saithe quota for 1995, I will explore the possibility of obtaining additional quantities through exchanges with other member states. The size of the United Kingdom quota for 1996 will be decided in the light of scientific advice on the state of the stocks.

In considering ways of improving the common fisheries policy, I will look at constructive ideas for reducing the discarding of saithe and all other fish.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the French and British total allowable catches for saithe; what is the distribution of saithe between British and French waters; and what are the reasons for the variation in total allowable catches. [39359]

Mr. Baldry: There are three saithe stocks for which the United Kingdom and France have quotas: ICES areas IIa, III and IV—(the North sea and Baltic)—areas Vb, VI, XII and XIV—(west of Scotland), and areas VII, VIII, IX, and X—waters to the west of Ireland, England, France, Spain and Portugal. UK and French shares of the European Community total allowable catch for each of these stocks, reflecting historic catches during the period 1973 to 1978, are as follows:

Per cent.

Stock	UK	France
North Sea and Baltic	17	51
West of Scotland	24	66
Other western waters	15	56

Among member states, France has the largest quota and the UK the second largest.

It is not possible to specify the distribution of saithe between British and French waters, since saithe cover extensive areas in their normal migration between spawning and feeding grounds.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Nursery Education

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what is the estimated cost of providing nursery education through the proposed voucher scheme in Solihull in 1995–96; [38794]

(2) what is the cost of the provision of nursery education provided by Solihull council in 1995 and 1996; [38793]

(3) what estimate she has made of how many additional pupils will be recruited to her nursery scheme in Solihull by the voucher scheme. [38792]

Mr. Robin Squire: The cost of providing nursery education through the nursery voucher scheme, and the number of additional places that will be created, will depend on parental choice and the response of providers in the area.

The current cost of nursery education provided by Solihull council is not held centrally.

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what powers she has in respect of the provision of nursery education by local authorities. [38791]

Mr. Squire: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment may give notice to a local authority that a statutory proposal published by the authority to establish a new nursery class in a county school or to cease to maintain a nursery school or nursery class, requires her approval.

Education Expenditure (West Sussex)

Sir Peter Hordern: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much money West Sussex county council spent on education in 1994–95 on administration and other central costs apart from direct expenditure on schools. [38578]

Mr. Robin Squire: Expenditure by West Sussex education authority on service strategy and regulation, management and administration and the inspection and advisory service was £11.074 million in 1993–94. This figure has not been adjusted for any changes of function. Outturn figures for 1994–95 are not yet available.

Sir Peter Hordern: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the revenue support grant settlement for education for West Sussex for each of the last five years up to and including 1994–95, the percentage movement in each year; and if she will give the equivalent percentage figure for England and Wales as a whole. [38579]

Mr. Squire: The information requested since the introduction of the standard spending assessment system in 1990–91 in West Sussex and English local education authorities as a whole is set out in the table. Welsh authorities are funded separately. The percentage figures take amount of local authority changes of functions, such as the transfer of responsibility for most further education to the Further Education Funding Council in 1993–94.

Year	£ million	West Sussex percentage change over previous year	England percentage change over previous year

1992–93	236.038	8.4	7.1
1993–94	209.127	3.2	2.9
1994–95	220.285	6.3	2.7

Fish Tank (Minister's Office)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the cost of installing a fish tank in the office of the Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham (Mrs. Gillan). [38848]

Mrs. Gillan: The cost of installation of the fish tank was paid by me privately.

Retired Teachers

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many teachers retired from the profession in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what proportion of them had reached statutory retirement age. [39116]

Mr. Robin Squire: A total of 21,254 teachers started to draw a pension in 1994–95. Of these, 5,814 were aged 60 or more, the age at which they may retire and receive their pension of their own accord.

Secondary Schools (Admission)

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment which local education authorities have, during the last five years, successfully sought a change in age of admission to their secondary schools from 12-plus to 11-plus; how many introduced the change in phases and how many all at once; and what were the capital costs in each case. [38589]

Mrs. Gillan: The table shows the local education authorities that have successfully sought a change in the age of admission to their secondary schools from age 12 or above to age 11 since January 1990 and whether the change was phased. Details of the capital costs involved could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Training for Work

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has to review outcome-related funding structures in the training for work scheme. [38520]

Mr. Paice: Any changes to the current funding arrangements for training for work will be considered in the light of performances of the programme, but we have no plans to cease making output-related payments, which are an effective incentive to produce results for participants.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what priority will be given to the long-term unemployed and persons with special needs, including illiteracy and innumeracy, within the training for work programme; and if she will make a statement. [38521]

Mr. Paice: People aged 18 to 24 who have been unemployed for two years or more and people with special needs—people with disabilities, those needing help with literacy and numeracy, and those needing help with English for speakers of other languages—have priority for places on the programme, and TECs have been set specific targets for starts in these groups. People with special needs also have accelerated entry to the programme. Priority entry is also given to those referred from specific Employment Service programmes designed to help the one year or two year unemployed.

In addition, the Government pay TECs considerably higher prices for starts and outcomes for those who have been unemployed for over a year and for those with special needs.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on the findings of the Coopers and Lybrand report "Evaluation of the Training for Work (TFW) Funding Pilots: Final Report". [38522]

Mr. Paice: The Coopers and Lybrand report made some useful suggestions for the funding of the programme.

All the recommendations in the report regarding funding policy were implemented, bar one. The move to a funding system based on 25 per cent. payment for starts and 75 per cent. for outcomes, rather than to one partly based on a payment for weeks of training delivered as suggested in the report, will sharpen the focus on achieving a successful outcome for trainees.

The Department's response to the report is set out, in full, in a note which accompanies the report. This is available in the Library.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps she will take to improve recruitment rates on the training for work scheme. [38523]

Mr. Paice: Recruitment this year to training for work has been below anticipated levels. I am determined that performance should improve. Officials and TEC representatives have worked together to ensure that the changes necessary to improve recruitment are made as quickly as possible.

I have written personally to all TEC chairmen stressing the importance that I place upon recruitment to the programme.

Mr. Hinchcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how she monitors the effectiveness of the training for work scheme in providing placements for the long-term unemployed. [38524]

Mr. Paice: The provision of placements is the responsibility of TECs in meeting their contracted starts and outputs targets. TECs are monitored against these targets.

Walsall TEC

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress Walsall training and enterprise council is making in meeting the criteria for the award for a three-year licence. [39993]

Mr. Paice: I am pleased to announce the award of a three-year licence to Walsall TEC, which has now completed the process of meeting the rigorous standards we set.

TRANSPORT

A66

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now support the addition of the A66 between Penrith and Scotch corner to the Trans-European road network. [38728]

Mr. Watts: The A66 was carefully considered for inclusion in the Trans European road network during the consultation period in 1994 but it was decided not to incorporate the route into the United Kingdom portion of the network. As the circumstances of the route have not materially changed since, this remains the position.

British Bus

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the flotation of British Bus and the establishment of a potential national cartel in the public bus transport sector. [38903]

Mr. Norris: The flotation of British Bus is a matter for the company concerned. The question of any potential cartel is a matter for the competition authorities.

Mersey Docks and Harbour Co.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the Government grant made to Mersey Docks and Harbour Co., in 1989, was written off; and if he will make a statement. [38435]

Mr. Norris [holding answer 24 October 1995]: As part of the company's capital reconstruction in 1989, the Government agreed to write off £1.5 million, being a proportion of outstanding loans, and to waive its entitlement to £110 million of repayable grants made between 1971 and 1982. No additional grants were made to the company by Government in 1989 as part of that reconstruction.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many of the dock labour force who accepted payment in 1989, are now being re-introduced by the Mersey Docks and Harbour Co.; and if he will make a statement. [38434]

Mr. Norris [holding answer 24 October 1995]: This is a matter for the Mersey Docks and Harbour Co.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what instructions the Government representatives on the board of the Mersey Docks and Harbour Co., have been given to resolve the dispute with the dock labour force; and if he will make a statement. [38436]

Mr. Norris [holding answer 24 October 1995]: My right hon. Friend ceased to appoint "A" directors to the board of the Mersey Docks and Harbour Co. in 1989, following a capital reconstruction.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the salary and names of the board of the Mersey Dock and Harbour Co. and the salary in the financial year for 1987–88. [38432]

Mr. Norris [holding answer 24 October 1995]: These are matters for the Mersey Docks and Harbour Co. Details can be found in its annual report for the year involved.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it a condition of further grants to the Mersey Docks and Harbour Co. that the company provide permanent contracts of employment in respect of stevedoring work. [38739]

Mr. Norris: It is not Government policy to make grants to harbour authorities. Contracts of employment are matters for the company.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of the Government's share in the Mersey Docks and Harbours Co. was used to finance the purchase of Medway Ports Ltd. in 1993; and if he will make a statement. [38433]

Mr. Norris [holding answer 24 October]: The Government played no role in this purchase which was entirely a commercial matter for the Mersey Docks and Harbour Co.

Passenger Rail Franchises

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the companies which have expressed an interest in bidding for passenger rail franchises. [38907]

Mr. Watts: No. This information is commercially confidential.

A(1)M bypass

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current estimate he has made of the daily number of vehicles which use the Doncaster A(1)M bypass in each direction; and what were the comparable figures for (a) five years and (b) 10 years ago. [39028]

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 25 October 1995:

As you know, the Minister for Railways and Roads, Mr. John Watts, has asked me to write in reply to your Parliamentary Question asking what is the current estimate of the daily number of vehicles using the A1(M) Doncaster Bypass in each direction and what were the comparable figures 5 and 10 years ago.

The provisional estimate for 1995 is 26,600 northbound and 27,000 southbound. The corresponding figures for 1990 were 22,800 northbound and 25,400 southbound. Estimates for 1985 are on a slightly different basis but showed 17,300 vehicles per day travelling northbound and 17,500 southbound.

Tax Discs

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many vehicles have been clamped by the driving and vehicle licensing centre for failing to display a valid tax disc since July; and if he will make a statement. [39019]

Mr. Norris: None. However, a pilot scheme to clamp those evading duty will commence early next year in parts of London.

Marine Safety

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the British-registered ferries (a) Pride of Bruges, (b) Pride of Cherbourg, (c) Pride of Hampshire and (d) Pioneer are now able to offer 100 per cent. dry-shod evacuation arrangements; and if he will make a statement. [38289]

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Marine Safety Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from R. M. Bradley to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 25 October 1995:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your Question about whether the British—registered PRIDE OF BRUGES, PRIDE OF CHERBOURG, PRIDE OF HAMPSHIRE and PIONEER are now able to offer 100% dry-shod evacuation arrangements.

The evacuation arrangements for these ferries remain as set out in my reply to Mr. Paul Flynn on 9 May (Official Report, vol 259 col 347).

Right-hand Driving

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals his Department is considering to introduce driving on the right hand side of the road. [39763]

Mr. Norris: None.

Motorways

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to introduce high-occupancy vehicle lanes on the motorway systems of the M1, M62 and the new sections of the A1 in Yorkshire; and if he will make a statement. [38999]

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 25 October 1995:

As you know, the Minister for Railways and Roads, Mr. John Watts, has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the introduction of high occupancy vehicle lanes on the M1, M62 and the new sections of the A1 in Yorkshire.

There are currently no plans to introduce high occupancy vehicle lanes on the M1, the M62 or on the new sections of the A1 in Yorkshire. However, the Highways Agency is studying the use of high occupancy vehicle lanes overseas.

Although useful lessons can be learnt from the experience of others, we need to judge how effective the technique is likely to be on the UK network with its traffic flow levels, types of driver behaviour and road layout. If the results of our studies are promising, we will consider introducing a pilot scheme at a selected site to trial the initiative.

Railway Noise

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport for what reasons the Noise Insulation (Railways and other Guided Transport Systems) Regulations 1995 do not set standards to be applied to the mitigation of railway noise at source. [39846]

Mr. Watts: The enabling legislation for the Noise Insulation Regulations for new railway lines in section 20 of the Land Compensation Act 1973. This section authorises the Secretary of State to make regulations imposing a duty or conferring a power on the authority responsible for the public works to insulate buildings against noise from the construction or use of public works. This means that regulations made under the Land Compensation Act 1973 cannot include standards for the mitigation of noise at source.

However, the existence of regulations for railways, and the noise trigger levels included in them, will encourage authorities constructing new lines to incorporate noise mitigation at source into the design of the lines.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Miss Chelsea Austin

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on his Department's treatment of the funds raised by the Chelsea Austin appeal fund in respect of Chelsea Austin, Dingwall, Rossshire. [38588]

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ursula Brennan to Mr. Charles Kennedy, dated 24 October 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question concerning the Department's treatment of the funds raised by the Chelsey Austin Appeal Fund. Mr. Mathison is away from Leeds on Benefits Agency business and he has asked me to reply on his behalf.

The Adjudication Officer's original decision to treat the monies in the Chelsea Austin Appeal Fund as capital failed to take account of changes to Scottish Trust law, introduced earlier this year. As a result of those changes, the Chelsey Austin Appeal Fund is accepted as a trust fund in Scottish law.

The Adjudication Officer has revised her decision in the light of this and arrears of benefit amounting to £143 have been paid to Chelsey's father, Mr. Kevin Austin.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Child Support Agency

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what procedures a lone mother with two children of different fathers is expected to take when completing the Child Support Agency maintenance application form if she wants only one father to be pursued; and what consideration has been given to requiring more than one signature on the maintenance application form to authorise maintenance from two separate fathers. [37587]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 25 October 1995:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State concerning maintenance applications and disclosure of information about absent parents.

To establish whether "good cause" applies in an application for child maintenance, a letter is first issued to the parent with care. This letter allows her to inform the Agency why she should not be required to co-operate with the Agency in respect of any alleged absent parent. The Agency will consider her representations and a maintenance application form will be issued to establish details only of the absent parent or parents for whom "good cause" has not been accepted.

All of the parent with care's details are obtained on one form. She is asked to provide information about all the children who live with her. For each child she is asked "Is this child included in the application for child maintenance?". Where "good cause" has been accepted against that child's absent parent, she should answer "No" to that question. This procedure is explained in the help notes that accompany the maintenance application form and removes the need for multiple signatures on one form where there is more than one absent parent involved.

The Child Support National Enquiry telephone line is quoted in this section of the help notes and will provide help or confidential advice about the completion of this section of the form. Clients are also advised that they can contact the Child Support Agency Centre for help and if necessary an interview will be arranged to discuss matters.

I hope this is helpful.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 19 July, Official Report, column 1499, what steps are taken to ensure that benefit savings specified as coming from income support claims being withdrawn within four weeks of Child Support Agency action are entirely due to the operations of the Child Support Agency and not any external factors. [37616]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 25 October 1995:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security on the subject of benefit savings.

For the Child Support Agency, a benefit saving is only recorded when a parent with care ceases to claim Income Support within four weeks of Agency action, or within eight weeks if the action relates to an investigation into the requirement to co-operate.

Savings which may not have arisen directly as a result of the Agency's action will be more than offset by those savings which are due to the Agency's actions, but occurred outside the four or eight week period and are not taken into account at all.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 19 July, Official Report, column 1499, what are the arguments for including benefit savings resulting from pre-Child Support Agency assessments within the total figure for benefit savings achieved by the Child Support Agency during 1994–95. [37617]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 25 October 1995:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security on the subject of benefit savings resulting from pre-Child Support Agency assessments.

The Agency has Departmental responsibility for all benefit savings arising from child maintenance. This includes savings arising from pre-Child Support maintenance arrangements under which maintenance was paid direct between parents, and cases in which the Agency provides a collection service for parents with care. In both categories, the Agency fulfils a continuing monitoring and, where necessary, enforcement role.

It is estimated that of the £479 million in benefit savings recorded in 1994/95, £126.5 million arose in cases where the parent with care was receiving Income Support with maintenance under a pre-CSA arrangement. As more cases are assessed or reviewed by the Agency, the proportion of savings arising from these arrangements is reducing.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the average times taken for the liable relatives unit and the courts to deal with a child maintenance case in the last year of that system; and what is the equivalent figure for the Child Support Agency. [37595]

Mr. Mitchell: The information is not readily available in the format requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The Lord Chancellor's Department does not hold information as to the time taken by the courts to deal with child maintenance cases.

The average time taken by the Child Support Agency between the issue of a maintenance application form and the maintenance assessment being made is 211 days. This calculation is based on 5 per cent. sample cases taken for May 1995.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a breakdown of the amounts of child maintenance absent parents were required to pay by the child support unit in the financial year 1992–93. [37598]

Mr. Mitchell: The information requested is not available as, in many of the cases dealt with by the child support unit, an arrangement was made for the absent parent to pay maintenance direct to the parent with care. Where this exceeded the parent with care's benefit entitlement, benefit ceased and the unit was not required to collect information. In those cases where benefit continued to be paid, information collected centrally related only to the total amounts of maintenance which were actually paid.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will name the suppliers which were invited to tender for the supply of the Child Support Agency computer system; and what were the terms of their offers. [37599]

Mr. Heald: In 1992, a contract for the provision of the Child Support Agency's operational accounting system was awarded following a competitive procurement under European Community rules. Following a formal shortlisting process EDS Scicon and Lockheed IMS were invited to submit tenders. Following formal evaluation of these tenders the contract was awarded to EDS Scicon. The contract has later been extended to include additional requirements.

In 1993, following a competitive procurement under EC rules a contract was awarded for a CSA financial accounting system. IBM United Kingdom Ltd., Easams Ltd. and Walker International were shortlisted and a contract was subsequently awarded to IBM United Kingdom Ltd.

In 1995, following a competitive procurement under EC rules Sanderson CFL Ltd. and ICL (UK) Ltd., were shortlisted for a CSA debt management system. A letter of intent for contract award has been issued to Sanderson CFL Ltd.

The terms of the offers received are regarded as commercial in confidence and cannot be disclosed.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 19 April, Official Report, column 181, whether the figure for benefit savings achieved by the liable relatives unit in the year 6 April 1991 to 5 April 1992 includes an allowance for parents with care who ceased to claim income support within four weeks of being contacted by the Department of Social Security, or for parents with care who ceased to claim income support after maintenance had been arranged; and if he will estimate the benefit savings to the Child Support Agency of using the 1994 accounting rules in the financial year 1994–95. [37618]

Mr. Mitchell: The benefits savings figure for 1991–92 included amounts for cases where claims ceased within four weeks of the Department taking action to arrange, increase or enforce payment for maintenance.

The Child Support Agency made benefit savings of £479.05 million in 1994–95.

Chief Adjudication Officer

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will publish the 11th annual report of the chief adjudication officer, and if he will make a statement. [39870]

Mr. Roger Evans: The report is published today. The chief adjudication officer's findings record further improvement in the standards of adjudication on benefits. Overall, more than three quarters of all decisions were correct in every respect. I am particularly pleased to see the substantial improvement in income support and the disability benefits.

The chief adjudication officer will continue to work on a day-to-day basis with the Benefits Agency and the Employment Service providing additional guidance and expert technical assistance in those areas where further improvements are needed.

The agencies are committed to improving standards of adjudication, as illustrated by the continuing emphasis on quality in their annual business plans. Both the chief adjudication officer and I look forward to continuing progress in coming years.

Chronic Bronchitis and Emphysema

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the number of claims for benefit under the chronic bronchitis and emphysema regulations for each month in the current year; and if he will make a statement on the successful claims. [36736]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is set out in the table:

Number of claims per month during 1995 in respect of PD D12—chronic bronchitis and emphysema

Month ending	PD D12 claims received
31 January 1995	208
28 February 1995	243

The overall success rate for awards of PD D12 is 11.3 per cent. which is in line with the overall average success rate for claims in respect of prescribed diseases.

Students' Benefits

Mr. Battle: to ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consideration he has given to the effect of the new Social Security Benefits Regulations, SI 1995, No. 1742, upon intercalating students who cease to be eligible for educational maintenance and who now will be ineligible for social security maintenance; and if he will make a statement. [38406]

Mr. Roger Evans: In general, it is the educational maintenance system which is designed to provide support for students, not the social security system. It has always been the case that students who temporarily suspend their studies are not entitled to claim social security benefits unless they fall within one of the specified vulnerable groups, including disabled students and families with dependent children. The effect of the new Social Security Benefits Regulations, SI 1995, No 1742, is to restore the policy intention following a recent Court of Appeal decision. The Department for Education and Employment has recently issued revised and expanded guidance to all local education authorities about their discretionary powers to continue to pay mandatory awards to students during periods of temporary absence.

Athsma Sufferers (Benefits)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to introduce dedicated training for Benefit Agency staff on the problems faced by those asthma sufferers on low incomes. [38313]

Mr. Roger Evans: There are no plans to introduce dedicated training to Benefits Agency staff specifically on the problems faced by asthma sufferers on low incomes. The agency is not aware of any particular problems asthma sufferers have encountered with the service provided by its staff.

Should information be received which indicates otherwise, the agency will consider what action, if any, is appropriate.

Lone Parents

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many lone parents signed on to benefits in each of the last four years. [37606]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The information is in the table.

Lone parents signing on to Income support/Family credit:

Financial year	Family credit	Income support
1990–91	98,000	n/a
1991–92	96,000	n/a

1993–94	149,000	290,000

Claims to One Parent Benefit:

1. All figures have been rounded to the nearest thousand.

2. One Parent Benefit figures are only available for calendar years.
3. Figures relate to new claims in the periods shown. It is possible for the same person to appear more than one if they cease claiming benefit and subsequently make a fresh claim after some time has elapsed.
4. Income Support figures are derived from 'point in time' figures at quarterly intervals through the year. It is possible that some new claimants may be omitted from the table if they started and ceased to claim Income Support entirely in the interval between two quarterly enquiries.

Chief Child Support Officer

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will publish the second report of the chief child support officer; and if he will make a statement. [39869]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: His report for 1994–95 is published today. The report shows that the CSA is making good and steady progress after a difficult start. The findings on the standard of adjudication show improvements over the first year, but that there is still some distance to go before standards may be regarded as generally acceptable. However, the chief child support officer, Mr. Ernie Hazlewood, recognises that there has been a high degree of legislative and operational changes over the last year and that this is bound to affect performance. He acknowledges the agency's obvious commitment to attaining good adjudication standards, which he expects to show further improvements in 1995–96. I am pleased to see that this improvement has continued strongly in the first half of this year.

The continuing requirement for further improvement is substantial, but the key elements are in place and he and I expect the agency to use them effectively to produce the standards which all concerned have a right to expect.

ENVIRONMENT

Pesticides

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many inspectors are employed in the field to check on the use of and levels of pesticides. [37744]

Sir Paul Beresford: Inspectors or other enforcement officers are not allocated solely to matters relating to pesticides. Pesticides work forms only part of a range of work for which they are responsible. This includes, for example, the health and safety of people at work, the protection and improvement of the water environment and the protection of wildlife. As at 1 October 1995, the total number of inspectors or enforcement officers in the field are set out in the table.

Figures for Great Britain unless otherwise stated

	Number
Health and Safety Executive	742
Local Authorities	6,560
National Rivers Authority (England and Wales)	545
River Purification Authorities (Scotland)	111
Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (England and Wales)	34
Scottish Office (Scotland)	59

Bottle Factories

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the result of his Department's evaluation of the study carried out by the Health and Safety Laboratory in conjunction with the division of respiratory medicine at Sheffield in respect of respiratory illness experienced by bottle factory workers; what recommendations were made; and if he will make a statement. [38634]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Health and Safety Executive has released to the employers and trade unions involved the Health and Safety Laboratory's preliminary report on the investigation of the small group of bottle factory workers. Further work is required to determine the significance of the results.

Mine Safety

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how pit safety in the privatised mining industry is currently regulated. [38491]

Sir Paul Beresford: The newly privatised mining industry is subject to the same regulatory regime for health and safety as its predecessor. All mines are subject to the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974 as well as the Mines and Quarries Act 1954 and the Mines and Quarries (Tips) Act 1969. An extensive range of regulations applicable to mines has been made under both the 1954 and 1974 Acts. The Health and Safety Commission is the regulatory body and the Health and Safety Executive, through its inspectorate of mines, is the enforcing authority.

Wylfa Power Station

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the nuclear installations inspectorate in respect of the magnox reactors at Wylfa power station consider whether a grab dropped into a fuel channel was specifically considered in the hazard and operability study; what their assessment of the minimum resistance to gas-flow passed by such an obstacle as a grab was; if they have discovered how many components needed to fail before the grab dropped off; what required modifications have been carried out to prevent a recurrence; when they were implemented; and if he will make a statement. [39069]

Sir Paul Beresford: The circumstances surrounding the failure of the grab component at Wylfa power station and the subsequent actions taken to prevent a recurrence were presented at Mold Crown court on 12 to 14 September 1995 and are now a matter of public record.

Social Housing

Mr. Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to amend his guidance to housing associations to ensure that this does not encourage the break-up of families and the increase of housing benefit through increased provision of social housing for single people. [39268]

Mr. Clappison: Housing associations' provision of social housing is based on the local authorities' analysis of local needs for family and other accommodation contained in their annual housing strategies, which are assessed by Ministers. I have no plans to alter this policy.

Opencast Mines

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider holding centrally, by county or region, records of contractors wishing to develop opencast mining who have submitted planning applications; and if he will make a statement. [39067]

Sir Paul Beresford: Local planning authorities, usually the district or borough council, are statutorily required to maintain records of all minerals planning applications including those for opencast mining. The minerals planning authorities, usually the county council, are also advised by Government to maintain a similar register. To hold all this information centrally or regionally would be a needless duplication of effort.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many planning applications his Department has received submitted by contractors in respect of opencast mining in (a) Oxfordshire and (b) its neighbouring countries; and if he will make a statement. [39066]

Sir Paul Beresford: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment does not receive planning applications. However, the requested information can be obtained from the local planning authorities which have a statutory responsibility to maintain a public register of all planning applications that they receive.

Menwith Hill

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the reasons why Menwith Hill in North Yorkshire does not appear on ordnance survey maps. [39068]

Sir Paul Beresford: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to Ordnance Survey under its chief executive, Professor Rhind. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from David Rhind to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 24 October 1995:

The Secretary of State for the Environment has asked me to reply to your Question about the depiction on Ordnance Survey maps of Menwith Hill in North Yorkshire.

I have confirmed that the topographic feature, Menwith Hill, at National Grid reference SE1957, is included on Ordnance Survey maps and in our digital products at scale between 1:2500 and 1:50 000. It is omitted from the TravelMaster map at scale 1:250 000 due to the limited space available for features at this scale.

However, it may be that your interest lies in the United States military establishment, Menwith Hill Camp, situated approximately one kilometre east of the hill. At present, the camp is named on the 1:25 000 scale Ordnance Survey Pathfinder map (Number 663) and on all larger scales of Ordnance Survey mapping. On the 1:50 000 scale Landranger map (Number 104), the camp is not named, but a number of the camp buildings, the internal roads and several radio masts are shown in a generalised way, consistent with the specification for the map.

A review of the specification, insofar as it covers the depiction of security sites, has recently been completed by the various government departments concerned. The principle underlying the new specification is that sufficient details will be shown to satisfy the general map user whilst avoiding compromising the security and safety of the site concerned. The protective marking and hence depiction appropriate for Menwith Hill Camp is currently under discussion between other parts of HM Government Survey has been informed of the outcome, our surveyors will revise the depiction of the site so that it conforms with the new specification. The timing of the revision will be dependent on the extent of the change involved.

A number of considerations will determine whether the name of the establishment will be added if the site's protected status is amended or removed. In essence, at any scale of mapping, cartographic decisions have to be made about the amount of detail that can sensibly be shown at the scale, taking full account of map users' needs and priorities. In deciding whether to add the name, we would take into account the space available for it, the naming of Menwith Hill just to the west of the camp and features (topographic and textual) which would be of most use to Landranger users, as well as the need to conform with the rules on the depiction of security sites.

I hope that the foregoing fully addresses your concerns but please let me know if you require any additional information or clarification.

South Yorkshire Navigation

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) at how many points along the South Yorkshire navigation there is need for repairs or other action, in order that this navigation can be maintained as a satisfactory waterway; [38197]

(2) how many people are employed to maintain and to operate the South Yorkshire navigation; and what the figure was in 1983; [38200]

(3) if he will ensure that the hours during which freight can be carried on the South Yorkshire navigation are sufficient to allow this trade to continue effectively. [38203]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The British Waterways Board is the navigation authority for the Sheffield and South Yorkshire navigation. These questions are matters for the board, which is responsible for management and operational issues on its waterways.

Waterways

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment (1) what action is to be taken to ensure that boats are not moored in a position which impairs access to locks on navigable waterways; [38198]

(2) if he will ensure that mooring bollards on navigable waterways which are placed close to locks occupy such a position as will allow crew members to drop ropes upon them without the need to leave their vessels especially when such siting is conducive to safety. [38201]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: These are matters for the navigation authority responsible for regulating activities on the waterway concerned.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the extent to which policies of his Department are designed to promote the movement of freight on inland waterways. [38199]

Mr. Jones: Government policy is that we wish to see maximum use made of inland waterways for freight transport, but that this must be subject to commercial judgment. Freight hauliers should be free to choose the mode of transport best suited to their needs. The Department draws attention, where appropriate, to the potential of water for the carriage of freight, and grants that are available.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of whether dredging operations upon commercial waterways are at a level which will ensure effective and continuing use. [38202]

Mr. Jones: The Department has made no assessment of dredging operations upon commercial waterways. This is the responsibility of the navigation authorities concerned.

Local Authority Archives

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to hold centrally information in respect of local authorities on the amount of funding that is provided to maintain county archival records; and if he will make a statement. [38301]

Mr. Sproat: I have been asked to reply.

My Department has recently assumed certain additional responsibilities for archives, formerly with the Department of Environment. Local authorities provide information on the funding of their archive services to the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy. This is collated in its annual publication "Archive Services Statistics".

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Capital Building Programme

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list each capital building programme, costing more than £1 million, completed in each year since 1979–80, by or on behalf of his Department or local magistrates committees, together with the cost expressed in 1995–96 prices. [38331]

Mr. John M. Taylor: A schedule of all Crown, combined court and county court schemes is attached at annexe A. The readily available information on magistrates courts schemes is attached at annexe B. Although it is completed for the last four years, the Department does not hold detailed records of all magistrates court schemes completed prior to 1992 which is when responsibility transferred from the Home Office.

Unregistered Land

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the acreage and percentage of land in each county in England which is unregistered. [38037]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The registration of land is the responsibility of Her Majesty's Land Registry which was established as an executive agency of the Lord Chancellor in July 1990. The question concerns a specific matter on which the chief executive of the agency is best placed to provide the answer. I have accordingly asked the chief executive of Her Majesty's Land Registry to reply direct.

Letter from E. Beardsall to Mr. Gordon Prentice, dated 26 October 1995:

Acreage and Percentage of land in each English County which is unregistered

In the absence of the Chief Executive, who is presently away from the office, I have been asked by the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, to reply to your recent question to him concerning the acreage and percentage of land in each county of England which is unregistered.

I regret that statistics relating to unregistered land or to land acreage are not maintained by the Registry but I can tell you that out of an estimated 20 million titles in England, nearly 15 million are registered. The majority of registered titles relate to residential properties in urban areas.

I hope this information will be helpful.

Pay Bargaining

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will provide in respect of his plan of pay delegation submitted to the Treasury (a) a description of the staff in each bargaining unit covered by the plan, distinguishing staff in HQ functions, agencies and agency candidates, and in other identifiable business units and (b) proposals for trade union recognition in each bargaining unit and the negotiating machinery to be put in place in each bargaining unit. [38271]

Mr. John M. Taylor: In addition to the headquarters of the Lord Chancellor's Department and associated offices, the Lord Chancellor has responsibility for four agencies: the Court Service, Her Majesty's Land Registry, the Public Record Office and the Public Trust Office. He is also responsible for the Legal Aid Board, which is an executive non-departmental public body.

The Public Trust Office and the Court Service became executive agencies in July 1994 and April 1995 respectively, but pay issues of common interest have continued to be subject to joint consultation with LCD HQ. From 1 April 1996, however, the headquarters of the Lord Chancellor's Department—with associated offices—the Court Service and the Public Trust Office will each assume responsibility for the pay and grading of their staff and from that date will become separate units for collective bargaining purposes. The Legal Aid Board already has delegated responsibility in this area, from 1 April 1995. Staff in headquarters, the two agencies and the Legal Aid Board are primarily in senior management, executive, clerical, secretarial and office support grades. The Court Service also includes county court bailiffs, clerks to HM judges and a small number of domestic staff, the latter serving judges' lodgings.

The present pay and grading structures are, however, now under review. It is not envisaged that, in the immediate term, there will be any significant changes in the present recognition arrangements with the trade unions, who have been invited by headquarters and the two agencies to be party to interim pay agreements which would remain in place pending the outcome of the pay and grading reviews. Changes in pay, structure and collective bargaining arrangements may follow, after consultation and negotiation, as a result of these reviews.

The chief executives of Her Majesty's Land Registry and the Public Record Office have been asked to reply direct.

Letter from Sarah Tyacke to Mr. John McAllion, dated 26 October 1995:

I have been asked by the Lord Chancellor's Parliamentary Secretary to reply to your question about pay delegation.

(a) The Public Record Office, a small Government Department and an Executive Agency of the Lord Chancellor's Department, is making its own arrangements for pay delegation. All staff, comprising the unified (administrative and curatorial), secretarial, conservator and support grades, are covered in the bargaining unit.

(b) The office is proposing to continue current trade union recognition (FDA, NUCPS, CPSA and IPMS), and is seeking single table bargaining arrangements.

Letter from E. Beardsall to Mr. John McAllion dated 26 October 1995:

In the absence of the Chief Executive, who is presently away from the office, I have been asked by the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, to reply to your recent question to him concerning pay delegation in HM Land Registry.

As a separate department, the Registry has always dealt directly with HM Treasury and, since 1 April 1994, has been responsible for its own pay and grading systems. Agreed negotiating machinery is in place which involves three trade unions representing all groups of Land Registry staff.

I do hope that this answers the points raised with the Parliamentary Secretary but please contact me if I can be of any further assistance.

TREASURY

Less-developed Countries (Debt)

Mr. Denham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table projecting, for each less-developed country, the total debt stock and annual debt service obligation if the Trinidad and Madrid terms were to be implemented in full. [38396]

Mrs. Angela Knight: I regret that the figures are not available to produce meaningful projections as requested.

Our objective in proposing the Trinidad terms for bilateral debt, and the multilateral debt initiative launched in Madrid, is to reduce the debt burden of the poorest, most indebted countries to sustainable levels. We continue to pursue this objective.

Tobacco Industry

Mr. Parry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures of people employed in the tobacco industry at the latest available date and the figures for 1990. [39286]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Available information closest to that requested is for employees in employment in the tobacco manufacturing industry at September 1989, 1991 and 1993. The information is provided in the following table.

Year	Employees (thousands)
1989	11.4
1991	8.7
1993	8.0

Labour Statistics

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many jobs, created in the last year, were in (a) small and medium-sized companies, (b) manufacturing industries and (c) service industries. [39376]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The information requested for small and medium-sized companies is not available. Information for manufacturing and services is available only for the net change in jobs and is provided in the following table.

Employment in Great Britain: June (thousands)[1]

	1994	1995	Net change
Manufacturing	4,052	4,086	34
Services	17,832	18,145	313

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures he is proposing to reduce tendering costs for public finance initiative schemes. [37162]

Mr. Jack: This is, of course a private not a public finance initiative—although the Government want to keep costs down for both the private and public sectors. I am keen to see an increase in the use of the private finance initiative for the scouring of public projects. However, I am aware of concerns about the costs involved in this exercise and plan shortly to meet with representatives of the construction industry to discuss the matter. However, as experience of the PFI grows costs will continue to fall as Government and business improve their expertise in making contracts in this way. The Government are also encouraging the spread of best practice among Departments, for example by avoiding over-prescriptive specifications.

Income Tax

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the rate of higher rate of income tax necessary to counterbalance the effect of (a) abolition of the lower rate of income tax and (b) the abolition of the lower rate of income tax and national insurance contributions for the lowest band tax payers. [37959]

Mr. Jack: It would be inappropriate to comment about the range of possible changes to tax rates and thresholds being assessed for the Budget statement. The direct revenue effects of illustrative tax changes are shown in "Tax Ready Reckoner and Tax Reliefs" published by HM Treasury in July, a copy of which is in the Library.

Tax Evasion

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many cases of evasion of payments of (a) income tax and (b) other tax have been discovered in each of the last five years; and what has been the value of the revenue recovered in both categories. [37922]

Mr. Jack: The information requested for taxes administered by the Inland Revenue is as follows:

Year	Income tax investigations	Other investigations	Yield from counter-evasion work (£ million)
1989–90	57,997	12,551	933
1990–91	61,755	13,219	1,091
1991–92	59,993	14,421	1,324
1992–93	55,611	12,952	1,361
1993–94	58,420	12,200	1,295
1994–95	57,701	10,643	1,378

The figure of yield for 1994–95 cannot be compiled on a basis exactly comparable with earlier years, owing to a change in the way these figures are maintained. Unlike previous years, it includes the yield from all employer compliance work.

Pensions

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average accrued capital value based on private sector annuity rates or other appropriate calculation method of (a) a civil service employee's pension and (b) other public sector employee's pensions of those (i) employees retiring this year and (ii) those current and past employees with future pension rights at retirement. [37884]

Mr. Waldegrave: Information for all public sector and public service pension arrangements is not kept centrally. However, the table sets out the average capitalised values of retirement benefits for civil servants who are members of the principal civil service pension scheme together with corresponding figures for two of the large public service schemes.

Approximate capitalised value of average accrued retired benefit entitlement

Pension scheme	Pensioners retiring over the year to 1 October 1995 £	Active members at 1 April 1995 £	Pensioners with preserved benefits at 1 April 1995 £
1. PCSPS (excluding N.I.)	98,000	32,000	14,000
2. NHS (England, Wales, Scotland and N.I.)	80,000	30,000	10,000
3. Teachers' Superannuation Scheme (England and Wales)	146,000	61,000	16,000

Notes:

The capitalised values include the value of pension benefits, lump sum retirement benefits and attached spouse's pensions.

The values for pensioners retiring over the year to 1 October 1995 exclude those retirements due to ill health.

Fidelity Bonus

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consideration he has given to funding a fidelity bonus paid to couples who stay married for five years. [39030]

Mr. Jack: I have received many interesting proposals in the run-up to the Budget which I am considering carefully.

Black Economy

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest date when an investigation into the black economy took place; what was its findings; and what was the estimate of the extent of the black economy, and the resulting loss of revenue in income tax, in actual and at 1995 prices. [39009]

Mr. Jack: It is not possible to make a reliable estimate of the size of the black economy. However, the Inland Revenue has an on-going programme to detect and deter evasion in all areas of the tax system for which it is responsible. I refer the hon. Member to the chapter entitled "Compliance" in the annual report of the board of Inland Revenue for the year ending 31 March 1995, which may be found in the House of Commons Library.

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the size of the black economy. [39008]

Mr. Jack: It is not possible to make a reliable estimate of the size of the black economy.

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the number of people who will pay capital gains tax in 1996–97 and 1997–98. [39091]

Mr. Jack: The number of individuals and trustees who will have capital gains tax liabilities arising from disposals in 1996–97 and 1997–98 are provisionally estimated at 90,000 and 95,000 respectively.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the behavioural effects of the abolition of capital gains tax. [39102]

Mr. Jack: It would not be appropriate to comment on tax matters in the run-up to the Budget.

Advance Corporation Tax

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of ACT receipts for 1995–96. [39095]

Mr. Jack: The forecast of advance corporation tax receipts for 1995–96 made at the time of the 1995 summer economic forecast was £9.5 billion.

Defence Expenditure

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the savings that could be made annually by linking British defence expenditure to the average level of other western European countries. [39252]

Mr. Waldegrave: None. UK defence expenditure is determined by UK defence needs and spending priorities. It would be meaningless to link it to the average of other countries' defence spending.

Overseas Aid Budget

Mr. Luff: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many representations his Department has received from (a) members of the general public, (b) hon. Members and (c) non-governmental organisations on the size of the overseas aid budget since 1 September; and what were the figures for the same period last year. [39084]

Mr. Waldegrave: The information is as follows:

Redundancy Payments

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to end or alter the tax reliefs available on the first £30,000 of redundancy payments; and if he will make a statement. [39143]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 24 October 1995]: I cannot anticipate my right hon. and learned Friend's Budget statement.

Employee Fraud

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total number of cases of all forms of fraud committed by employees of his (a) Department, (b) agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies for each year from 1991–92 to 1994–95; and for each of these years, what was the total monetary sum (1) misappropriated in such frauds and (2) subsequently recovered. [39126]

Mrs. Angela Night [holding answer 24 October 1995]: The total number of cases of fraud and the total monetary sum misappropriated and subsequently recovered is shown in the following table.

National Insurance

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the additional revenue yield which would result from extending employers' national insurance contributions to all fringe benefits currently liable to income tax only. [29141]

Mr. Heald: I have been asked to reply.

We estimate the figure to be £250 million based on 1994–95 figures.

TRANSPORT

Transport Council

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the result of the Transport Council held in Brussels on 28 September. [40234]

Sir George Young: The Transport Council met in Brussels on 28 September. My hon. Friend the Minister for Railways and Roads represented the United Kingdom.

The Council discussed proposals for a Community negotiating mandate on road transport agreements with certain central and eastern European countries, and invited the Committee of Permanent Representatives to prepare detailed texts with a view to agreement at the December Transport Council.

The Council met Transport Ministers from the nine central and eastern European countries which have association agreements with the European Community. Discussion concentrated on the approximation of legislation and development of infrastructure.

The Council reached a common position on a consolidating and amending directive on the weights and dimensions of goods vehicles, which extends to national traffic the limits on dimensions—but not weights—applying to international traffic. On the initiative of the UK and the Netherlands, existing goods vehicles which cannot comply with the new provisions may continue in use in national transport until the end of 2006.

The Council also reached a common position on a directive transposing into Community law and applying to national transport the existing regulations on the international carriage of dangerous goods by rail. Special, more stringent rules will continue to apply to the channel tunnel.

The Council reached political agreement on a scrapping scheme to reduce capacity in the inland waterways industry. Together with Germany, the UK opposed the use of Community funds for this purpose. The Council also reached political agreement on a regulation giving inland waterways operators the freedom to provide services in any member state.

The Council continued to discuss the Commission's proposals for liberalisation of ground handling services at Community airports. These will now be considered further by the Committee of Permanent Representatives. The Council agreed a resolution on air traffic management in situations of crisis and congestion.

Other items raised at the Council included proposals for a plastic card driving licence, which were welcomed by the UK and other member states, and taxation of aviation fuel.

Trans-European Transport Networks

Mr. Tracey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what will be the United Kingdom's share of the funds available in 1995 for priority projects under the European Community's financing programme for trans-European transport networks. [40233]

Sir George Young: Priority projects in the United Kingdom will receive some £22 million, which is just over 15 per cent. of the total funds available for priority projects in 1995 and more than any other member state will receive from the EC fund. In addition to the £7 million for the west coast main line, which I announced in the House on 18 October, Official Report, column 370, the channel tunnel rail link will receive £13.6 million and schemes along the Ireland-UK-Benelux road link will benefit from £1.6 million. The UK will also receive £36,000 million for road traffic management research and has an interest in a number of other traffic management schemes, including a global navigation satellite system, which will together receive some £16 million of TENs funding in 1995.

Airports

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the maximum current capacity of each terminal of (a) Heathrow, (b) Gatwick and (c) Stansted for (i) passengers and (ii) flights. [39367]

Mr. Norris: These are matters for BAA plc.

The number of passenger air transport movements at Stansted is limited to 78,000 per annum under the Stansted Airport Aircraft Movement Limit Order 1987.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many passengers used Stansted airport in (a) the year of its opening and (b) 1994. [39371]

Mr. Norris: Stansted airport opened for commercial use in 1946, but the first regular services did not operate until the following year. The new terminal opened in March 1991, and in that year 1.9 million passengers used the airport. The comparable figure for 1994 was 3.3 million passengers.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will undertake the environmental impact assessment in respect of a new terminal 5 at Heathrow. [39774]

Mr. Norris: No. An environmental impact assessment was prepared by BAA plc prior to its application for planning permission for a fifth terminal.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many passengers used each of the terminals at (a) Heathrow and (b) Gatwick in (i) 1984 and (ii) 1994. [39379]

Mr. Norris: I understand from BAA plc that the information requested is as follows:

	1984	1994
	Million passengers

[1] Opened April 1986.
[2] Opened March 1988.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of existing (a) passenger and (b) freight capacity is being used currently at (i) Heathrow, and (ii) Gatwick and (iii) Stansted. [39373]

Mr. Norris: This is a matter for BAA plc.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates he has for passenger use of (a) existing Heathrow terminals, (b) Gatwick terminals, (c) Stansted and (d) terminal 5 at Heathrow in (i) 2000 and (ii) 2005. [39372]

Mr. Norris: I understand that BAA plc has presented the following projections to the Heathrow terminal 5 public inquiry:

	2000	2005
	(million passengers per year)
Existing Heathrow Terminals	60.0	52.6
Gatwick Terminals	22.1	27.3
Stansted	7.1	12.5
Heathrow Terminal 5[1]	—	14.4

[1] Application to build terminal 5 is currently the subject of a public inquiry. If planning permission is granted, BAA plc aims to have the first phase open by 2003.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessments he had made of the environmental impact of the airports on (a) Heathrow, (b) Gatwick and (c) Stansted. [39366]

Mr. Norris: For Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted, the Department publishes an aircraft noise exposure index in the form of annual aircraft noise contours using Leq—equivalent continuous sound level, 16 hour dBA. It is the responsibility of airport operators or developers to undertake appropriate environmental impact assessments of any major new developments proposed at airports.

ENVIRONMENT

Green Belt Land

Sir Michael Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions in the past five years he has granted planning permission for the development on land in the metropolitan green belt for (a) motorways and (b) motorway service areas; and if he will make a statement. [38353]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: We are not aware of any such cases in metropolitan green belt land around London. Approval should not be given for inappropriate development in a green belt except in very special circumstances. Further advice on control over development in green belts is given in section 3 of planning policy guidance note 2—revised—January 1995.

My right hon. Friend has called in four planning applications for motorway service areas on different sites in the green belt, along the M25 in Epping Forest district, Essex. They were considered at a joint inquiry which ended in the summer. The Government Office is awaiting the inspector's report.

The Secretary of State is minded to grant permission for a motorway service area in the green belt, on the M25 at Iver, Buckinghamshire, but is considering further representations on new evidence that has arisen.

Motorway Service Areas

Sir Michael Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the locations for possible motorway service areas adjacent to the M25 which were rejected by his inspector as being unsuitable on the ground that they are off-line. [38355]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: We are not aware of any such cases.

Noise Legislation

Mr. Atkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce his proposals to improve the current noise legislation. [38039]

Mr. Gummer: I am aware of my right hon. Friend's continuing interest in this important subject. We are currently considering both the written responses to the recommendations in the consultation paper on neighbour noise controls and the results of recent trials of the proposed new night noise offence. We hope to announce shortly how we propose to take forward the recommendations.

Queen Elizabeth Hospital

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate (a) the costs and (b) the costs of delay relating to the planning inquiry into the developing at the Queen Elizabeth hospital in the borough of Greenwich. [38736]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: No. Such estimates are unnecessary as they are not material to the Secretary of State's decision on whether a planning application should be called in.

Public Inquiries

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the shortest, the average and the longest period of delay in setting up a local public inquiry. [38735]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The provision of information on public local inquiries is the responsibility of the planning inspectorate. I have asked the inspectorate's chief executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from James Greenfield to Mr. Peter Bottomley, dated 23 October 1995:

The Secretary of State asked the Chief Planning Inspector to reply to your question about the shortest, the average and the longest period of delay in setting up a local public inquiry. Mr. Shepley is away from the office this week, and I am writing on his behalf.

In the case of planning appeals and planning applications called-in for the Secretary of State's decision, the Inquiries Procedure Rules state that the inquiry shall be not later than 20 weeks or 22 weeks respectively after the relevant start date for the case, unless such a date is impracticable. Generally, the earliest possible date for an inquiry to be arranged is about 14 weeks after the relevant date (16 weeks or more for called-in applications), allowing the parties adequate time to submit and exchange statements and prepare proofs of evidence within the recommended timescales.

There is general delay in arranging dates for these inquiries caused by the need to provide Inspectors for development plan inquiries. The Planning and Compensation Act 1991 required mandatory district wide plans to be published by local authorities, so that future development control decisions were made in accordance with the plans, unless material considerations indicated otherwise. Ministers expectations were that all plans would be in place by the end of 1996. Extra Inspectors have been recruited, but need to undergo an extensive training programme before they become fully effective.

Within the Inspector's published Business Plan there are a number of performance targets, many of which are measured against the time taken to complete 80% of our caseloads. The latest statistics show that during September, 80% of the dates for inquiries proposed by the Inspectorate to the parties were made within 40 weeks of the relevant dates. The earliest date proposed was made in week 18, and the latest date in week 51. The average waiting time for an inquiry date was 35 weeks.

Special Areas of Conservation

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list proposed special areas of conservation in the United Kingdom that contain specimens of shore dock. [39244]

Mr. Clappison: The sites proposed to Government by the statutory nature conservation agencies, working through the Joint Nature Conservation committee, as possible special areas of conservation representing an appropriate UK contribution for the shore dock—Rumex rupestris—to the European Union wide Natura 2000 network were:

Angelsey Coast Dunes (Glannau Mons)

Fal and Helford

Isles of Scilly Complex

Penhale Dunes

Plymouth Sound and Estuaries

The Lizard

Following a public consultation on those proposals in the spring, the Anglesey coast dunes site was submitted to the European Commission as a candidate special area of conservation in June. I anticipate that other sites for this species will go forward as candidate special areas of conservation later this year.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by county, those designated areas that have been damaged in each of the last four years, with the cause of damage in each case. [39064]

Mr. Clappison: The information is not available in the form requested. Information on damage to SSSIs is contained in the annual reports of English Nature, copies of which are in the Library.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what assessment he has made of the effect of people receiving benefit, where the level of housing benefit has been capped in line with the local reference rate, on the overall availability of private rented accommodation; [38895]

(2) what assessment he has made of the extent to which the private rented sector will be used only by people with a guaranteed income capable of paying the levels of rent demanded following the capping of housing benefit levels. [38871]

Mr. Clappison: Under the changes to the housing benefit system, housing benefit will continue to meet in full rents at or below the general level of rent for similar accommodation in the same locality. Even where the market rent is above the general level, housing benefit will meet half the excess. The effect of the new system will depend on the decisions landlords and tenants reach on rents locally and we will be monitoring this closely.

The Housing White Paper made it clear that we see the private rented sector as an important complement to social housing for people on low incomes. We are committed to providing an effective housing benefit system that enables low income households to rent in the private sector.

Wetland Sites

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to invite the application of the Montreux procedure, in accordance with resolution C.5.4 of the Ramsar convention, for those United Kingdom wetland sites where the Joint Nature Conservation Committee has recently predicted or recorded negative changes in ecological character. [39238]

Mr. Clappison: None. The United Kingdom is a strong supporter of the Ramsar convention, which does much valuable work in fostering the conservation and wise use of wetlands. The United Kingdom national report to the sixth meeting of Ramsar contracting parties in 1996 states that the ecological character of 12 of the 95 United Kingdom Ramsar sites has changed, is changing or is likely to change. No additional UK sites are appropriate for inclusion on the Montreux record. In responding the UK national report, the Ramsar secretariat stated that the UK report is one of the most comprehensive, detailed and open of the reports they receive. A copy of the UK national Ramsar report is in the House Library.

One UK Ramsar site, the Dee estuary, is currently on the Montreux record, and was the subject of a monitoring visit last autumn by the Ramsar bureau and other international wetland experts who reported to my right hon. Friend this summer. A response to this report is currently in preparation.

Water Extraction Licences

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if water extracted from boreholes or aquifers requires a water extraction licence: and if he will make a statement. [38994]

Mr. Clappison: The National Rivers Authority has a duty to manage water resources, including groundwater, under part II of the Water Resources Act 1991. Most abstractions from groundwater require a licence from the authority. The major exemptions are for agriculture or domestic use below 20cm per day.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by (a) region or county and (b) location the number of new water extraction licences that have been approved since 1 July; and if he will indicate the amount of water granted to be extracted. [38993]

Mr. Clappison: The number of new abstraction licences issued by the National Rivers Authority between 1 July and 15 October, with their associated quantities, are as follows:

Region	Number of new licences	Quantity (Megalitres per annum)
Anglian	26	462
North West	21	200
Northumbria and Yorkshire	38	2,751
Severn Trent	53	6,811
Southern	5	14,708
South Western	34	13,040
Thames	4	2,801
Welsh	22	35,920
Total	203	76,693

These figures do not include variations, successions, drought orders or re-issued time limited licences. The quantities for Welsh, South Western and Southern regions have been distorted by the issue of several very large, low loss licences—fish farms, Hydropower and cooling.

Rural Housing

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to exempt small rural villages from his Department's new right-to-buy arrangements for (a) local authorities and (b) housing associations' tenants to ensure their homes are not turned into holiday cottages or sold to outsiders; and if he will make a statement. [39057]

Mr. Clappison: Following the publication of the Housing White Paper, we consulted widely on the proposal for a purchase grant scheme for tenants of housing associations. In the light of concerns expressed about the impact of the proposals on the availability of social housing in rural areas, we have concluded that existing and future housing association properties situated in rural communities of less than 3,000 people will not be included in the purchase grant scheme. This will be provided for in legislation.

The purchase grant proposals relate only to tenants of housing associations, and not those of local authorities.

Homelessness

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the effect of the abolition of discretionary subsidies on homelessness among the most vulnerable groups in society. [38897]

Mr. Clappison: The changes to the housing benefit rules that will be introduced in January 1996 are intended to bear down on high rents in the private rented sector. There is no reason to assume that the changes will affect the level of homelessness.

Water, Doncaster

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will investigate the extent to which water in the aquifers of the Doncaster area geological syncline could be used in greater volumes, either in the public water supply or other purposes; what is the current cost of obtaining potable water from this source; what capital and revenue cost would be incurred in using sufficient water for these uses so as to stabilise the height of the local water table; and if he will make a statement. [39035]

Mr. Clappison: The National Rivers Authority has a duty to conserve and secure the proper use of water resources in England and Wales. I understand that the Sherwood sandstone aquifer in the Doncaster area is already fully utilised for public water supply. It is possible that some groundwater could be made available from the carboniferous stratum, but the quantities are expected to be small and the water quality poor. The cost of obtaining a potable water supply or stabilising the local water table have not been investigated.

Latham Report

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about progress on implementing the Latham report. [38868]

Mr. Clappison: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave to the hon. Member for Strathkelvin and Bearsden on 18 July 1995, Official Report, column 1065. We have now published the results of the two consultation exercises and continue to consider legislative proposals in the light of these, and subsequent discussions with the construction industry.

Drinking Water

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest information he has for each of the water companies of the level of dissolved lead in water pipes; and if he will make a statement. [38995]

Mr. Clappison: The standard for lead in drinking water in England and Wales is a maximum allowable concentration of 50 microgrammes per litre—ug/litre. This standard relates to unflushed samples at consumers's taps and is equivalent to an average concentration of about 20ug/litre. This is more stringent than the 50ug/litre standard in the European Community directive on water intended for human consumption which relates to flushed samples.

There is no lead in the water that leaves treatment works. Most of the lead is picked up from the consumers own pipework. The drinking water inspectorate has issued a leaflet to advise consumers on simple steps they can take to minimise the levels of lead in their drinking water.

The table sets out the number of samples containing lead in various concentrations by water company for 1994, the latest year for which information is available. No distinction is made between dissolved lead and particulate lead.

Birmingham Airport

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to call in the planning application for expansion of Birmingham international airport. [39621]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The application is still being considered by the local planning authority, Solihull metropolitan borough council. Should they be minded to approve it the application will be notified to the Secretary of State in due course and he will then decide whether to call it in for his own decision.

Tenants

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he will take to enable tenants in rent arrears to transfer to cheaper accommodation where this is at the tenant's request. [38538]

Mr. Clappison: None. Transfers of local authority tenants and rent arrears are matters for local authorities.

Incinerators

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment pursuant to his answer of 21 February, when he now expects to publish Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution's report on polychlorinated biphenyls, polychlorinated dibenzo-para-dioxins and polychlorinated d:benzofurans in the vicinity of incinerators. [38904]

Mr. Clappison: It should be available before Christmas.

Area Cost Adjustments

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research he has commissioned on the use of travel-to-work areas to calculate area cost adjustment; what further studies have been commissioned into area cost adjustments, and if he will make a statement. [38918]

Sir Paul Beresford: We commissioned research into the possible use of travel-to-work areas from the Centre for Urban and Regional Development Studies at Newcastle university. The report of this work has subsequently been discussed with the local authority associations in the standard spending assessment sub-group.

This sub-group has received a number of other papers on area cost adjustment which include or comment on other research work. These are a report from a technical sub-group which sought to investigate alternatives to the current methodology, a commentary by the south east counties on the alternatives, and a paper by the metropolitan districts which covered a report by Ernst and Young on the current methodology.

The Minister for Local Government, Housing and Urban Regeneration has announced his proposals for an independent review of the adjustment. I refer the hon. Member to the answer which my hon. Friend gave on 17 October 1995, Official Report, column 185—86.

Homelessness, London

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people are currently homeless in London. [39645]

Mr. Clappison: Local authorities in England report on their quarterly PIE return to my Department the number of households for whom they accept responsibility to secure accommodation under the homelessness provisions of the Housing Act 1985.

The latest estimate for London appears in table 1 of "Households found accommodation under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act 1985: England. Statistics for the second quarter of 1995", a copy of which is in the Library.

Housing, London

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many London homes (a) public and (b) private sectors are unmodernised. [39369]

Mr. Clappison: The 1991 "English House Condition Survey" recorded modernisation only in relation to kitchens and bathrooms. The following were found in London.

	Public sector		Private sector
	Percentage of sector	Number	Percentage of sector	Number
Unmodernised kitchen	142,000	20.6	325,000	14.1
Unmodernised bathroom	216,000	31.4	486,000	21.1

The 1991 EHCS defines an unmodernised kitchen or bathroom as one with amenities more than 25 years old.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many homes in London are unfit for habitation. [39368]

Mr. Clappison: The 1991 "English House Condition Survey" found 301,000 London dwellings to be unfit under section 604 of the Housing Act 1985, as amended by schedule 9 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989.

Development Land

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimates he has for the amount of (a) land and (b) buildings in London which are available for development. [39370]

Mr. Clappison: The Department of the Environment does not hold detailed information on buildings in London available for development. A central register of unused and underused public land was maintained in the Department from 1981 onwards in accordance with part X of the Local Government Planning and Land Act 1980. In 1989 this responsibility was transferred to local authorities.

Berkshire County Council

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment if he intends to appeal against the ruling of the High Court on 6 October 1995 that his decision to abolish Berkshire county council and transfer its functions to the six existing district councils was invalid in so far as it concerns the transfer of functions to the borough of Bracknell Forest and the royal borough of Windsor and Maidenhead. [40487]

Mr. Gummer: The court ruling was not a judgment on the merits of my decision on the structure of local government in Berkshire, but turned on a point of interpretation of the Local Government Act 1992 which I feel needs to be tested further. Leave to appeal was granted by the High Court, and I shall be serving notice of appeal to enable the matter to be argued further in the Court of Appeal. I shall not lay the Berkshire (Structural Change) Order before Parliament while the appeal is proceeding.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Departmental Responsibilities

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list his Department's responsibilities. [38450]

Mr. Lang: My Department's responsibilities are indicated in the list of ministerial responsibilities which is published regularly by the Cabinet Office and is available through the Vote Office. The Department's objective is to help UK business compete successfully at home and abroad. It also aims, through the Office of Science and Technology, to strengthen the UK's science engineering and technology capability and to maximise its contribution to national economic performance and quality of life.

Fireworks

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received following the revocation of the Fireworks (Safety) Regulations 1986. [39348]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: My Department has received a number of inquiries about the implications of the revocation of the 1986 regulations. My officials have held discussions with representatives of the trading standards service and explained that the supply of fireworks to children under 16 remains an offence both under section 31 of the Explosives Act 1875 (as amended) and under the General Product Safety Regulations 1994.

Mr. Davies: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will reintroduce the Fireworks (Safety) Regulations 1986. [39347]

Mr. Evans: I am satisfied that the requirements currently in place are adequate to prevent the sale of fireworks to children under 16 years of age. I do not believe there is any need for changes in the legislation.

Newsagents

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he last met the chief executive of the National Federation of Retail Newsagents; and what was discussed. [39088]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: I met Mr. Bob Frost, chief executive of the National Federation of Retail Newsagents, on 13 July 1995.

Mr. Frost expressed the NFRN's concerns about recent developments, in particular: the recent increases in wholesaler's carriage charges; the changes being made in wholesale distribution areas; the decision by several publishers to reduce the newsagent's margin on retail sales; and the effect on newsagents of orders made against the NFRN under the Restrictive Trade Practices Act 1976.

Mr. Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the Office of Fair Trading's proposals which require that all retail newsagents supplied from the same distribution point must by October 1996 be charged the same rate for delivery. [39087]

Mr. Evans: The OFT has no such proposal. However, I agree with the OFT that high carriage charges should not be used as a means of deterring new entrants.

Mr. Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the recent increases in carriage charges on newspaper outlets. [39086]

Mr. Page: It appears that wholesalers have increased their charges to recover an increased element of the expenses associated with distribution and delivery. That is a matter for their commercial judgment.

Company Takeovers

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what reviews of the law and regulations regarding company takeovers have been carried out since 1985; and what were their main conclusions. [39262]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: In 1988, the Government published the results of a review of mergers policy and the merger control procedures of the Fair Trading Act 1973—"Mergers Policy—a DTI paper on the policy and procedures of merger control". The main conclusion was that the policy towards mergers should remain unchanged but that a number of changes would be made to merger control procedures to help speed up decision. The changes introduced include a non-mandatory prenotification system and the power to accept divestment undertakings in lieu of reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. More recently, following a review of merger control procedures as part of the Government's deregulation initiative, a number of changes have been made or are to be made, including the power to accept behavioural undertakings in lieu of reference to the MMC and a reduction in the period during which a merger may be referred to the MMC from six to four months.

Mr. Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, if he will make a statement on the objectives of the current law regarding company takeovers. [39264]

Mr. Evans: The Fair Trading Act 1973 gives my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade discretion to refer qualifying mergers to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission where he believes they may operate against the public interest. Since 1984, the Government's policy has been that, in determining whether mergers should be referred, the primary consideration is the effect on competition. Certain mergers are also subject to the City code on takeovers and mergers which is a non-statutory code administered by the panel on takeovers and mergers. The code and the panel operate principally to ensure fair and equal treatment of all shareholders in relation to takeovers. The code also provides an orderly framework within which takeovers are conducted.

In 1987, a review of the operations of the takeover panel identified a number of measures to strengthen the panel's regulation of takeovers while maintaining its existing non-statutory status. The measures were designed to improve the monitoring and investigative capabilities of the panel and to bring the panel into a closer relationship with the regulatory arrangements established by the Financial Services Act 1986.

The Trade and Industry Committee of the House also undertook a review of takeovers and mergers policy and made a number of recommendations, which were published on 27 November 1991, HC 90. The Government's response to that report was published on 26 February 1992, HC 300.

Newspaper Industry

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on his proposals for deregulatory changes within the newspaper industry. [39085]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The changes introduced in October 1994 have had a significant effect in opening the retail market. I have no further proposals in this area.

Cable Companies

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many complaints he has received in the last 12 months from (i) members of the public, (ii) local authorities and (iii) hon. Members about cable companies failing to reinstate properly the pavement or highway after cabling work is completed. [38850]

Mr. Ian Taylor: One complaint was received between 21 October 1994 and 20 October 1995 stating that a cable company had not met its statutory requirements with regards to reinstatement. However, the number of complaints received during this period expressing displeasure over reinstatements by cable operators are as follows:

Members of the public: 41

Local authorities: 2

Hon. Members: 21

The New Roads and Street Works Act 1991 sets the standard of works for cable operators and the utilities, and provides that both interim and permanent reinstatements must conform with the statutory national specification. All cases of defective reinstatement which are identified by the local highway authority must be rectified at the undertaker's expenses; additionally, the undertaker must for each proved defect bear the cost of the initial investigation and three further follow-up inspections.

The number of complaints per kilometre trenched has fallen.

Mountain Bikes

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action his Department is taking in respect of those manufacturers who sell mountain bikes that are unsafe for use other than on a tarmac road as notified to him by Nottingham university in the research it has carried out for his Department; and if he will make a statement. [39017]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The report commissioned by my Department into the safety of mountain bikes made a number of recommendations aimed at better matching the performance of mountain bikes with user's expectations and intended use. My officials will shortly be discussing the detailed findings of the completed research with the bicycle industry.

Barnsley and Doncaster Training and Enterprise Company

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much funding has been provided to Barnsley and Doncaster TEC for small and medium-sized businesses in each year since its inception, including the current financial year; what is his forecast for the coming financial year; and if he will make a statement. [39556]

Mr. Page: Barnsley and Doncaster TEC has received funding for the support of small and medium-sized businesses from numerous Government and European sources. The main DTI support is the enterprise budget which was £328,000 in 1993–94, £362,500 in 1994–95 and is forecast to be £294,000 in 1995–96.

Mr. Nelson: I replied to the hon. Gentleman's letter on 23 October.

PRIME MINISTER

British Workers (Japan)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to discuss with the Japanese Government the position of those British workers in Japan who, after paying into the Japanese state retirement pension scheme, are eligible neither for a pension nor for a lump sum payment [39393]

The Prime Minister: Officials in the Department of Social Security have held informal, exploratory discussions with Japanese officials about a social security agreement between the two countries concentrating on matters of national insurance contribution liability. We have had no formal request from the Japanese Government for such an agreement, but any such approach would be carefully considered.

The Prime Minister: I have no record of an invitation to open such a contest on 11 September. I did receive an invitation, in February, to attend the meeting on 12 or 13 September, but I declined the invitation since I had no plans to be in Newcastle on that date; nor was I.

(2) if he will list all the non-departmental public bodies to which his Office makes appointments in the county of South Yorkshire, with the total annual budget for each body and the number of appointments made or renewed for each body in each of the last four years. [39463]

The Prime Minister: For these purposes, my Office is part of the Cabinet Office—Office of Public Service. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given today by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

[38002]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 25 October 1995]: Papers removed from Schloss Friedricshof by Sir Owen Morshead, the King's Librarian, and Anthony Blunt in 1945 were returned to Schloss Friedricshof in 1951.

Papers relating to the Duke of Windsor's passage through Spain and Portugal in 1940 were published in 1957 in volume X of "Documents on German Foreign Policy".

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what engagements he had to mark United Nations Day. [36752]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 24 October 1995]: I attended the United Nations 50th anniversary commemorative summit meeting in New York between 22 and 24 October.

[39123]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 24 October 1995]: None.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Information Technology

Mr. Butler: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he is taking to ensure that Government Departments are making best use of the skills and expertise of the private sector in their expenditure on information technology. [40457]

Mr. Freeman: The private finance initiative has the aim of delivering high quality and more cost-effective public services by bringing the private sector more directly into the provision of those services. Expenditure on information technology on which government spends over £2 billion per year is a key area where the private finance initiative has demonstrated a vital role.

Many Government Departments have already established dedicated private finance units. But, given the unique nature of information systems and information technology projects, I am establishing a new team to work specifically on IS/IT projects. This will be in the Office of Public Service, and draw on resources from the private finance panel executive and CCTA, the Government centre for information systems.

The new unit will ensure that the principles of the private finance initiative are applied to IT expenditure across the whole of Government, with strong backing from the centre of Whitehall.

Public Appointments, South Yorkshire

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will list all the non-departmental public bodies to which his Office makes appointments in the county of South Yorkshire, with the total annual budget for each body and the number of appointments made or renewed for each body in each of the last four years; [39467]

(2) if he will list the public appointments for which his Department is responsible in the county of South Yorkshire, indicating in each case the duration of the appointment, the date when a new appointment is due, and the salary. [39430]

Mr. Freeman: There are no Cabinet Office, Central Office of Information or HMSO public appointments in South Yorkshire.

Agencies

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 17 October to the hon. Member for Chipping Barnet (Mr. Chapman), Official Report, column 183, if the three appointments of consultants in connection with the future of his agencies were made after considering alternative sources for such appointments tested by competition; and if those appointments are subjected to (a) maximum total cost ceilings (b) maximum cost per day ceilings or (c) a time limit for their appointment. [39334]

Mr. Freeman: The three appointments of consultants in connection with the future of my agencies were made through a competitive process following an advertisement in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

The appointment to advise urgently on ways of increasing private sector involvement in the Occupational Health and Safety Agency, Recruitment and Assessment Services, the Central Office of Information and the Civil Service College is subject to a maximum total cost ceiling and a time limit.

The total fees for the appointments in relation to HMSO and Chessington Computer Centre are fixed in so far as the projects conform to the terms of reference in the invitation to tender and the assumptions set out in the bids from the financial advisers. Elements outside the control of the financial advisers may lead to an application for additional fees which would then need to be carefully considered. Expenditure will be closely monitored.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Salmon Advisory Committee

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has reached a decision on the future of the Salmon Advisory Committee. [40202]

Mr. Baldry: The Salmon Advisory Committee has now largely completed the various tasks that Fisheries Ministers have asked it to undertake. Six of its reports have been published and a further five reports are nearing completion. When its current work is completed, the committee's report will provide a set of studies comprehensively examining all the factors that affect salmon during the various stages of their life cycle as well as on a range of other important topics. The committee's published reports have all been well received.

The terms of appointment of a great majority of the committee's members will shortly come to an end, and with my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales I have been considering whether the life of the committee should be extended for a further period. We have concluded that, once the committee has completed its current programme of work, there are no further tasks for it to undertake of sufficient importance to justify its retention. The committee will, therefore, be wound up at the end of the current financial year.

A particularly valuable feature of the Salmon Advisory Committee is that it represents views from all part of Great Britain. My right hon. Friends and I do not wish to lose the opportunity to seek advice on salmon issues on a Great Britain basis and we are, accordingly planning to hold regular meetings with representatives of the various organisations interested in salmon fisheries; these will take place at least once a year and will provide a forum for the discussion of matters relating to salmon and salmon fisheries.

My right hon. Friend and I wish to thank all members and former members of the Salmon Advisory Committee for their hard work and dedication; they have made a major contribution to improving our understanding of salmon. Particular credit is due to the committee's chairman, Professor George Dunnet, CBE who, sadly, died last month. We have asked Mr. Robert Clerk OBE, an existing member of the committee, to take over the duties of chairman for the remaining life of the committee.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of BSE there have been in animals born in each year since the ruminant feed ban was introduced. [40301]

Mrs. Browning: Up to 24 October 1995, BSE has been confirmed in the following numbers of animals born after the ruminant fed ban was introduced on 18 July 1988:

1988[1]: 10,689
1989: 9,364
1990: 2,425
1991: 461
1992: 6
1993: 1

[1]19 July–31 December:

Countryside Schemes

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the cost in 1994, in Humberside and the three counties of Yorkshire, of payments made under (a) the countryside stewardship scheme, (b) the hedgerow incentive scheme, (c) the countryside premium scheme and (d) the wildlife enhancement scheme; and what is his estimate of the cost in 1995. [38989]

Mr. Clappison: I have been asked to reply.

Payments in the counties in question in the financial year 1994–95 under the countryside stewardship scheme totalled £1.279 million and under the Wildlife Enhancement scheme £464,000. Payments for the two schemes in 1995–96 are estimated to be £1.534 million and £330,000 respectively. The hedgerow incentive scheme was combined with countryside stewardship in October 1994 and separate costs are not available. Countryside premium is not available in the counties in question.

Animal Transits (Deaths)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate for the number of sheep and lambs who die in transit each year. [31128]

Mrs. Browning: It is not possible to produce such an estimate from the information available.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what proportion of calves that are exported from the United Kingdom are checked by MAFF at the time that an export certificate is signed to see if they are from herds with histories of either bovine spongiform encephalopathy or enzootic bovine leukosis; [38707]

(2) how many calves from herds known to have had BSE have been exported in each of the last five years; and to which countries they have been sent; [38709]

(3) how many calves from herds known to have had EBL have been exported in each of the last five years; and if he will indicate to which countries they have been sent. [38708]

Mrs. Browning: I refer the hon. Member to the answers that I gave to the hon. Member for Newham, North–West (Mr. Banks) on 16 October 1995, Official Report, column 125–26.

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many imperfect animal health certificates, including their schedules, were recorded by his staff monitoring livestock exports at Brightlingsea during September; [38695]

(2) what action was taken in respect of imperfect animal health certificates recorded by his staff at Brightlingsea during September. [38697]

Mrs. Browning: No consignments of live animals exported out of Brightlingsea during September were accompanied by imperfect animal health certification.

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many imperfect animal health certificates, including their schedules, were recorded by his staff monitoring livestock exports at Dover during September; [38696]

(2) what action was taken in respect of imperfect animal health certificates recorded by his staff at Dover during September. [38698]

Mrs. Browning: In September, the documentation accompanying two consignments of live animals which underwent official checks before their export from Dover was found to be incorrect. In the first instance, the export health certificate indicated that there were 260 animals in the consignment although there were in fact only 160. The certifying veterinary inspector confirmed that the certificate should have referred to 160 animals and amended the certificate appropriately, in accordance with official procedures for making such amendments. In the second instance, the export health certificate number was misread by the certifying veterinary inspector and misquoted on the accompanying schedule listing the animals in the consignment. As soon as the certifying inspector confirmed the error, the schedule was amended by MAFF personnel and the export allowed to proceed.

Spring Traps

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what policy consideration led to the decision to add four spring traps to the previous list of 11 traps already approved for use under the Spring Traps Approval Order 1995. [38699]

Mrs. Browning: Under the Pests Act 1954, the Ministry has to consider proposals for the use of spring traps for animals. The four new traps met the necessary conditions for approval.

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what criteria were used by him for approval of the four new traps he has added to the list of 11 traps already approved for use under the Spring Traps Approval Order. [38701]

Mrs. Browning: The four traps were assessed for their safety, efficacy and humaneness. The impact and clamping forces delivered by the BMI Magnum 55, 110 and 116 traps were all at least equal to, or greater than, those for traps previously approved for the same species under the 1954 Act. The Aldrich spring activated animal snare is a spring-operated, live-capture, padded foot snare; it was tested first on a human volunteer and then results were collected in the field.

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why he added four spring traps to the previous 11 traps already approved for use under the Spring Traps Approval Order before the outcome of the current consideration being given to the humane trapping standards by his Department and the British Standards Institute. [38700]

Mrs. Browning: The work of the International Standards Organisation's Technical Committee 191 is not yet complete and discussions are still taking place. Under the Pests Act 1954, the Ministry has to consider proposals for the use of spring traps for animals and cannot unreasonably delay consideration of such proposals.

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if animals were used to test any of the four new traps he has added to the list of 11 traps already approved for use under the Spring Traps Approval Order; and if the Animal Procedures Committee of the Home Office was consulted. [38702]

Mrs. Browning: No animals were used in the laboratory assessment of the three new BMI traps. For the Aldrich spring activated snare, field results were collected.

As required under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986, the relevant Home Office inspector was consulted.

Sheep Dips

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of organophosphate compounds in licensed sheep dips sold in the British Isles have passed the neurotoxicity screen tests required by EC regulations, and if he will make a statement. [38691]

Mrs. Browning: There are two organophosphate compounds used in products authorised in the United Kingdom as sheep dips. Reviews of the products are being undertaken by the Veterinary Products Committee in accordance with directive 81/852/EEC, as amended, and guidelines published by the European Commission. These include a requirement for data to assess any risk which might result from exposure to the products.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to ban the use of organophosphate-based sheep dips pending the completion of the epidermiological studies of organophosphate-related illness being pursued by a consortium of Government Departments; and if he will make a statement. [38618]

Mrs. Browning: The safety of organophosphorus sheep dips is kept under constant review by the Veterinary Products Committee, the independent body of scientists which advises the Government on veterinary medicines matters. Its most recent advice, following assessment of a report from the Institute of Occupational Health on research into the long-term health effects of exposure to organophosphorus sheep dips, is that, on the basis of current scientific evidence, the marketing of OP dips should continue. However, it is essential that the guidance in the leaflet "Sheep dipping" and label instructions on the product are carefully followed in full.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his Department will suspend the sale of all organophosphate-based dips which (a) have not passed the neurotoxicity screening tests or (b) have not yet been tested; and if he will make a statement. [38693]

Mrs. Browning: Following a review of organophosphorus sheep dips by the Veterinary Products Committee in 1993, the committee concluded there was no scientific evidence for a ban. This advice by the VPC was re-affirmed earlier this year, following its assessment of Institute of Occupational Health report about research into the possible long-term health effects of exposure to organophosphorus dips. Ministers' decisions following VPC advice on such reviews are made public.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minster of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the available research material his Department has (a) evaluated and (b) commissioned on the toxicity and neurotoxicity of organophosphate compounds; and if he will make a statement. [38617]

Mrs. Browning: As part of its comprehensive review of the issues surrounding OP dips in 1993, the Veterinary Products Committee considered a considerable number of scientific papers, some published and others containing confidential information. A full list of all the papers involved was included as an annex to MAFF news release 424/93 issued on 1 December 1993 announcing the outcome of the review. A copy of this news release is available in the Library of the House.

MAFF has not commissioned any research on the toxicity or neurotoxicity of organophosphate compounds. However, MAFF is jointly commissioning with the Department of Health and the Health and Safety Executive an epidemiological study. The results of this study will be published.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to extend the use of BHC (Gammexane)-based sheep dips; and if he will make a statement. [38615]

Mrs. Browning: No BHC (Gammexane)-based products are currently authorised for use as sheep dips. The last product licence for such products was withdrawn by the company in 1991, and there are no plans to re-introduce these products.

Sheep Scab

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will extend the provision of research into new methods of sheep scab control to include the commission of a full economic audit of the options currently available for controlling this disease; and if he will make a statement. [38614]

Mrs. Browning: On 10 July 1995, when I gave the results of the 1995 spring surveillance exercise carried out by the State Veterinary Service into the incidence of sheep scab, I announced that I had also requested a review of the alternative options that may be available to deal with this disease.

A consultation paper will be issued shortly.

WALES

Rechem International, Pontypool

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to hold a public inquiry into Rechem International, Pontypool. [39594]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None. I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Vale of Glamorgan (Mr. Sweeney) on 18 July, Official Report, columns 1203–04.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to make his announcement on the level of revenue support grant for the new local authorities in Wales. [39577]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In accordance with the normal timetable, provisional standard spending assessments for local authorities, including provisional levels of revenue support grant and non-domestic rate income, will be announced in mid-December. The final 1996–97 local government revenue settlement will be announced in late January.

Cardiff Bay Opera House

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 18 October, Official Report, column 285, and his answer of 18 July, Official Report, columns 1200–01, concerning the Cardiff Bay

Opera House Trust, if he will specify the nature of the potential conflict of interests problem resolved in September 1993. [39816]

Mr. Hague: The attention of Welsh Office officials was drawn to the fact that Grosvenor Waterside, a subsidiary of Associated British Ports, might become a member of the trust. It was agreed that the company should not be represented on the trust until such time as the terms of purchase of the land had been formally agreed.

Housing Association Ombudsman

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to introduce legislation establishing an ombudsman in Wales to deal with complaints against housing associations which are registered with Tai Cymru, in line with the arrangements for England and Scotland. [39874]

Mr. Hague: I am considering the question of such complaints procedures in the light of my consultation paper "More Choice in the Rented Sector".

Land Authority for Wales

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 19 October, Official Report, column 341, if the use of the Land Authority for Wales compulsory purchase powers to acquire land on the Caldicot Levels will require his approval. [39876]

Mr. Hague: Yes.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what grounds summonses have not been issued against those involved with the Dutch transport firm Nicolay following allegations of offences under the Welfare of Animals during Transport Order. [35601]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 19 July 1995]: I have been asked to reply.

The summonses issued by Dover magistrates court on 8 December 1994 for service in the Netherlands on W. Nicolay bv and named employees of the company were received by the UK central authority in the Home Office on 3 February 1995 and were forwarded for service to the Ministry of Justice in The Hague on 26 February. The summonses were not served by the authorities in the Netherlands, but the company submitted voluntarily to the jurisdiction of the magistrates court. The charges against the employees were withdrawn. The case was heard on 23 October 1995.

Prison Population

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what assessment he has made of the effect of the daily prison population of a minimum jail sentence for (a) drug traffickers and (b) burglars with three previous convictions; [39598]

(2) what assessment he has made of the effect on the jail population of abolishing remission for prisoners serving less than one year; [39600]

(3) what assessment he has made of the effect on the daily prison population of moving the eligibility for remission to the 85 per cent. point of each sentence. [39599]

Mr. Maclean: A White Paper will be published early in 1996 setting out full details of the Government's proposals on sentencing and our assessment of their implications.

Prison Inspections

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what circumstances (a) hon. Members and (b) members of their staff are allowed to accompany the chief inspector of prisons when he visits a prison in hon. Members' constituencies; and if he will make a statement. [39548]

Miss Widdecombe: It is not normal practice for HM chief inspector of prisons and prison inspectors to be accompanied by visitors while conducting inspections of prison establishments in England and Wales.

Doncaster Prison

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the members of the board of visitors at Doncaster prison; and when their term of office expires. [39551]

Miss Widdecombe: The members of the board of visitors at HMP Doncaster are as listed:

Mrs. Audrey Anne Murphy JP (Chairman)
Mr. John Sammuel George Share (Vice Chairman)
Mr. Michael Andrew JP
Mrs. Diane Atkinson
Mrs. Hazel Pauline Bailey JP
Mr. William John Barton
Mrs. Yvonne Cooke
Mr. Pete Etherington
Mr. Martin John Faulkner
Mr. Barry Michael Goforth
Mr. Roy Hunt
Miss Susan Iris Mackay
Mr. Douglas Manners
Mrs. Carole Diane O'Neill JP
Mrs. Maureen Oakes
Mrs. Andrea Robinson
Mrs. Cynthia Janice Thomas JP
Mrs. Pauline Wilson

The term of appointment of members of the board of visitors at HMP Doncaster is up to the triennial review date of the board, which is 31 December 1996.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the chief inspector of prisons is next scheduled to visit Doncaster prison; and if he will make a statement. [39547]

Miss Widdecombe: The next announced full inspection of HMP Doncaster is scheduled to begin on 10 March 1996. Whether HM chief inspector—if by then in post—will visit on that occasion will be a matter for decision at the time.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the subcontractors providing services at, or relating to, Doncaster prison since it opened whose contract was terminated before its time of expiry; and if he will indicate the reason for the contract being terminated; [38965]

(2) if he will list the subcontractors currently providing services at or relating to Doncaster prison; and if he will list in each case the services provided, the length of contract and the cost of the contract. [38966]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the temporary director general of the prison service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 26 October 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about present and former sub-contracted services at Doncaster prison.

Premier Prison Services does not sub-contract any operating functions involving security, the provision of prisoner programmes, health care, food services, works services or laundry.

There are, however, several specialist contracts in place to deal with the maintenance of computer equipment; electronic locking systems; closed-circuit television linked to video recording systems; and specialist plant and equipment. In addition, specialist medical personnel support Doncaster prison on a contractual basis when required. The terms of such contracts are a matter of commercial confidentiality for Premier Prison Services and the contractors concerned.

To date Premier Prison Services has not terminated any contract with sub-contractors at Doncaster prison.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current reinstatement value of Doncaster prison; how it is calculated; and how often it is reassessed. [39054]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary director general of the prison service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 26 October 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the current re-instatement value of Doncaster prison, how it is calculated, and how often it is assessed.

Doncaster prison is contractually managed by Premier Prison Services. Under the terms of the contract, damage to the structure of the prison buildings is the responsibility of the contractor, except where it is deemed to have been outside the contractor's control.

The pre-final account construction costs of Doncaster prison are estimated at £92.4 million (including VAT, variation of price and resource costs). However, given the extent of the liability agreed with the contractor and the need to evaluate the cost of damage should it occur, it is not necessary for the Prison Service to calculate, or re-assess, the costs of the potential re-instatement value of the prison. This is not our practice even for prisons for which we must fully bear any re-instatement costs.

Badsworth Hunt

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by date and location the number of police deployed to keep the peace at each meeting of the Badsworth hunt during the last 12 months. [39562]

Mr. Maclean: This is an operational matter for the chief constable of West Yorkshire.

Farm Fires

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many fires occurred on United Kingdom livestock farms in each of the last five years; how many (a) poultry and (b) other animals died in farm fires in each of those years; and if he will make a statement. [39335]

Mr. Kirkhope: The available information is for fires in agricultural buildings attended by local authority fire brigades; livestock farms are not separately identified in the statistics. The latest year available is for 1993.

Home Office

Prison Service

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the 137 full submissions referred to in Mr. Lewis's letter of resignation which the prison service were required to submit to the Home Office between October 1994 and January 1995 together with the name of the addressee. [38860]

Miss Widdecombe: No. The advice given to Ministers is confidential.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) on what date the director general of the prison service provided evidence to the inquiry; and on how many occasions he was called out of the interview on the instructions of Ministers, as described in paragraph 3.81 of the report of the Learmont inquiry; [38863]

(2) on how many occasions the then Minister of State, the right hon. Member for Stirling, called out the director general of the prison service from his interview, as described in paragraph 3.85 of the Learmont report; and what was the nature of the business which necessitated this action. [38864]

Miss Widdecombe: The former director general, Mr. Lewis, was interviewed by members of the inquiry team on five occasions. The interview referred to in paragraph 3.85 of Sir John Learmont's report took place on 29 March 1995. On this occasion, the beginning of the interview was delayed, there was an early adjournment for lunch, and Mr. Lewis was called out on one occasion during the afternoon, because my right hon. Friend the Member for Stirling, who was then Minister of State, requested urgent briefing about matters which were the subject of media interest and on which radio and television interviews had been requested. These matters included the market testing programme, the rise in the prison population, and the high intensity training scheme.

Public Events (Arrests)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many arrests were made during the VE-day anniversary celebrations held in Hyde park, London in May; and if he will list the offences committed; [39082]

(2) how many arrests were made during the lesbian and gay parade march in London on 24 June; and if he will list the offences committed. [39077]

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the number of people employed in the fire service in Wales in each of the brigades. [38985]

Mr. Kirkhope: The following table shows the establishment figures as at 1 January 1995 which have been taken from returns made by the brigades:

Total	1,740	1,830	139

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on response rates by the fire brigades in Wales. [38988]

Mr. Kirkhope: The following table shows the average response time in minutes in respect of fire incidents, taken from when the brigade answered the first call to when the first fire appliances attended at the fireground:

Brigade	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993
Clywd	7	7	8	7	7

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the annual budget for each fire brigade in Wales, in real terms, in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [38986]

Mr. Kirkhope: The budgeted net current expenditure for the brigades concerned—at constant 1995–96 prices—is as follows:

Clwyd	8.8	8.7	8.8	8.8	9.5

West Glamorgan	10.3	9.4	9.7	10.0	10.1

Electronic Tagging

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the total cost involved in the tagging of Clive Barratt of Kings Lynn, Norfolk; and if he will make a statement. [30811]

(2) if he will list the number of people (a) men and (b) women who have been given a tagging system by courts; and what is the average cost of such a scheme. [30812]

Mr. Kirkhope: The electronic monitoring trials in Manchester, Reading and Norfolk are expected to cost a total of about £1.6 million over nine months. It is not possible to ascribe costs to an individual offender.

The trials started in July this year. As of 23 October, 11 men and no women have been sentenced to electronically monitored curfew orders. One of the purposes of the trial is to assess the cost-effectiveness of electronic monitoring.

Mr. Matthew Powell

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Police Complaints Authority has finished its investigations into Mr. Matthew Powell of Nottingham; what was the result of its investigations; and if he will make a statement. [39081]

Mr. Maclean: I understand that the investigation into Mr. Powell's complaint against the Nottingham constabulary, which is being supervised by the Police Complaints Authority, has not yet been completed.

General Election (Voting)

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what procedures will be put in place prior to the general election to ensure that those entitled to postal and proxy votes are made aware of their rights as soon as possible by means of public advertising; and if he will make a statement. [39171]

Mr. Kirkhope: I refer the hon. Member to the reply to his question on 22 May, Official Report, column 497.

Cemeteries

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of when the supply of land for burials in urban areas will become exhausted. [38852]

Mr. Kirkhope: None. The provision of cemeteries is a local matter.

Animal Transport

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration has been given to issuing summonses against those involved with the Dutch transport firm Nicolay on behalf of Kent county council concerning offences alleged under the Welfare of Animals During Transport Order 1994. [38703]

Mr. Kirkhope: The summonses issued by Dover magistrates' court on 8 December 1994 for service in the Netherlands on W. Nicolay and named employees of the company were received by the UK Central Authority in the Home Office on 3 February 1995 and were forwarded for service to the Ministry of Justice in the Hague on 26 February. The summonses were not served by the authorities in the Netherlands, but the company submitted voluntarily to the jurisdiction of the magistrates' court. The charges against the employees were withdrawn. The case was heard on 23 October 1995.

Pay Bargaining

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide in respect of his plan for pay delegation submitted to the Treasury (a) a description of the staff in each bargaining unit covered by the plan, distinguishing staff in HQ functions, agencies and agency candidates, and in other identifiable business units and (b) proposals for trade union recognition in each bargaining unit and the negotiating machinery to be put in place in each bargaining unit. [38286]

Mr. Howard: The prison service, forensic science service and the fire service college already have delegated authority from the Secretary of State to make their own pay arrangements, and each has established its own recognition and negotiating arrangements. The Passport Agency is expected to have delegation from 1 April 1996.

The delegation plan which was recently submitted to the Treasury covered the remainder of Home Office staff. These comprised some 9,000 staff at grade 6 level and below.

There are no agency candidates at present and no plans to create more than one bargaining unit within the non-agency Home Office. We intend to recognise the First Division Association, National Union of Civil and Public Servants—which will become the Public Services, Tax and Commerce Union on 1 January—Institution of Professionals, Managers and Specialist and Civil and Public Services Association for the grades for which they are currently recognised. We also plan to recognise the Immigration Service Union for immigration service grades. Talks have taken place with all five unions about negotiating machinery. Our preferred option is for single table bargaining but, as the other four unions will not sit with the ISU, separate arrangements will be needed to cover immigration service grades. These are not yet finalised, but may involve separate negotiations with the NUCPS/PTC and with the ISU.

Mr. Peter Clowes

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement of the detailed charges which were brought against Mr. Peter Clowes in connection with the collapse of the Barlow Clowes companies and related matters, and of which Mr. Clowes was convicted; what was the sentence awarded by the courts in this case; what part of the sentence has so far been completed; what stage in the process of parole has been reach; if he will set out all statements made by the courts or parole authorities about the extent to which Mr. Clowes has had sufficient time in prison satisfactorily to consider and appreciate the impact of his action upon his victims; and if he will make it his policy to ensure that Mr. Clowes remains in prison for the full term of his sentence. [39325]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 25 October 1995]: Mr. Peter Clowes was convicted in February 1992 on eight counts of making a false statement to induce investment contrary to section 13(1) of the Prevention of Fraud (Investments) Act 1958 and on ten counts of theft contrary to section 1(1) of the Theft Act 1968. Mr. Clowes was sentenced to ten years imprisonment in all. To date he has served about three years eight and a half months of that sentence.

Mr. Clowes became eligible for parole in June this year. All prisoners, like Mr. Clowes, who were sentenced before 1 October 1992 to sentences of 12 months imprisonment or more become eligible to be considered for parole after serving one third of their sentence. Mr. Clowes was not granted parole at his first review. His legal representatives sought leave to move for a judicial review of that decision. Leave was refused but an appeal against that refusal was successful. The decision not to grant parole will therefore be subject to judicial review. This aspect of Mr. Clowes' case is therefore sub judice and I regret that I am unable to give details of his parole reports.

Once eligible for parole, prisoners such as Mr. Clowes are assessed annually by the Parole Board and if release on licence is not recommended they are released unconditionally once they have served two thirds of their sentence. If Mr. Clowes is not granted parole he can expect to be released in October 1998.

Women's Refuges

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the funding for women's refuges for each of the last five years and for the current year. [38471]

Mr. Clappison: I have been asked to reply.

In 1995–96 the Department is providing, through the Housing Corporation, £2.2 million in capital funding for women's aid projects in England largely to provide refuge places. Comparative figures for earlier years are given in the table. No information is available about revenue funding.

1994–95 £4.6 million
1993–94 £5.8 million
1992–93 £5.4 million
1991–92 £5.2 million
1990–91 £1.7 million

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many women's refuges there are per region and in the country as a whole; [38469]

(2) what has been the percentage change in the number of women attending women's refuges in the past five years nationally and in each region. [38466]

Mr. Clappison: I have been asked to reply.

The Government do not have information about the number of women's refuges, or the number of women staying in refuges. Some information on the number and locations of refuges is being collected.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to extend the number of women's refuges; and in which regions they will be introduced. [38472]

Mr. Clappison: I have been asked to reply.

The provision of women's refuges is best decided by local authorities and other agencies, taking into account such issues as the local supply of housing available for short-term use in emergency situations.

SCOTLAND

Fox Hunting

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to ban fox-hunting on land under his jurisdiction, and if he will make a statement. [39217]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The Government believe that all field sports are a matter for the conscience and decision of the individual, and we have no plans to introduce legislation to ban fox-hunting.

Fox hunting on land owned by my right hon. Friend and managed by the Forestry Commission is permitted only where it has traditionally taken place or where the right to hunt or to grant facilities to hunt has been reserved in the title. No permissions are currently granted for the hunting of foxes on any of the remaining land owned by my right hon. Friend.

Waste Disposal

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the materials which were licensed for dumping in the Irish sea and North channel, (a) within and (b) outside the area known as the Beaufort's dyke, in each of the last 20 years giving a brief description of such materials indicating who issued licensing permits for such dumping and the original source of the dumped material. [38590]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson [holding answer 25 October 1995]: The Scottish Office is responsible for licensing the disposal of materials at sea in Scottish waters.

The majority of licences issued by the Department over the past 20 years in respect of the North channel and Irish sea have related to the dumping of dredge spoil to facilitate the safe passage of vessels, or from engineering works. In addition, licences have been issued covering the disposal of 50 tonnes of nitrocellulose sludge from the ICI/Nobels Ardeer explosives factory in 1974, 3,213 tonnes of creamery waste from the Stranraer creamery in 1978 and 1,890 tonnes of rainwater contaminated with gas liquors from a number of dismantled gas holders in 1985.

Vandalism (Schools)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what new measures are being considered to reduce the cases of vandalism in Scottish schools. [37938]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson [holding answer 20 October 1995]: There is a range of measures which education authorities can consider to reduce vandalism in schools, including for example physical measures such as installation of security lighting and closed circuit television surveillance. However, the most appropriate course of action in each case will depend on local circumstances.

Adam Busby

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans the Director of Public Prosecutions has to seek the extradition of Adam Busby from the Irish Republic. [38493]

The Attorney-General: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 16 October 1995 by the Minister of State at the Scottish Office to the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull North (Mr. McNamara), Official Report, column 16.

No warrant for the arrest of Adam Busby has been issued in England or Wales, and therefore the question of extradition to this jurisdiction has not arisen.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

AIDS

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what projects are currently being supported by the Overseas Development Administration to care for people with HIV/AIDS in developing countries. [38780]

Mr. Hanley: The United Kingdom currently supports some 35 projects in 10 developing countries to care for people with HIV/AIDS. Financial commitments amount to £7.3 million through the bilateral aid programme. A proportion of the UK's contribution to UN organisations, the World Bank and European Commission is also used for HIV/AIDS-related activities, including care for people who are HIV infected. The UK has provided £37.3 million to the World Health Organisation global programme on AIDS since its inception in 1987.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the Overseas Development Administration's strategy for addressing the needs of people infected with HIV/AIDS in developing countries. [38781]

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Lady to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Gerrard) on 25 October Official Report, columns 644–45.

Tibet

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what amount of EU funds have been made available to Tibet; for what purposes; and to which organisation. [38621]

Mr. Hanley: The EC is financing two projects in the Tibetan autonomous region. Both are being implemented through the non-governmental organisation "Medecins Sans Frontières". These are: (i) a physiotherapy project aimed at training doctors and assisting people suffering from a crippling illness called "Big Bone Disease", —EC assistance approximately £98,000; and (ii) a health care and hospital refurbishment project in the Lhasa district—EC assistance approximately £315,000.

The EC is also considering a contribution of 7.6 million ecu—some £6.3 million—towards the cost of an integrated rural development project in Pa Nam. If the EC contribution is confirmed, it will focus primarily on support for agricultural extension, rural water supply, education and health services and a special project management unit.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Mr. Tom Ikimi

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his officials contacted Mr. Tom Ikimi, Foreign Minister for Nigeria, during his visit to the United Kingdom in September; and if he will make a statement. [39063]

Mr. Hanley: Neither Ministers nor officials had contact with the Nigerian Foreign Minister, who was in Britain on a private visit.

DEFENCE

Tenders (Anonymity)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what factors underlie the need for anonymity for the organisation that won tender No. 4964A; and if he will make a statement. [38304]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I will write to the hon. Member.

Training, Germany

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has held with the German authorities concerning the availability of (a) land areas and (b) airspace over eastern Germany for training use by British forces; and if he will make a statement. [38118]

Mr. Soames: None.

Nuclear Tests (Memorials)

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to commission a suitable national memorial to the British veterans of nuclear and atomic tests carried out since 1950; and if he will make a statement. [39221]

Mr. Soames: It has been a long-standing policy of successive Governments that the cost of such memorials is met from public subscription or private donations rather than from public funds.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what quantities of (a) radioactive wastes and (b) surplus conventional explosives his Department has disposed of in the Hurd Deep off Alderney; and if he will place in the Library copies of departmental documents which cover these disposals. [39256]

Mr. Soames: Complete records of past sea dumping of munitions at Hurd Deep are not available. Details of the UK's sea disposal programme for low and intermediate level radioactive wastes, including wastes generated by MOD establishments, some of which was disposed of in Hurd Deep, are contained in a report commissioned by the Department of the Environment titled "Report of the Independent Review of Disposal of Radioactive Waste in the Northeast Atlantic", published in November 1994.

Public Appointments, South Yorkshire

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all the non-departmental public bodies to which his Department makes appointments in the county of South yorkshire, indicating the total annual budget and the number of appointments made or renewed for each body in each of the last four years. [39423]

Mr. Soames: None.

Queen's Flight

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what official duty the Duke of York was performing when he made use of an aircraft of the Queen's Flight on 22 July; and if he will make a statement. [39295]

Mr. Soames: The Duke of York attended the British open golf championship at St. Andrews on 22 July at the invitation of the Royal and Ancient. This was an official engagement which was listed in the court circular.

Private Lee Clegg

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he gave to funding Private Lee Clegg's referral to the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland. [39746]

Mr. Soames: In the absence of legal proceedings, it would not be appropriate for the MOD to provide funds. Should a reference to the Court of Appeal be made in future, the MOD would consider the matter.

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he gave to treating Private Lee Clegg's application for financial assistance from the Ministry of Defence as if he had been on legal aid. [39747]

Mr. Soames: Like any other United Kingdom citizen, Private Clegg can apply for legal aid; the criteria for eligibility are not a matter for my Department.

Navy, Army and Air Force Institutes

Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has initiated a review of the Navy, Army and Air Force Institutes. [40236]

Mr. Soames: A review of the Navy, Army and Air Force Institutes, NAAFI, has now begun, and is being led by Mr. Geoffrey Dart on secondment from Marks and Spencer plc.

As a Crown-owned body, the structure and scope of business of the NAAFI will be subjected to the normal prior options tests. Comments and contributions from those with an interest in NAAFI and its work would be welcome and should be sent, by 1 December 1995, to Mr. Dart, independent review of NAAFI, Ministry of Defence, Metropole building, room 4/55, Northumberland avenue, London WC2N 5BL.

Mr. Dart's report is due to be completed by 31 January 1996.

Mr. David Hart

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 19 October, Official Report, column 360, on what projects, other than procurement contracts, Mr. David Hart provides advice. [39773]

Mr. Portillo: Mr. Hart offers advice on aspects of the management, efficiency and capabilities of the MOD and the armed forces.

Vehicle Accidents

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many accidents involving vehicles transporting his Department's weapons and ammunition have been recorded in each of the past five years; and if he will state in each instance the (a) date and time, (b) location and (c) cause of accident. [37722]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 19 October 1995]: My Department's traffic accident database only records loads as being "hazardous" or "non-hazardous"; it does not specifically identify weapons and ammunition. It has, however, been possible to separately identify the following accidents involving vehicles transporting MOD weapons and ammunition in each of the past five years:

1990

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 18 July, Official Report, column 1178, if he will take action to correct the Blue Book data reference S-0514906 relating to ex-corporal J. D. Wilson's presence at British nuclear tests to include Grapple X with Grapple Y and to exclude reference to Grapple Z; and if he will send amended records to the War Pensions Agency. [37749]

Mr. Soames: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Terrorists (Early Release)

10. Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received in relation to the call for early release of terrorists from prison. [36909]

14. Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he is taking on the early release of prisoners in Northern Ireland. [36913]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: These are not political prisoners but offenders who have committed grave crimes for which they have been sentenced by the courts. Primary legislation enacted by Parliament must continue to govern the proportion of their sentences they serve in prison. In a speech at Queen's university on 25 August, I set out the Government's policy and I shall be introducing a Bill today.

Tourism

11. Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what further proposals he has to promote Northern Ireland as a tourist venue. [36910]

Mr. Ancram: The Government's responsibilities for tourism are undertaken by the Northern Ireland Tourist Board whose proposals include continued television and press advertising working to encourage new air links to Northern Ireland and stepped-up promotion to the travel trade and conference market.

Peace Process

12. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the progress of the peace process. [36911]

15. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the latest position on the peace process. [36914]

20. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the prospects for a lasting peace in the Province of Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [36922]

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the progress of the peace process. [36921]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Hazel Grove (Sir Thomas Arnold), for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) and for Neath (Mr. Hain).

Electricity Interconnector

13. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the current position regarding the inquiry into the electricity interconnector to Scotland. [36912]

Mr. Moss: The report and recommendations of the Planning Appeals Commission following its inquiry into the electricity interconnector is expected in early 1996.

Drugs Misuse

16. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures are being taken to counter the problem of drugs misuse in Northern Ireland. [36916]

Sir John Wheeler: I have established the new top-level central co-ordinating group for action against drugs, of which I am chairman. It will drive forward and build upon action emerging from the policy statement of the Northern Ireland Committee on Drug Misuse which will be published shortly.

Road Safety

17. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary for State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to improve road safety in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [36918]

Mr. Moss: In July 1995, the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland, the Royal Ulster Constabulary and the Department of Health and Personal

Social Services joined together to publish a comprehensive road safety plan for Northern Ireland. This covers the three-year period to 1997 and is intended to increase the effectiveness of road casualty reduction measures by providing a more strategic approach to the planning, co-ordination and delivery of road safety activities. The plan will contribute to and support Northern Ireland's road safety target, which is:

"by the year 2000 to reduce the total number of people killed and seriously injured on Northern Ireland's roads by one-third compared with the average of the 1981n to 1985 figures".

Road traffic legislation is being strengthened and brought more closely into line with the rest of the United Kingdom; legislative proposals include the introduction of a penalty points scheme for traffic offences.

Education Administration

18. Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the administration of education in Northern Ireland. [36919]

Mr. Ancram: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the statement I made on 7 September, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Framework Document

19. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in implementing the proposals in the framework document. [36920]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The proposals in the framework document were presented as an aid to discussion and negotiation between the parties and not for implementation by the Governments. We believe that the framework documents identify the issues on which there will need to be agreement if there is to be a political settlement which is acceptable across the community in Northern Ireland.

Cancer Services

21. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on cancer services in Northern Ireland. [26923]

Mr. Moss: My Department has established a cancer working group, under the chairmanship of the chief medical officer, to review the current provision of cancer services in Northern Ireland and to make recommendations by 31 March 1996 as to how the services can be improved. Any major decision on the pattern of cancer services, including new investments, will be taken in the light of the work of that group and my Department's response to it.

Local Authority Waste Disposal Companies

22. Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he intends to introduce local authority waste disposal companies in Northern Ireland similar to those in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [36924]

Mr. Moss: Most of the district council areas in Northern Ireland are of insufficient size to support the cost of separate waste disposal companies. Accordingly, it is not proposed to make provision for the introduction of such companies.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

23. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has for the restructuring of the Royal Ulster Constabulary. [36925]

Sir John Wheeler: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave to him on 25 May, Official Report, column 749, and 29 June, Official Report, columns 777–78. The Government have since announced that the publication of their detailed proposals on the reform of the tripartite structure will be by way of a White Paper.

Roads Programme

24. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much is being spent in the current year on new roads; how many miles of roads this covers; and if he will make a statement. [36926]

Mr. Moss: Under the major works programme for roads, covering schemes costing over £200,000 each, approximately £7 million is being spent on 8.7 km—5.4 miles—of new roads during 1995–96. In addition, a further £2 million is scheduled to be spent on land acquisition payments for other schemes to be constructed in subsequent years of the five-year programme and on final payments in respect of schemes completed prior to 1995–96.

Details of new roads to be constructed during 1995–96 under the minor works programme—covering schemes costing under £200,000 each—are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The total budget for this programme in 1995–96 is £12 million.

Peace and Reconciliation Institute

25. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent representations he has received concerning the distribution of funds under the terms of the European Union's Peace and Reconciliation Institute. [36927]

Sir John Wheeler: In recent months, my right hon. and learned Friend has met representatives of voluntary organisations and the hon. Member for Antrim, North (Rev. Ian Paisley). My hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, North-East (Mr. Moss) and I have met with delegations led by Northern Ireland Members of the European Parliament to discuss a variety of issues in relation to the European Union special programme for peace and reconciliation. A vast range of written submissions was made as a result of the extensive consultation exercise carried out by the Department of Finance and Personnel.

Benefits

26. Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportion of individuals in Northern Ireland live in households receiving one or more means-tested benefits. [36928]

Mr. Moss: It is estimated that approximately 533,000 individuals, or 32 per cent. of the population, in Northern Ireland live in households receiving one or more means-tested benefits.

Economic Conferences

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what new investment in Northern Ireland has resulted from the economic conference hosted by the Prime Minister and President Clinton. [36917]

Mr. Ancram: The inward investment gestation period is usually at least 18 months, so no immediate investment has yet been secured. The conference firmly established Northern Ireland on the investment map. The Industrial Development Board has had over 150 US inquiries since the Washington conference and recorded a threefold increase in US companies visiting Northern Ireland in the year since the ceasefire.

HEALTH

AIDS

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money has been allocated to the Health Education Authority to spend on HIV/AIDS prevention campaigns for 1995–96 and for the four previous financial years. [37753]

Mr. Sackville: The allocation to the Health Education Authority for public education covers work on HIV/AIDS and other aspects of sexual health. The amounts spent since 1991–92 and the estimated spend for 1995–96 are shown in the table. The figures exclude funding for the National AIDS Helpline but include a share of accommodation and other overheads costs.

1991–92: £9.071 million

1992–93: £9.776 million

1993–94: £7.060 million

1994–95: £7.523 million

1995–96: £6.207 million (estimate)

GP Lists

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what sanctions his Department is able to impose upon doctors who remove patients from their list (a) without good cause and (b) against the patients' interests; [37637]

(2) in what circumstances doctors are permitted to remove patients from their list because the patient has made a complaint against the doctor; [37638]

(3) what action he has taken to prevent doctors from removing patients from their list because the patient is (a) too expensive to treat or (b) makes an unusually high demand on the doctor. [37640]

Mr. Malone: Where a general practitioner-patient relationship breaks down it is important that there are no more restrictions than are necessary on the freedom of either party to terminate the relationship. Safeguards are in place to prevent discrimination against patients. The General Medical Council issued advice in 1992 to all doctors that it is unacceptable to discriminate against patients on ground of age, sex, sexual orientation, race, colour, religious belief, perceived economic worth or the amount of work they are likely to generate by virtue of their clinical condition. Disciplinary action can be taken against any doctor who acts unethically.

Construction Projects

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) construction projects worth over £25 million and (b) IT projects worth over £1 million have commenced in each of the last three years, by region. [37924]

Mr. Sackville: The available information is shown in the tables.

Asthma

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what conclusions have been reached by his Department with respect to the links between asthma and poverty, particularly poor housing. [38311]

Mr. Sackville: Risk factors for asthma include: environmental tobacco smoke; maternal smoking; poor fetal nutrition; and modern home environments with central heating, double glazing and reduced ventilation, which may favour increased concentrations of allergens such as house dust mites and moulds. Due to the complex interaction of these factors it is difficult to quantify the effects of any one factor on asthma or to establish causal links between housing conditions and health.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met members of the National Asthma Campaign to discuss air quality reporting and other concerns of the group. [38873]

Mr. Sackville: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has not met members of the National Asthma Campaign. However, on 23 November the Departments of Health and of the Environment are holding a conference on "Asthma: Possible Causes, Successful Management" in association with the NAC and the Institute for Environment and Health at the Queen Elizabeth II conference centre. The conference will be addressed by Ministers of both Departments.

Doncaster Health Commission

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how much the Doncaster health commission spent on legal fees in each year since 1993; [39005]

(2) how many legal actions were initiated by Doncaster health commission which were (a) discontinued and (b) settled out of court, for each year since 1993. [39006]

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to approach Mr. K. Jones the chairman of Doncaster health authority for details.

Male Fertility

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what study his Department has carried out into the risks to male fertility resulting from environmental oestrogen phthalates, polychlorinated biphenyls, bovine oestrogen and urine from contraceptive users; and if he will make a statement. [38874]

Mr. Sackville: The Department of the Environment, in consultation with the Department of Health, commissioned the Medical Research Council Institute for Environment and Health to review the health aspects—including male reproductive disorders—of environmental oestrogens. The institute's report, "Environmental Oestrogens: Consequences to Human Health and Wildlife" found no evidence of a causal link between apparent changes in reproductive health in human beings with exposure to oestrogens and other chemicals in food and the environment. Copies of the report are available in the Library. The report made a number of research recommendations which Departments are considering.

Infertility Treatment

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if Doncaster Health Commission has sought from his Department advice as to the most cost-effective and cost-efficient means of providing infertility treatment in its area. [38977]

Mr. Sackville: It is the responsibility of individual health authorities to determine the provision of infertility treatment in the light of local needs. Advice has been made available to all health authorities and national health service trusts through the publication, "Effective Health Care Bulletin on Management of Sub-fertility", copies of which are available in the Library.

Social Services, Dorset

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been (a) the increase in Government funding of social services in Dorset and (b) the inflation rate since (i) 1979 and (ii) 1990; and if he will make a statement. [38972]

Mr. Bowis: Figures for individual local government services were not available before 1981–82. Funding for personal social services in Dorset increased from £19.7 million in that year to £43.5 million in 1990–91, and £86.5 million in 1995–96. Inflation from 1981–82 and 1990–91 has been 98 and 19 per cent. respectively—as measured by the gross domestic product deflator.

In real terms personal social services resources in Dorset have increased by 121 per cent. since 1981–82, and by 67 per cent. since 1990–91.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has plans to take off the prescribed list medicinal aerosols containing chlorofluorocarbons as a propellant. [38875]

Mr. Malone: No.

Diabetes

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action his Department has taken in respect of the statements of patients with diabetes mellitus about their care during the operative period; and if he will make a statement. [38968]

Mr. Sackville: None. It is a matter of good professional practice to ensure that patients are fully clinically assessed before they undergo general anaesthesia and surgery, and that their condition is monitored during and after the operation.

Trent Region

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will detail, for each financial year since 1990–91, the resource allocation per head of population for each health district in the Trent region. [38976]

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for the Trent regional health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact, Mr. Keith Ackroyd CBE, chairman of the authority for the details.

One non-executive director vacancy.

Sheffield Children's hospital NHS trust

One non-executive director vacancy.

Complaints

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many complaints he has received in (a) 1992–93, (b) 1993–94, (c) 1994–95 and (d) 1995 to date from patients and organisations representing patients at Doncaster royal infirmary and Montagu hospital NHS trust; and what assessment he has made of the working of the patient's charter in respect of this trust. [38978]

Mr. Malone: Collated information on complaints to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State about individual trusts is not available centrally. However, for details of complaints made direct to the Doncaster royal infirmary and Montagu hospital national health service trust, the hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman, Mr. Ray Tonkinson.

South Yorkshire Ambulance Service

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many ambulances are currently operated by the South Yorkshire ambulance service; what is their current age; and how many days the ambulances spend on average out of service; [39580]

(2) how many employees of the South Yorkshire ambulance service were dismissed in (a) 1993–94 and (b) 1994–95; [39541]

Mr. Sackville: The information is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contract Dr. B. M. Kingston the chairman of South Yorkshire metropolitan ambulance and paramedic service national health service trust for details.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish figures for the performance of the South Yorkshire ambulance service in each month from July 1994, showing the percentage of calls responded to within 14 minutes for the (a) Doncaster, (b) Barnsley, (c) Rotherham and (d) Sheffield health areas; what is the target specified in the patient's charter; and what extra provision is provided for the large rural areas within the county. [39608]

Mr. Sackville: The patient's charter states that a person calling an emergency ambulance—999 call—can expect it to arrive within 14 minutes in an urban area or 19 minutes in a rural area. Individual ambulance services as a whole are classified as being either urban or rural. The South Yorkshire metropolitan ambulance and paramedic service NHS trust—SYMAS—is classified as an urban service.

In 1994–95 SYMAS responded to 92.1 per cent. of emergency calls within 14 minutes. More detailed information is not collected centrally and the hon. Member may wish to approach Dr. B. M. Kingston the chairman of South Yorkshire metropolitan ambulance and paramedic service national health service trust for details.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by wave the start-up costs for each NHS trust, by region. [39499]

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 18 July Official Report, column 1154.

South Yorkshire Ambulance Service

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the extent of his responsibilities for the South Yorkshire ambulance service. [39445]

Mr. Sackville: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has statutory responsibility to provide ambulance services in England such as he considers necessary to meet all reasonable requirements. Subject to this overall responsibility, the operation of ambulance services in South Yorkshire is a matter for the board of the South Yorkshire metropolitan ambulance and paramedic service national health service trust.

Tuta Blood Packs

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many blood donations were destroyed after the recall by the National Blood Authority of blood in Tuta blood packs; [36849]

(2) what was the total amount of blood moved between transfusion centres on the evenings of 29 and 30 June to compensate for the loss of donations in Tuta packs. [36851]

Mr. Sackville: I understand from the National Blood Authority that some 7,500 units of blood were withdrawn from use following their first issue of warnings about the use of Tuta bags on 30 June. A further 2,500 were withdrawn following the further warning issued on 4 and 5 July. A daily breakdown is not available, but I understand that some 3,000 units of blood were transferred between centres from the nights of Thursday 29 June and Sunday 2 July, to maintain supplies of blood particularly in the areas most affected by the recall. All centres had adequate stocks to meet hospital demand on 4 July.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the Medicines Control Agency will complete its investigation into the use of faulty Tuta blood packs; and if its findings will be published. [36850]

Mr. Sackville: The Medicines Control Agency has completed its investigation and copies of the report will be placed in the Library.

Wessex Information Systems

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on the outcome of the legal action by the Wessex regional health authority against Wessex Information Systems; [38267]

(2) what was the sum sought from Wessex Information Systems by the Wessex regional health authority in the recent legal action; and what was the sum agreed in the final settlement; [38269]

Mr. Sackville: The Department did not give any advice in relation to this case.

Suicide

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are his strategies for the reduction of deaths from suicide in (a) adults and (b) adolescents. [38537]

Mr. Bowis: A wide range of initiatives are being pursued. The key themes of our suicide prevention work are improving mental health services, increasing public awareness of mental health issues, targeting occupational and demographic groups at particular risk of suicide, and reducing access to means. The overall suicide rate has now fallen in each of the last four years.

In addition, we have a comprehensive strategy to improve child and adolescent mental health. Most recently, public awareness work in support of World Mental Health Day focused particularly on young people.

"Health of the Nation"

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he is taking to address "Health of the Nation" targets for obesity. [38593]

Mr. Sackville: Measures to address obesity include:

activity by the nutrition task force programme to reduce the proportion of fat in the diet;

proposals from the physical activity task force for helping more people to be more active more often;

a major campaign being developed by the Health Education Authority to promote regular moderate physical activity and to highlight the contribution of physical activity to the prevention of obesity; and research reviews of effective intervention with regard to the prevention and treatment of obesity.

Deliberate Self Harm

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the incidence of deliberate self harm amongst (a) adults and (b) adolescents, annually from 1987. [38539]

Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East (Mr. Brown), Official Report, column 28, if he will place in the Library a list of the contacts for hospital and health services awarded so far under competitive tendering process by each NHS trust in England since 6 June. [39650]

Mr. Sackville: The information will be placed in the Library.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to answers of 13 January, Official Report, columns 255–56 and 28 March, Official Report, column 568, which NHS clinical services and which non-clinical services are currently being market tested; and if he will list the companies tendering for business and the location of each market testing operation. [39651]

Mr. Sackville: The only new entry to the list provided in January would cover the market testing of perfusionist services by one trust. The list covers services which one or more NHS trust has market tested in recent years, as notified to the NHS Executive's market testing database. The other information is not available centrally.

Private Patients

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many private inpatients and how many private outpatients were seen within the NHS and using NHS facilities by region and in total in (a) 1989–90 and (b) the latest date for which figures are available. [39386]

Mr. Sackville: Information on the number of private patients—finished consultant episodes—treated in national health service hospitals in England by region of treatment for 1989–90 is contained in the annual publication, "Hospital Episode Statistics". Similar information on private outpatient attendances is contained in "Outpatient and ward attenders". The latest year for which figures are available for is 1993–94. Copies of the publications are in the Library.

Hospitals

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what information the NHS Executive has on the number of hospitals in each region and in total in England at 1 April; [39387]

(2) what is the Department's definition of a hospital; [39388]

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many new hospitals were (a) begun and (b) completed in each year since 1974. [39391]

Mr. Sackville: The information is not available centrally in the form requested. Information is collected on reported major capital projects, and this information is shown in the table.

Hospital Closures

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish an updated list of all hospital closures that have been referred to his Department for decision, including those awaiting a decision, giving the nature of all organisations objecting, the decision, if any, and date. [39390]

Mr. Sackville: An updated list of proposed closures and changes of use considered by Ministers for the period from January 1992 to September 1995 will be placed in the Library. All except Higham Grange rehabilitation centre and Hartford Hall rehabilitation hospital have been contested by the relevant community health council. Other organisations may have objected but full details could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Ministers approved all the proposals except the proposed closure of Ponteland and Lemington hospitals, Newcastle. No decision has been made on Booth Hall children's hospital, Manchester, while the consultation process is subject to judicial review.

Abortions

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of abortions were carried out by the NHS in each (i) district health authority, (ii) regional health authority and (iii) in total in each of the last five years; and what was the total number of abortions performed in each year. School Reorganisations and Closures

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment which local education authorities have school reorganisation or closure proposals under consideration by her Department; how many surplus places will be removed by each local education authority as a result of their proposals; and which authorities, since the submission of their proposal to her Department, have been waiting for a decision for (a) up to three months, (b) three to six months, (c) six to none months, (d) nine to 12 months and (e) in excess of 12 months. [39154]

Mrs. Gillan: The table lists proposals under consideration by the Department for the closure, alteration or establishment of county and voluntary schools; the number of places that it proposed will be removed as result of the proposals, where this is a factor and the number involved is known; and the length of time the proposals have been under consideration.

Training for Work

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is (a) the average number of training for work leavers who gained a qualification or credits towards a qualification and (b) the number of leavers entering employment in 1991, 1992, 1993 and 1994 (i) nationally and (ii) for each training and enterprise council. [39778]

Mr. Paice: As the information requested contains a large amount of data, I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my reply in the Library.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much was spent on the training for work programme in each year between 1991 and 1995 and what is the projected account in 1995–96; what was the number of starts and filled places in each year; and what is the projected figure for 1995–96. [39776]

Mr. Paice: In April 1993, training for work replaced employment training and employment action. The information requested is given in the following table.

	1991–92 Outturn (1)	1992–93 Outturn (2)	1993–94 Outturn (3)	1994–95 Provisional outturn	1995–96 planned

2. In the expenditure figures for 1992–93, the ET element related to England only and the EA element related to England and Scotland

Training Costs

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the average amount spent by employers on training each of their employees in 1992 and 1994. [39779]

Mr. Paice: The data requested are not available.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the budget for each training and enterprise council for 1995–96. [39777]

Mr. Paice: The budget made available to each training and enterprise council in England by the Department for 1995–96 is shown in the following. The responsibility for TECs in Wales lies with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

"Race for Opportunity"

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on the launch of the business in the community campaign "Race for Opportunity". [40361]

Mrs. Gillan: The Government warmly welcome the move by major companies to champion "Race for Opportunity". These companies recognise the diverse talents and business opportunities which our multiracial society has to offer. Champions of the campaign will take full account of the ethnic minority community in all aspects of their business, from marketing and purchasing to employment, and they will strive to become good corporate citizens. Such efforts are to be congratulated.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Trials (Media Coverage)

Mr. Soley: To ask the Attorney General how many trials have been stopped in the last three years as a result of media coverage, in how many cases media coverage has been cited by the court as a reason for returning a not guilty verdict; and if he will list the cases. [38319]

The Attorney-General: There is no central record of cases coming within the criteria set out in the hon. Member's question. The two prosecuting authorities for which I have responsibility—Crown Prosecution Service and Serious Fraud Office—have identified the following cases in which criminal proceedings have been stayed on the grounds of "abuse of process" because the court has held that media coverage has made a fair trial impossible.

Name	Date	Charge
Anthony Grunwell	June/July 1993: Snaresbrook Crown Court	Theft from motor vehicle
R. v. Reade, Morris and Woodwiss	15 October 1993: Central Criminal Court	Conspiracy to pervert the course of justice
R. v. Hassan and Caldori	24 July 1995: Isleworth Crown Court	Conspiracy to distribute counterfeit currency
R. v. Geoffrey Knights	24 October 1995: Harrow Crown Court	Causing grievous bodily harm
R. v. Zaheer and Others	11 October 1995: Harrow Crown Court	Violent disorder

The table is compiled from individual recollection and is not necessarily exhaustive.

The inquiries referred to above have identified two cases where media coverage has been a factor, but not the only factor, in a decision to quash convictions. Those cases related to proceedings against Michelle Taylor and Lisa Taylor (11 June 1993) and Vincent Wood (6 July 1995).

Barings Bank

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Attorney General (1) if all information requested by the Serious Fraud Office from the Singapore authorities has been handed over; [38400]

(2) what action he is taking in respect of the decision of judicial managers and prosecutors in Singapore with regard to access for Serious Fraud Office investigators to documentation in Singapore relating to Barings. [38401]

The Attorney-General: Baring Futures (Singapore) Pte. Ltd. is under the control of judicial managers appointed by the Singapore High Court to which the Serious Fraud Office made an application for an order that the judicial managers disclose certain company records. That application was not granted and the SFO is currently appealing the decision to the Court of Appeal of Singapore.

I have myself corresponded with my counterpart in Singapore.

SOCIAL SECURITY

National Minimum Wage

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Secuirty (1) what assessment he has made of the number of people who would claim to be entitled to specific benefit if a national minimum wage was introduced at £3.50 per hour, £4 per hour and £4.50 per hour for all employees aged 18 years and over; [36765]

(2) what estimates he has made of the effect on the level of expenditure on specific benefits if a national minimum wage was introduced at (a) £3.50 per hour, (b) £4 per hour and (c) £4.50 per hour for all employees aged 18 years and over. [36766]

Mr. Roger Evans: No assessment has been made.

National Insurance Numbers

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will sanction the use of national insurance numbers as a means of reference by (a) the Student Loans Company and (b) the universities and colleges admission system. [37066]

Mr. Heald: We have a policy of restricting the use of national insurance numbers to national insurance, tax and social security benefit-related purposes.

State Pensions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the amount of (a) the widow's payment and (b) the Christmas bonus in the year 1996–97 if they had been uprated (i) in line with earnings and (ii) in line with prices since the date when they were announced and the date when they were introduced. [38161]

Mr. Heald: The information is not available in the format requested. Since 1988, benefit upratings have been based on movement in the retail prices index over the preceding September to September period. Data on earnings growth in the period September 1994 to September 1995 are not yet available. The available information is in the table.

Notes:
1. Figures have been rounded to the nearest 5 pence.
2. The retail prices index (all items) up to September 1995 as published by the Central Statistical Office has been used for uprating.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the percentage change in the real value of the pensioners' Christmas bonus since it was first paid; to what amount it would have to be changed to restore its original value; and if he will increase it this Christmas. [39653]

Mr. Heald: If the £10 Christmas bonus had been uprated in line with prices since it was first paid in December 1972, it would be £67.15 at December 1995. The £10 bonus represents about 15 per cent. of this figure. We have no plans to increase the bonus.

Notes:

1: Figures rounded to nearest 5 pence.

2: The retail prices index (all items) up to September 1995 as published by the Central Statistical Office has been used for prices uprating.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to pay the state retirement pension from the actual birthday of the claimant; and if he will make a statement. [39392]

Mr. Heald: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the Member for Glasgow, Maryhill (Mrs. Fyfe) on 28 April, Official Report, column 715.

National Insurance

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the national insurance yield in a full year from extending employers' class 1A national insurance contributions to all non-cash or dividend remuneration currently defined as income for income tax purposes but not for national insurance purposes. [39111]

Mr. Heald: The estimate is £250 million based on 1994–95 figures.

Social Security Expenditure

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the social security spending as a percentage of gross domestic product for each year since 1978. [38820]

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to the reply to the hon. Member for Mid-Kent (Mr. Rowe) on 23 March, Official Report, column 342.

Fraud

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the savings made by his Department in tackling organised method of payment fraud in 1993–94 and 1994–95; what were the reasons for any changes in savings; and what new policies his Department intends to take to increase substantially the savings by tackling organised method of payment fraud. [37591]

Mr. Heald: We have adopted a number of preventative measures as key elements of our strategy for tackling fraud. The redesign of the order book has dramatically reduced the incidence of counterfeiting and manipulation, and the use of secure delivery arrangements for order books to post offices has significantly reduced losses in transit. This has meant a reduction in the Benefits Agency's organised fraud teams' detected savings from £54.8 million for method of payment fraud in 1993–94 to £20.3 million in 1994–95.

We intend to continue the policy of enhancing preventive measures such as the electronic stop notice system in the south-east of England and the incentive scheme for post offices to identify fraudulent encashments. The benefit payment card which is scheduled to begin roll-out in 1996 will replace payment by order books and giro cheques. It is estimated it will help eliminate fraud of £140 million a year.

Alongside this preventive work, organised fraud teams will continue to examine new organised fraud trends that may emerge and develop their intelligence and operational capabilities to detect and investigate this type of fraud.

Child Support Agency

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) in how many cases children have had an increase in child support maintenance and how many have had a decrease, as a result of being assessed by the Child

Support Agency; and if he will provide a breakdown of these statistics; [37594]

(2) what is the proportion of Child Support Agency cases assessed at (a) zero to £2.35, (b) £2.36 to £4.99, (c) £5 to £9.99, (d) £10 to £19.99, (e) £20 to £29.99, (f) £30 to £39.99, (g) £40 to £49.99, (h) £50 to £59.99, (i) £60 to £69.99, (j) £70 to £79.99 and (k) £80 or more who were previously paying no maintenance, excluding those which are new separations. [37596]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 25 October 1995:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security on the subject of maintenance payments.

Whilst it is not possible to exclude new separations, an estimated figure for Income Support cases only is available and is set out in the table below. This is produced based on five per cent. samples of Income Support and Child Support Agency cases, carried out in February 1993 and August 1995 respectively.

Most of the cases included in these samples will be Income Support taken on in the first year of the Agency, when it was estimated that around 50 per cent. of those cases taken on were not already receiving maintenance. This proportion has increased to an estimated 77 per cent. since April 1994, so we would expect the percentage assessed who were not previously receiving maintenance (38.95 per cent.) to increase in future samples.

You also asked for information on how many cases children have had an increase in child maintenance and how many have had a decrease, as a result of being assessed by the Child Support Agency. This information is not available.

Notes:

1. The table may include some instances where maintenance was paid to the DSS in respect of the claimant and/or dependant(s) at February 1993 and some cases where there was no entitlement to maintenance at February 1993.
2. Number of cases includes interim and full maintenance assessments.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many cases have been cleared without assessment by the Child Support Agency in the last six months, with a breakdown of the reasons; [37597]

(2) if he will give a breakdown of all cases cleared by the Child Support Agency in the last six months showing (a) those where the absent parent is unnamed, (b) other cases which were cleared without assessment, (c) cases where a category A interim assessment was issued and (d) cases where the absent parent was assessed to pay (1) zero to £2.35, (2) £2.36-£4.99, (3) £5-£9.99, (4) £10-£19.99, (5) £20-£29.99, (6) £30-£39.99, (7) £40-£49.99, (8) £50-£59.99, (9) £60-£69.99, (10) £70-£79.99 and (11) £80 or over and to express these figures as numbers of cases cleared during that period and as percentages. [37607]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss. Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss. Ann Chant to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 25 October 1995:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about cases cleared by the Agency.

You asked for a breakdown of cases cleared in the last six months without a maintenance assessment. As data for September is not yet available, I have based the reply on the first 5 months of the financial year.

During this period, the Agency cleared 128,726 cases of which 44,357 were full maintenance assessments and 8,618 were category A interim maintenance assessments. A further 75,751 cases were cleared without an assessment. As we have no business need to record more specific reason for clearance we cannot provide a more detailed breakdown of these cases.

A breakdown of the full maintenance assessments by amount and as a proportion of cases cleared is attached.

You also asked about cases in which the absent parent was not named. Since April 1995, there have been 35,223 cases in which the absent parent may not have been named. This includes 15,054 cases in which "good cause" for not naming the absent parent was accepted, and 20,169 in which it was not accepted. In cases in which "good cause" was accepted, the person with care may have identified the absent parent, but because of the possible threat to the person with care, or child, the case was not pursued. In some cases, the parent with care may subsequently have named the absent parent and the Agency has pursued maintenance.

Full assessments by amount and as a proportion of cases cleared: 1 April 1995 to 31 August 1995

Weekly maintenance	Full assessments (000's)	Per cent. as a proportion of cases cleared
£0 to £2.35[2]	20.7	16.08 per cent.

Notes

[1] Data extracted from a 5 per cent. sample of cases. As a result, total differs slightly from that recorded by clerical system (44,357).

[2] Includes absent parents on income support.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was (a) the total staff employed by the Department of Social Security's liable relatives unit at the time of its abolition, (b) the total staff currently employed by the Child Support Agency, (c) the average amount of maintenance collected per employee by the Department of Social Security's liable relatives unit in the last year of its operation, weighted for 1995 prices and (d) the average amount of maintenance collected per employee by the Child Support Agency in the last year. [37600]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 23 October 1995:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security concerning the Child Support Agency and the Liable Relatives Unit.

You asked for a comparison of the average amount of maintenance collected per employee between the DSS Liable Relative Unit in its last year of operation, and the CSA. I am afraid that it is not possible to provide information in this form. We do not know how much maintenance was paid direct between parents during the operation of the Liable Relative Unit, and other Department of Social Security staff were involved in the work (e.g. on finance, visiting and training) who were not in the Unit itself. As far as this Agency is concerned, our staff are solely responsible for all child maintenance work, but by no means all of them are directly involved in maintenance collection duties.

Such comparisons between the two systems are misleading, as the nature and organisation of the work the Agency does has greatly changed in comparison with the previous system.

As at 31 March 1995, the CSA employed 6,393 staff. During the 1994/95 year the Agency was involved in the payment of over £187 million in maintenance collected for Child Support assessment.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many former income support claimants were lifted off this benefit due to maintenance paid by the Child Support Agency in each month since January 1994. [37601]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 20 October 1995:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State concerning the number of former income support recipients who no longer receive income support as a result of maintenance payments.

Since January 1994, almost 11,800 claimants have ceased to claim Income Support because the maintenance assessment exceeded the amount of Income Support in payment. A table showing the monthly breakdown is attached.

I hope this is helpful.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will give an account for the cases investigated by the Child Support Agency under the requirement to co-operate which are not explained by good cause accepted, absent parent named or reduced benefit directive imposed; [37602]

(2) how many cases were investigated by the Child Support Agency during 1994–95 under the requirement to co-operate; and if he will provide a month-by-month breakdown showing in how many cases good cause was accepted, in how many a reduced benefit directive was imposed and in how many the absent parent was named; [37604]

(3) if he will provide an explanation of the cases investigated by the Child Support Agency under the requirement to co-operate which are not accounted for by good cause accepted, absent parent named or a reduced benefit directive; and if he will provide a breakdown of these statistics. [37605]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 25 October 1995:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security concerning parents with care and the requirement to co-operate with the Child Support Agency in arranging maintenance.

You asked for a monthly breakdown of the outcome of requirement to co-operate investigations completed during 1994/95 and details of such investigations. The attached table shows the information requested.

Of the 38,573 cases where good cause was not accepted, a reduced benefit direction was appropriate in 17,451 cases. In the remaining 21,122 cases, either the Child Support Officer, having had regard for the welfare of the parent with care or any children living with her, decided that a reduced benefit direction was not appropriate, or the parent with care later chose to co-operate with the Agency.

I hope this is helpful.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many complaints have been received by the Child Support Agency in each month since its launch. [37603]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 25 October 1995:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security on the number of complaints the Child Support Agency has received since its launch.

From the launch of the Agency in April 1993 to August 1995, over 52,500 written complaints have been received by the Agency. Monthly figures are available from April 1994, and are shown in the table attached.

Many of these complaints are from persons who are opposed to the legislation but not actually affected by it. The number of letters received that contain complaints specifically about the Agency's performance is not separately identified, but it is considerably less than the overall figure shown above.

I hope this is helpful.

Benefit Uprating

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will (a) list, for each benefit which is not being uprated and each capital or income limit which is not being raised, the reasons for not doing so and (b) list the current value of each such benefit or limit and the value that would have resulted from increasing it in line with prices and average earnings since it was (i) last increased or (ii) introduced when announcing benefit rates for 1996–97. [39660]

Mr. Burt: The information is not available. Details of the benefit uprating from April 1996 will be released as part of the Budget.

Appeal Tribunals

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the current rates of remuneration of chairpersons and members of (a) social security, (b) medical, (c) disability and (d) child support tribunals. [39658]

Mr. Burt: The available information is in the table. Members of social security and child support appeal tribunals are not paid but can claim loss of earnings.

Child Benefit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the combined value of (a) child dependency increase and child benefit for the child of a widow and (b) children's allowance and child benefit for the child of a war widow at current and April 1995 prices and as a percentage of average earnings, in November 1979 and at each subsequent uprating date. [39654]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The information is in the tables:

Occupational Pensions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the effect on an early leaver's pension rights if his period of employment was too short to qualify for a pension under the employer's pension scheme and the employer fails to pay a contributions equivalent premium within the prescribed time limit. [39659]

Mr. Heald: A contributions equivalent premium is payable to the state if someone leaves a contracted-out salary-related occupational pension scheme before state pension age with less than two years' pensionable service with his employer. Payment of a CEP means that the employee's rights under the state earnings-related pension scheme are restored as if he had not been in contracted-out employment. Where a CEP is not paid within the prescribed time limit the employer's pension scheme remains liable to provide a guaranteed minimum pension and is notified accordingly by the Contributions Agency. There is no liability to pay a CEP which does not exceed £17.00. In this situation, the amount payable is treated as having been paid and the earner's SERPS rights restored as if he had not been in contracted-out employment.

Income Support

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the annual change in the amount of income support payable to a single pensioner with savings of £5,000, £8,000 or £8,100 in 1995–96 if the capital limits had been raised since 1986 in line with (a) prices and (b) average earnings. [39656]

Mr. Rogers Evans: The information is not available in the format requested. However, we are able to give figures showing the change in the amount of tariff income brought to account, as a result of the capital limits being uprated by (a) the retail prices index and (b) average earnings since 1988. The estimated changes in tariff income are set out in the table:

Amount of capital held £	Change in tariff income under capital limits uprated by (a) prices £	Change in tariff income under capital limits uprated by (b) earnings £
5,000	5	7
8,000	5	7
8,100	16	14

Notes:

1. The capital limits of £3,000 and £6,000 have been uprated by (a) the retail prices index, and (b) average earnings from 1988 to 1995–96 prices, and not 1986. The question has been answered in this form because income support was not in place until 1988. No account has been taken of governmental increases to the limits since 1988.
2. For cases on income support with capital held below the current upper limit of £8,000 the change in their weekly tariff income is equivalent to the gain in income support.
3. Those with capital of £8,100 might become entitled to income support under the upper capital limit, depending upon their underlying entitlement to income support, reduced by the tariff income indicated in the table.

Widow's Benefit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what change in the £1,000 widow's payment would be required in April 1996 in order to restore it to its value in relation to (a) prices and (b) average earnings in 1985. [39655]

Mr. Heald: The information is not available in the format requested. Since 1988, benefit upratings have been based on movement in the retail prices index over the preceding September to September period. Data on earnings growth in the period September 1994 to September 1995 are not yet available. If the widow's payment had been uprated in line with prices since December 1985, it would be £1,584.65 at April 1996.

Notes:

1. Figures rounded to nearest 5 pence.
2. The retail prices index (all items) up to September 1995 as published by the Central Statistical Office had been used for prices uprating.

Households Below Average Income

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he intends to publish any amendment to "Households Below Average Income: a statistical analysis 1979–1992/93". [40237]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: I have today placed in the Library of the House an addendum to the publication "Households Below Average Income: a statistical analysis 1979–1992/93" published on 2 June 1995. This sets out the minor corrections necessary in a number of places in the document, as a result of two data errors. Both errors are well within the margins of error which were set out in the original publication.

I have written to the hon. Members correcting replies to parliamentary questions based on the incorrect data. Details of these parliamentary questions are in the table.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Aid Budget

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations his Department has received from (a) members of the general public, (b) hon. Members and (c) non-governmental organisations on the size of the overseas aid budget since 1 September; and what were the figures for the same period last year. [39083]

Mr. Hanley: Since 1 September 1995, FCO Ministers have received over 1,000 letters from members of the public and over 800 letters from hon. Members and non-governmental organisations about the size of the overseas aid budget. This far exceeds the number received during the same period in 1994.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Grant-giving funds

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department for what grant-giving funds his Department is responsible, requiring a private sector contribution, where the use of national lottery funds is not allowed to count towards that private sector portion. [38603]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor's Department is not responsible for any grant-giving funds.

The chief executives of the Court Service and of the Public Trust Office will write to the hon. Member on the matters for which they have responsibility.

PQ 95/807: GRANT-GIVING FUNDS REQUIRING PRIVATE SECTOR CONTRIBUTION

The Parliamentary Secretary has asked me to reply to your question about grant-giving funds requiring a private sector contribution.

The Court Service is not responsible for any organisations or bodies that award grants. This question will be answered in detail by the Secretary of State for the Department of National Heritage.

Letter from Julia C. Lomas to Mr. Chris Smith, dated 24 October 1995:

The Parliamentary Secretary has asked me to reply to you as part of the Lord Chancellor's Department's response to your Parliamentary Question, listed on 19 October 1995, regarding grant-giving funds requiring a private sector contribution.

The Public Trust Office is not responsible for any grant-giving funds.

DEFENCE

Pay Delegation

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide in respect of his plan for pay delegation submitted to the Treasury (a) a description of the staff in each bargaining unit covered by the plan, distinguishing staff in headquarters functions, agencies and agency candidates, and in other identifiable business units and (b) proposals for trade union recognition in each bargaining unit and the negotiating machinery to be put in place in each bargaining unit. [38284]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The Ministry of Defence delegation plan in respect of pay for non-industrial staff breaks the Department down into three groupings—first, those agencies that already hold delegated pay authority for non-industrial staff; secondly those agencies planning to assume such authority from 1 April 1996 and thirdly, the main core Department, including non-departmental public bodies, agencies and candidate agencies which have not yet assumed their own delegations.

The figures in parts (a) of the answer include figures for industrial staff for completeness although responsibility for negotiating the pay of these staff was accepted by the Ministry of Defence as a whole in 1994 and a number of agencies and other organisations within the Department have since assumed delegated responsibilities for their pay. Figures for non-industrial staff exclude staff who will form part of the new senior civil service to be formed on 1 April 1996.

Trade union recognition and negotiating machinery are in respect of non-industrial staff representation only.

Cash and Operating Costs Limits

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the class I cash limits and Defence operating costs limit for 1995–96. [40629]

Mr. Soames: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, the following changes will be made:

Class I cash limits

£000s

Vote	Current cash limit	Change	Revised cash limit
1	10,616,956	180,000	10,796,956
3	6,145,325	–180,000	5,965,325

These changes allow for increased expenditure on class I, vote 1 to reflect revised expectations of receipts from the planned sale of married quarters. The increase will be offset by lower expenditure on class I, vote 3 and will not, therefore, add to the planned total of public expenditure. There is no change to the block Defence cash limit.

As a result, the Ministry of Defence operating costs limit will be increased by 180 million from £16,587,218,000 to £16,767,218,000.

Indonesia (Aircraft Exports)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Hawk 100s, and how many Hawk 200s, are to be delivered to Indonesia under current arrangements; and when deliveries will start. [37710]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Details of the commercial arrangement for the supply of 24 Hawk aircraft are confidential between the supplier and the customer.

Compensation Claims

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department has paid in compensation claims in each of the last five years. [37777]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 19 October 1995]: The amounts are as follows:

£ million

Financial year	Amount paid
1990–91	16
1991–92	14
1992–93	16
1993–94	19
1994–95	57

[1] Includes compensation expenditure relating to service women dismissed on grounds of pregnancy (£5 million in 1993–94 and £35 million in 1994–95).

RAF Chivenor

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 3 May 1995, Official Report, column 525, what was the number of sorties flown from RAF Chivenor as part of its own training task, in addition to those sorties originating from RAF Valley, during the last two weeks of weapons task training from RAF Chivenor. [36961]

Mr. Soames: None.

Note:
[1] Before 1993–94, the revenue support grant was paid into the constituent districts' collection funds.

Revenue account returns (RA95 and RA96).

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the amount top sliced for area cost adjustment as a percentage of standard spending assessment for each financial year since 1988–89. [38917]

Sir Paul Beresford [holding answer 26 October 1995]: The total of the area cost adjustment is not pre-determined as a top slice from the total of standard spending assessments. It is determined principally from the differentials in earning.

The contribution of the area cost adjustment factor in the standard spending assessment was given in response to my hon. Friend the Member for Congleton, (Mrs. Winterton) on 20 October 1995, Official Report, columns 383–84. Standard spending assessments were not introduced until 1990–91.

Eland House

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement regarding progress on the refurbishment of Eland house. [38896]

Sir Paul Beresford: Eland house is currently being constructed by Land Securities, which expects to be able to hand over the building within the next three weeks.

Mr. Clappison: English Nature's fourth annual report, a copy of which is in the Library, sets out its methods. The report also confirms that the categories of damage to SSSIs in England are based on the "Common Standards for Monitoring" report by the Joint Nature Conservation Committee (1993).

Abandoned Mine Workings (Pollution)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps are being taken to monitor (a) mine water pollution and (b) methane emissions from abandoned mine workings in South Yorkshire. [39033]

Mr. Clappison: The answers are as follows:

(a) Mine Water pollution

The Coal Authority monitors mine water levels at 11 sites in south Yorkshire, and the National Rivers Authority monitors mine water discharges. The two authorities are working together closely, in the light of results from monitoring, to develop a clearer understanding of the mine water situation in the area and a strategy for the prevention of future problems.

(b) Methane emissions

The Coal Authority carries out regular monitoring for methane at 15 sites in south Yorkshire. It is also working with Rotherham and Barnsley borough councils to monitor and address methane problems in these areas.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all test bore holes sunk in south Yorkshire in each year since 1990 to monitor mine water flows. [39034]

Mr. Clappison: Neither the National Rivers Authority nor the Coal Authority is aware of any test bore holes sunk in south Yorkshire since 1990 specifically for the monitoring of mine water flows. However, a number of mine shafts and boreholes sunk for other purposes in the past are used by the Coal Authority to monitor the mine water situation.

Major Fires (Reports)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment if he will seek a meeting with the chief inspector of HM factory inspectorate on the matter of liaison between HMFI and the fire brigade in preparing reports on major fires at installations covered by the Control of Major Accident Hazards Regulations, with regard to restrictions placed on fire service personnel in respect of disclosure of information received in the course of duty, to outside bodies. [39261]

Sir Paul Beresford: I am satisfied with liaison arrangements between the Health and Safety Executive's factory inspectorate and fire brigades in respect of incidents at major hazard sites and have no plans to meet HM chief inspector of factories to discuss this matter.

Disclosure of information received by fire service personnel in the course of duty is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 18 April, Official Report, column 29, what information he has about the source of the drums containing radioactive uranium waste found at Chelveston in January; and if he will make a statement. [40164]

Mr. Clappison: Investigations by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution are still under way, but are now nearing completion.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has yet discovered the source of the depleted uranium found at Poplar farm, Chelveston on 13 January; and what action he has taken against the land owner, the source of the material and the carrier of the material. [40217]

Mr. Clappison: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin) earlier today.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment (1) what has been the response of the Cabinet Environment Committee to the findings of the House of Lords Select Committee on Sustainable Development in paragraph 6.31 of its recent report, HL 72; and whether the Committee had integrated environmental concerns with energy policy; [38204]

(2) what is his response to the recommendations in paragraph 6.15 of the report from the House of Lords Select Committee on Sustainable Development, HL 72, that there should be a clear and prompt re-statement of the functions and purposes of the Government's own internal integrating mechanisms. [38205]

Mr. Clappison: The Government published their full response to the Lords Select Committee Report on Sustainable Development (HL 72) on Thursday 12 October as Cm 3018. Paragraphs 66 to 68 of the response set out the position on the Energy Saving Trust—paragraph 6.31 of the report. Paragraphs 81 to 84 of the response restate the functions and purposes of the Government's own internal integrating mechanisms.

Cable Laying (Damage to Trees)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment what representations and evidence he has received on the damage done to trees by cable television companies; and what action he is taking. [38206]

Mr. Clappison: In the light of widespread public concern about the effects on tree roots of cable and utility companies trenching activities, guidelines to help minimise damage were published by the National Joint Utilities Group in April. To help inform a review of the guidelines, after six months' experience of their operation, the Government have invited local authorities in particular to submit comments on how well the guidelines are working by the end of October.

HSE Offshore Safety Division

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people are employed with the Health and Safety Executives offshore safety division in Scotland on (a) a full-time and (b) a part-time basis. [39665]

Sir Paul Beresford: At 1 April 1995, 116 full-time staff and six part-time staff were employed in the Health and Safety Executive's offshore safety division in Scotland.

Cash and Running Costs Limits

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to change his Department's cash and running costs limits for 1995–96. [40637]

Mr. Gummer: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the following cash limit changes will be made.

The cash limit for class VII, vote 1 (housing and construction, England), covering sections B, C, D and G of that vote, will be increased by £425,000 from £111,990,000 to £112,415,000. This change reflects a transfer of provision from the Department of Social Security in respect of additional rent officer service costs arising from housing benefit changes.

The cash limits for regeneration, and countryside and wildlife, will be increased by £12,283,000 from £1,482,233,000 to £1,494,516,000. The changes reflect the payment of £12,033,000 on capital projects which slipped from previous years for the city challenge programme within the single regeneration budget, the docklands light railway, Central Manchester development corporation, Plymouth development corporation, coalfield areas fund and the Victoria arena, Manchester. The increase is covered in full by take up of part of the entitlement to capital end year flexibility announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on July 13, 1995—Official Report, columns 776–82. A transfer of £250,000 from the Department of Health in respect of urban programme payments also is necessary following an excess transfer in the main estimates.

There will be associated increases to external financing limits for urban development corporations, by £15,775,000 from £243,739,000 to £259,514,000; and by £12,000,000 from £143,898,000 to £155,898,000 for the Urban Regeneration Agency (English Partnerships).

The Department of the Environment/European Regional Development Fund cash limit will be increased by £9,000,000 from £184,219,000 to £193,219,000 through the take-up of part of the entitlement to end year flexibility on the DOE Regeneration, and Countryside and Wildlife cash limit announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on July 13, 1995, Official Report, columns 776–82. Of this, £3,000,000 is for supplementary credit approvals for local authority capital projects and £6,000,000 for other payments.

The cash limit for class VII, vote 3—Environmental Protection and Water—will be reduced by £91,000 from £311,535,000 to £311,444,000. The change reflects a transfer of provision for storage and distribution of energy efficiency publicity materials to vote 5 and a token supplementary estimate to take on expenditure on pneumoconiosis compensation and awareness of workplace health issues from class V, vote 1 as a result of machinery of government changes.

The cash limit for class VII, vote 5 (Administration) will be increased by £91,000 from £226,009,000 to £226,100,000 to reflect the transfer of Energy Efficiency Office provision from class VII, vote 3 (Environmental Protection and Water) for the storage costs of publicity material. In addition, the Department will receive payment of £543,000 from class V, vote 1 (Department for Education and Employment: programmes and central services) in respect of staff and other support costs relating to liaison with the Health and Safety Executive, which is offset by an equivalent increase to running costs.

Overall, the Department's gross running costs limit will be increased by £634,000 from £228,220,000 to £228,854,000.

Following the announcement on 5 July of the creation of the new Department for Education and Employment and the consequent machinery of government changes, the Department of the Environment is now responsible for class V, vote 3 (Health and Safety Commission—previously entitled Health and Safety Commission and Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service). To effect this change in responsibility, a token increase of £1,000 is sought for this cash-limited vote.

The cash limit for class VII, vote 6 (Office for Water Services) will be increased by £819,000 from £8,146,000 to £8,965,000 in order to take-up end year flexibility on running costs, announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on July 13, 1995, Official Report, columns 776–82.

All increases will be offset by savings or charged to the reserve and will not, therefore, add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will reconsider the policy of claiming rent back from the landlord, as opposed to the tenant, in cases where the tenant has received housing benefit subsequent to acquiring a job. [39267]

Mr. Roger Evans: I have been asked to reply.

The circumstances in which local authorities seek recovery of overpaid housing benefit are varied. Regulations are sufficiently flexible to enable authorities to exercise discretion in doing this and they are encouraged to exercise this discretion fairly. Authorities cannot recover overpaid housing benefit from landlords if the benefit has been paid to the claimant. Recovery may, however, be made from the landlord if the benefit has been paid directly to him, although local authorities are required to make landlords aware that they may be liable to repay any overpayment before any such direct payment arrangement is introduced. There are no current plans to change these arrangements.

PRIME MINISTER

Cash and Running Costs Limits

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Prime Minister if there are any proposals to change the 1995–96 cash limit or running costs limit for the Cabinet Office: Other Service vote. [40635]

The Prime Minister: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for the Cabinet Office: Other Services (class XIX, vote 1) will be increased by £2,999,000 from £37,749,000 to £40,748,000. At the same time the running costs limit will be increased by £2,772,000 from £40,895,000 to £43,667,000.

The increases reflect the residual transfer of running costs provision for central services previously funded by Her Majesty's Treasury: administration (class XVII, vote 1) (£272,000) following the machinery of government changes announced on 16 December 1994.

The vote is eligible for an increase of £2,747,000 in respect of end-year flexibility for running costs expenditure as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 15 July 1995, Official Report, columns 776–82. The supplementary estimate gives effect to £1,500,000 of this increase.

The vote is also eligible for a cash limit increase of £1,227,000 in respect of end year flexibility arrangements for capital expenditure as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 July 1995, Official Report, column 776–82. This supplementary estimate gives effect to the increase.

Some £1,000,000 will be transferred from capital into running costs.

All the increases are either offset by inter-departmental transfers or have been charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Public Appointments (South Yorkshire)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the public appointments for which his Department is responsible in the county of South Yorkshire, indicating in each case the duration of the appointment, the date when a new appointment is due, and the salary. [39538]

The Attorney-General: There are none.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list all the non-departmental public bodies to which his Office makes appointments in the county of South Yorkshire, indicating the total annual budget and the number of appointments made or renewed for each body in each of the last four years [39428]

The Attorney-General: There are none.

Crown Prosecution Service and the Serious Fraud Office

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on whether the CPS and the SFO should become executive agencies. [40585]

The Attorney-General: I announced on 6 December 1993 that consideration was to be given to whether the CPS and the SFO should become executive agencies under the Government's next steps initiative. Following a prior options study by an interdepartmental group, I announced on 22 September 1995 that I had concluded that it would not be right to restructure either the CPS or the SFO as an executive agency. The special character of the CPS and the SFO as independent prosecuting authorities and their well-established relationship with me as Attorney-General, which is enshrined in the statutory concept of superintendence, are best maintained by retaining their present status.

However, both organisations will be introducing the principles of next steps, such as clarity of objectives, the determining of suitable performance targets, and the delegation of management responsibilities. These principles will provide the basis for further improvement in the management of the work of the CPS and the SFO in line with the approach set out in the recent civil service White Papers. Work to bring this about is under way.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Nursery Voucher Scheme

Ms Hodge: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what are the implications of the introduction of the proposed nursery voucher scheme for the local management of schools formula. [38159]

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department is considering the implications of the nursery voucher for LMS schemes. However, since LMS schemes vary, the implications will be different for each scheme.

Child Care

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when the evaluation of the out-of-school child care grant will be published. [38741]

Mrs. Gillan: I hope to publish the report during the winter.

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is her intention with regard to future support for school-age child care; and if she will make it her policy to continue actively to support school age child care and enable local and national agencies to do the same. [38742]

Mrs. Gillan: Any decision on future support for school age child care will be based on a full assessment of our current out-of-school child care initiative, including costs and benefits, and on wider Government policy for public expenditure.

Cash and Running Costs Limits

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what changes will be made to the cash limits or running costs limits of her Department for 1995–96. [40638]

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Subject to parliamentary approval of the supplementary estimate the following changes will be made:

The cash limit for class V, vote 1—Department for Education and Employment: Employment programmes and central services—will be increased by £853,000 from £2,121,711,000 to £2,122,564,000.

The cash limit for class V, vote 2—Department for Education and Employment: Employment Service—will be reduced by £848,000 from £907,800,000 to £906,952,000.

The cash limit for class V, vote 1—Department for Education and Employment: Schools, research and miscellaneous services—will be increased by £12,639,000 from £722,844,000 to £735,483,000.

The cash limit for class X, vote 2—Department for Education and Employment: higher and further education and student support—will be increased by £185,000 from £5,908,377,000 to £5,908,522,000.

The cash limit for class X, vote 3—Department for Education and Employment: administration—will be reduced by £45,000 from £340,000 to £90,295,000.

The running costs limit for class V, vote 1 will be £294,401,000, the running costs limit for class V, vote 2 will be £1,023,060,000, the running costs limit for class X, vote 3 will be £86,455,000. Therefore, the overall running costs for the Department for Education and Employment will be £1,403,916,000.

The cash limit increase on class V, vote 1 is as a result of a net transfer from the Employment Service to the Department for Education and Employment in respect of personnel functions and premises costs.

The cash limit reduction on class V, vote 2 is as a result of a net transfer of £887,000 to the Department for Education and Employment in respect of personnel functions and premises costs. This decrease is offset by a net transfer of £5,000 from the Welsh Office, class XV, vote 3, in respect of the accommodation costs of an office in Lampeter and a net transfer of £34,000 from class V, vote 2 in respect of manual giro reconciliation work.

The increase on class X, vote 1 is in respect of the take up of the capital end-year flexibility entitlement of £1,796,000 announced by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary on 13 July 1995, Official Report, columns 776–82, and provision of £10,900,000 for specialist schools which was within the Department's cash plans but held outside the vote until further information on the participating schools was available. This increase is offset by a contribution of £57,000 from the Welsh Office towards the funding of the special needs tribunal.

The cash limit on class X, vote 2 is to be increased by £185,000 to provide for an increase of that amount to the Higher Education Funding Council to cover the costs of students attending diploma in social work conversion courses as part of the probation officer training. This increase is offset by a reduction in the cash limit of class VIII, vote 1.

The cash limit for class X, vote 3, will be reduced from £90,340,000 to £90,295,000 to reflect the transfer of £45,000 to the Privy Council, class XIX, vote 3, to support the running costs of its central drugs co-ordination unit.

The running costs limit reduction is a result of transfer of provision to DTI (Class VI, vote 1), of to DoE (Class VII, vote 5) and of to CSO (class XVII, vote 12) as part of the machinery of government change, and as a result of a transfer of £45,000 to the Privy Council (class XIX, vote 3).

There will be an increase of £2,100,000 in the non-voted cash limit DFEE/LACAP for local authority capital for specialist schools. That amount was within the Department's cash plans but not added to the cash limit until further information on the participating schools was available. The local authority capital cash limit will be increased from £44,798,000 to £46,898,000.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Export Promotion Services, North-West

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give details of export promotion services in the north-west. [39607]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: All companies in the north-west have access to the full range of Government export promotion services. This support includes:

access to national network of export development and export promoters with specific country experience; generic and specific export market intelligence;

identify potential overseas business partners;

on-the ground help in overseas markets;

award schemes to encourage good export practice.

Complementary services are available through local chambers of commerce and other private sector organisations. Export services are increasingly accessible through business links as the network expands throughout the region.

Industrial Death and Retirement Fund

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what occasions (a) the National Coal Board and (b) the British Coal Corporation have identified the industrial death and retirement fund separately within their annual report and statement of accounts; what interest has accrued on the assets of the industrial death and retirement fund since 7 June; what is the protected level of benefit to be paid from the fund in (i) 1996 and (ii) 2000; and on what occasions (1) the National Coal Board and (2) the British Coal Corporation had a liability to pay benefit if there were insufficient money in the fund. [40098]

Mr. Page: This is a matter for the British Coal Corporation and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Electricity Prices

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will take steps to ensure that businesses consuming less than 100 Kw of electricity per annum enjoy similar refunds to those which have been negotiated for domestic consumers of electricity. [39965]

Mr. Eggar: The regional electricity companies have agreed that, subject to the listing of the National Grid becoming effective, each of their domestic customers will received a discount of £50, inclusive of VAT.

Electricity prices have fallen by an average of 6.5 per cent. in real terms since vesting to commercial and industrial customers. All customers will benefit from the further reductions in the pipeline thanks to the new distribution price control, the reduction of the fossil fuel levy when the nuclear industry is privatised and lower generation and supply costs.

Export Licences

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of export licences are processed by his Department (a) in less than two weeks, (b) from two weeks to one month and (c) longer than two months; and what representations he has received over delays in processing. [39263]

Mr. Nelson: The code of practice of the Export Control Organisation commits the ECO to aim to process licence applications within certain time scales.

Where an application has to be sent to other Departments for advice, to achieve completion within 20 working days ("circulated cases");

Where the application does not have to be circulated, to achieve completion within 10 working days ("non-circulated cases").

These targets are based on the exporter having supplied all the necessary information in support of the application, the details of which are readily available both in the ECO's notes for guidance and other awareness material. Statistics are kept to monitor performance against these targets. The compilation of other, ad hoc, statistics would involve a search of individual licence records which would divert valuable resources away from the essential task of processing export licence applications.

Performance against the targets in the last three years are as follows:

	Circulate Cases Percentage	Non-circulated cases Percentage
1992	67	68
1994	68	69

However, the performance in respect of cases requiring consultation with other Departments—about three-quarters of the total—has fallen in recent months, dropping to an average of 49 per cent. Ministers and senior officials have received some representations from exporters on the matter, both directly and via hon. Members. There have been a number of reasons. The discovery of circumstances where export controls seem to have failed in the past has sharpened even further the need to ensure that such controls are properly enforced. The staff in the licensing units have been reminded that while industry can expect that applications are dealt with expeditiously, there remains a need to ensure that all export licence applications are properly supported by the necessary documentation and other information. Many delays are caused by proper documentation not having been provided. In parallel with this, long-planned introduction of improved system and procedures designed, among other things, to ensure proper rigour in the consideration of applications, has tended to lengthen the process.

I am mindful of the need to process applications as expeditiously and thoroughly as possible. Every effort is being made to do so.

Departmental Work

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the work of his Department since 1990. [38076]

Mr. Lang: Throughout this period, the work of the Department of Trade and Industry has been to help United Kingdom business compete successfully at home and abroad. Since machinery of government changes in July 1995, the DTI also aims, through the Office of Science and Technology, to strengthen the UK's science, engineering and technology capability and to maximise its contribution to national economic performance and quality of life.

The DTI's activities and achievements since 1990 have included:

a continuing dialogue to identify business needs and ensure that these are taken into account by Government and within the European Union;

a leading role in the Government's effort to enhance the UK's international competitiveness, described in detail in two White Papers "Competitiveness: Helping Business to Win" in 1994 and "Competitiveness: Forging Ahead" in 1995; the promotion of trade liberalisation world-wide. The UK played a major part in the successful conclusion in December 1993 of the Uruguay round of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and the subsequent establishment of the World Trade Organisation. Estimates from GATT/WTO suggest that potential gains in world income from implementation of the Uruguay round will build to $510 billion in the year 2005 and in each subsequent year. As the world's fifth largest trading nation, the UK is set to be one of the largest beneficiaries; export promotion activities directed at ensuring that UK business is able to take full advantage of overseas market opportunities;

the promotion of UK business interests in an expanding EU. The DTI has taken a leading role in the negotiation of market-opening legislation, for example in the insurance and telecommunications sectors, and in maximising the business benefit from the EU; widening choice and stimulating enterprise by promoting competition and privatisation. For example, liberalisation of the telecommunications market has provided a steadily growing range of new services. Some 100 new licences have been issued since the ending of the BT/Mercury duopoly in domestic services in 1991. Over 4 million homes are now passed by cable companies. Prices have fallen for business and domestic consumers. British Telecom's main prices have fallen by over 35 per cent. since privatisation in 1984; development and delivery of a wide range of programmes to support business, including programmes to promote innovation; to foster small firms, and to respond flexibly to the needs of different regions and areas with special difficulties. A network of business links has been established which bring together all the most important local sources of help for business, particularly small firms; policies directed to ensuring that the nation's energy needs are met cost-effectively. Privatisation and liberalisation of energy markets have brought clear benefits. Average industrial gas prices have fallen by about 25 per cent. in real terms in the last five years, and industrial electricity prices by 6 per cent. Competition for supply in the domestic sector will not begin until 1998, but prices have already fallen by 13 per cent. in real terms for gas and by 6 per cent. for electricity (excluding VAT in both causes). Further reductions are expected as full competition begins; encouraging inward investment from all over the world. The Invest in Britain Bureau, funded by the DTI, acts as a single point of contact in the UK for potential investors, and markets the UK abroad as an investment location. The UK attracts the highest share of Japanese and US investment in the EU; maintaining confidence in markets by fair, proportionate and effective regulation. The DTI's regulatory responsibilities include competition policy; consumer affairs; company investigations; insurance regulation; management of the radio spectrum; telecommunications regulation and offshore exploration licences.

A detailed account of the work of my Department has been published annually since 1990 as part of the White Paper on the Government's Expenditure Plans:

Mr. Martyn Gregory

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the result of the writ issued by Mr. Martyn Gregory received by his Department; and if he will make a statement. [38716]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The matter was settled on 28 July 1995 when the Department apologised to Mr. Gregory in open court and agreed to make a payment of £55,000 to him in respect of both damages and his legal costs. It was made clear that while it had not been its intention to question Mr. Gregory's integrity, the Department did not accept allegations of Government connivance contained in his television programme and was satisfied that no contravention of export controls had occurred in respect of such matters.

Mobile Telephone Equipment

Mr. William Ross: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his estimate of the number and types of (a) analogue a*(b)* digital mobile cellnet telephone stations or part equipments which have been stolen or lost in (i) the United Kingdom, (ii) Europe and (iii) elsewhere, if these incidents have occurred (1) at the manufacturer's premises, (2) in transport or (3) at proposed or operational sites; and what software relevant to mobile cellnet telephones has been lost, stolen or mislaid. [40143]

Mr. Ian Taylor: This information is not held by my Department. These are matters for the enforcement authorities, the telecommunications operators and the manufacturers concerned.

British Geological Survey (Petroleum Division)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many people are employed by the British Geological Survey's petroleum division in Scotland on (a) a full-time and (b) a part-time basis. [39667]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Petroleum activities within BGS are carried out within the survey's petroleum geology, geophysics, and offshore surveys division. In Scotland, 51 full-time personnel who are Edinburgh-based undertake work that relates directly and indirectly to petroleum.

Technology Foresight Programme

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much additional money has been made available from his Department's budget for projects under the technology foresight programme. [38869]

Mr. Ian Taylor: In announcements made earlier this year, additional funds were made availble to underpin foresight dissemination and implementation as follows:

£3 millons to take forward foresight through the LINK mechanism;

A £40 millions foresight challenge fund spread over the next three years, all of which would be matched by industry;

£70 millions, spread over the next four years, for the rest of DTI to support innovation and foresight, part of which would be matched by industry.

Including matching sums from industry this package is worth approximately £170 million.

Export Licence Applications

Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade who ordered the destruction of the records of export licence applications for goods on the military list made during the years (a) 1980, (b) 1981, (c) 1982, (d) 1983, and (e) 1984. [39285]

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 25 October 1995]: The public records, Board of Trade eighth schedule, submitted to both Houses of Parliament in June 1950, gave notice in the disposal schedule for all export licence application papers to be automatically destroyed after six years. The Public Records Act 1958 removed the need to comply with this schedule, but the then Board of Trade continued to follow the practice of destruction after six years. This continued until July 1991 when it was decided not to destroy any existing application papers. That practice has continued to date.

Temazepam

Mr. McMaster: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to impose upper limits on the (a) manufacture, (b) import and (c) export of the drug Temazepam based upon the current and projected levels of required legitimate use within the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [39191]

Mr. Maclen: I have been asked to reply.

None. Additional controls to prevent diversion from the legitimate trade in Temazepam, including import and export licences, will shortly be introduced.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Organophosphate Products

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when his Department proposes setting up training programmes for those using organophosphate products for the control of cattle warbles, and if he will make a statement. [38690]

Mrs. Browning: My Department has no plans for setting up such a course. The National Proficiency Test Council already offers a certificate of competence in the safe use and handling of veterinary medicines. This covers the safe use and proper disposal of all veterinary medicines. A copy of a leaflet about the certificate is being placed in the Library of the House.

Common Agricultural Policy Budget

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the draft CAP budget expenditure published by the EU for 1996; what is the legal limit of such expenditure; and what was the actual expenditure in each of the past 10 years. [37631]

Mr. Baldry [pursuant to his reply, 20 October 1995, Official Report, c.408]: The 1996 draft budget for common agricultural policy expenditure has been set at the level of the guideline—the legally binding ceiling on CAP expenditure—of 40,828 million ecu or £34,069 million. Initial indicators are that 1995 expenditure will be about 35,000 mecu—about £28,000 million—some 3,000 mecu—£2,418 million—below the guideline. Expenditure in 1994 was 32,970 mecu—£25,264 million—some 3,495 mecu—£2,678 million—below the guideline. Details of expenditure on the common agricultural policys in previous years are contained in the annual financial reports on the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund, guarantee section, copies of which have been deposited in the Library of the House. The latest available report relates to 1993.

Cash Limits

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what changes are proposed in his Department's cash limits for 1995–96. [40630]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class III, vote 4 (Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food: departmental research, advisory services and administration, executive agencies and certain other services) will be increased by £8,338,000 from £322,070,000 to £330,408,000. The vote 4 supplementary estimate will give effect to the end year flexibility entitlement of £6,778,000 for running costs and £60,000 for capital announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 13 July 1995, Official Report, columns*776–82*. The supplementary estimate also reflects a £3,000,000 reduction in appropriations in aid and a £1,500,000 reduction in running costs for the Meat Hygiene Service due to transitional relief given to fresh meat plants.

The Intervention Board executive agency is eligible for an increase of £2,791,000 in respect of end year flexibility arrangements for running costs expenditure. At this stage it is proposed to take up £1,266,000 of this entitlement and increase the agency's running costs limit from £32,400,000 to £33,666,000.

Agriculture Council

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Agriculture Council held in Luxembourg on 24 and 25 October; and if he will make a statement. [40632]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Council adopted by qualified majority an amended Commission proposal enabling member states to pay national aids, under defined conditions, to farmers who had experienced considerable income losses as a result of significant currency depreciation in other member states. The original proposal was opposed by the United Kingdom, Italy and Sweden—comprising 24 votes—which meant it could not be adopted if a member state invoked the Council decision reflecting the agreement reached at Ioannina in Greece on 27 March 1994. I invoked this decision, thereby requiring the Council to seek a basis for agreement involving at least 65 votes, that is with fewer than 23 votes opposing or abstaining. As a consequence of this, the proposal was amended, in particular to require aid payments to be reduced or cancelled if currency depreciations were subsequently reversed. Although this was a significant and welcome improvement, it went less far than I would have liked. I therefore abstained on the vote. Italy voted against and Sweden in favour.

The Council also discussed reform of the rice regime and held a first discussion of the Commission's proposal to reform the fruit and vegetables regime. On the latter, I welcomed the proposed steps towards reducing the role of intervention and urged the Council to commit itself to eventual abolition of intervention in this sector. I stressed the importance of focusing support on a wider range of organisations than the narrowly defined traditional producer co-operatives proposed by the Commission.

Under other business, I expressed concern about the Commission's decision to reduce malt exports refunds and effectively shorten the period for which export certificates were valid. Several other Ministers supported. The Commissioner undertook to reflect and if necessary adjust the measures in the light of experience.

I also pressed the Commission to retain provision for guaranteed set-aside, so that the important environmental benefits of these arrangements could be preserved. I argued that any proposal setting limits of nitrate in lettuce must reflect the scientific advice. I drew attention to the lack of any health risk to UK consumers, the need to promote consumption of vegetables and the devastating effect which unduly restrictive rules would have on the UK glasshouse industry. I therefore argued that there was no justification for the setting of such limits.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Cash Limits

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for changes to the 1995–96 cash limits within his responsibilities. [40680]

Mr. Howard: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class VIII, vote 1 (Home Office administration, police, probation and other services, England and Wales) will be increased by £3,419,000 from £4,436,657,000 to £4,440,076,000. The increase is the net effect of: a transfer £38,000—running costs—from the Department of Environment in respect of section 11 grant administration; a transfer of £250,000 from the Welsh Office in respect of expenditure related to police force reorganisation in the Rhymney valley; a reduction of £1,160,000 in the local authority non-voted HO/LACAP cash limit from £116,333,000 to £115,265,000 for the development of the national probation service information systems strategy and police information technology; a transfer from offender programmes of £275,000 to the Department for Educationa and Employment and Welsh Office in respect of additional cost of places for Home Office sponsored students; a transfer from equal opportunities and general of £4,000—running costs—to the Department of Environment in respect of transfer of responsibility for countryside byelaws; the take-up of £250,000 from the reserve—running costs—for special constables; and the take up of £2,000,000 from the reserve for temporary protection for war victims from former Yugoslavia. There is also a diminution of police and probation capital grants by £1,740,000.

In consequence of these changes, the Home Office gross running cost limit will increased by £284,000 from £1,740,331,000 to £1,740,615,000.

The increase will be offset by savings, transfers or charges to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Amusement Machines

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to present to the Deregulation Select Committee proposals under the Betting, Gaming and Lotteries Act 1963 relating to amusement machines with cash prizes. [39976]

Mr. Kirkhope: We hope to present a draft order containing our proposals shortly.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next expects to meet the Lord Chief Justice; and what issues he will seek to discuss with him. [39756]

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend meets the Lord Chief Justice from time to time to discuss issues of mutual concern. The next such meeting has not yet been arranged.

Dorset Police (Expenditure)

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been (a) the increase in Government funding for the police in Dorset and (b) the inflation rate since (i) 1979 and (ii) 1990; and if he will make a statement. [38971]

Mr. Maclean: Expenditure on the police in Dorset has increased since 1978–79 by 515 per cent. and since 1989–90 by 46 per cent. Estimated rates of inflation over the periods in question are:

(i) 1978–79 to 1995–96: 200 per cent.

(ii) 1989–90 to 1995–96: 29 per cent.

Women's Refuges

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is his policy on the provision of after-care services for women leaving refuges; which services are being provided with national coverage; and what funding has been made for after-care services for women leaving refuges in each of the last five years and the current financial year; [38464]

(2) how many women are taken care of by women's refuges; and what estimates he has made of the extent of unmet need. [38470]

Mr. Maclean: I understand from my right hon. Friends at the Departments of Health and of the Environment that the information requested is not currently available. Consideration is, however, being given by the official and ministerial groups on domestic violence to improving the collection of data on the range of services and facilities available to those suffering from the consequences of domestic violence.

Departmental Work

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the work of his Department since 1990. [38075]

Mr. Howard: A wide range of actions have been taken:

to strengthen the police service in England and Wales;

to tackle crime through legislation, crime prevention, action on juvenile crime, and improving the efficiency of the probation service;

to enable the Prison Service to meet the demands on it;

to improve immigration control;

to develop co-operation with other European Union members.

The police service in England and Wales has undergone a major programme of reform since 1990. The main vehicle for the reforms is the Police and Magistrates' Courts Act 1994. Its aim is to bring up to date the management, organisation and funding of the police service. The Act also introduced reforms to promote effective police performance and increase local accountability. It set up new free-standing police authorities which now include independent members. I have given up detailed controls over police staffing numbers and capital expenditure, and within cash limits it is now for police authorities and chief constables to decide how to spend their money. I set key objectives for policing in England and Wales to focus on major public concerns. Police authorities are required to consult the local community about the priorities for policing in their area, and to report back each year on how their force has performed. Police rank structure and remuneration have been revised and adapted to support the new structures.

A Metropolitan police committee consisting of a chairman and 11 members was established this year to advise and support me in my role as police authority for the Metropolitan police.

The number of police officers in England and Wales increased to 127,222 in March 1995, and the service is expected to grow by a further 500 officers this year. The number of officers of constable rank in the service has increased by 1,825 since 1990. Additional funding will be provided to enable chief constables to recruit an additional 5,000 officers over the next three years. Action has been taken to reduce administrative burdens on the police to free police time for core duties, and since 1990 some 3,500 officers have been released for operational duties through civilianisation.

A new police national computer has been installed to deal with increasing numbers of transactions. It was enhanced in May this year by the launch of Phoenix, the criminal justice record service, giving the police instant computer access to the national collection of criminal records. The police national network, a state of the art telecommunications highway of the police service, has been set up and the first ever national strategy for police information systems adopted.

The Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 provided for the setting up of a computerised database of DNA samples taken from persons charged or reported for a recordable offence. The database went live in April 1995.

The Criminal Justice Acts 1991 and 1993 strengthened the range and effectiveness of community penalties and provided a new statutory framework for sentencing. Courts are able to take into account previous convictions when passing sentence, and to impose longer sentences where necessary to protect the public from dangerous offenders. Powers have been introduced to enable unduly lenient sentences to be reviewed and increased. Maximum penalties have been increased for many offences including causing death by dangerous or drink driving, possession or distribution of prohibited weapons and making obscene or malicious telephone calls. The Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 contained a wide range of measures designed to tackle crime and protect the public, including restrictions on bail and allowing the courts to draw inferences from the silence of defendants in certain circumstances. Comprehensive national standards for the supervision of offenders in the community by probation and social services in England and Wales were introduced in 1992 and revised in 1995. A Green Paper "Strengthening Punishment in the Community" was published in March 1995 proposing that sentencers should have greater choice and flexibility in community sentencing, through the creation of a single, integrated community sentence. Separate programmes of action have also been taken to develop, implement and co-ordinate policies for tackling drugs misuse and domestic violence.

Legislation has also been passed to enable the United Kingdom to participate more effectively in international co-operation against crime; to combat money laundering and confiscate the proceeds of crime; to ratify the United Nations convention against the illicit traffic in drugs; to improve extradition arrangements within the European Union and between our Council of Europe partners.

Legislation has been passed to strengthen the law on obscenity, child pornography and video classification and to provide measures for dealing more quickly and effectively with squatters; to deal with so called "joyriders"; to improve the efficiency of the magistrates courts; to strengthen the powers of the Courts of Appeal in England and in Wales; to establish a Criminal Cases Review Commission to investigate and refer possible miscarriages of justice to the courts; and to give courts jurisdiction over offences of murder, manslaughter or culpable homicide committed as violations of the laws and customs of war in Germany or German-occupied territory, during the second world war, by those who at the time of their offences were not British, but who subsequently became citizens or residents in the United Kingdom. A bill has also been introduced to pave the way for a new scheme for compensating the blameless victims of crimes of violence.

There have been important developments in crime prevention. In 1993, the Home Office issued a practical guide to crime prevention for local partnerships which helps local communities to develop their own strategies for tackling crime. In September 1994, the Government launched the partners against crime campaign to increase the contribution of individuals in the fight against crime through membership of neighbourhood watch and the special constabulary. In September 1995, I announced a new grant fund for the special constabulary to help forces to increase their numbers of special constables.

The Government have encouraged the greater use of closed circuit television in the prevention and detection of crime. In 1994–95, £5 million in Government money levered in a further £13.8 million to fund over 100 new CCTV schemes across the country. In October 1995, the Government announced further financial support for CCTV schemes to provide 10,000 new cameras over three years.

In October 1995, I announced the establishment of a national crime prevention agency to bring together the key bodies in the promotion of crime prevention.

Steps have been taken to combat juvenile crime. Legislation has been passed to give the courts wider powers to deal with serious and persistent juvenile offenders, including provision for a new secure training order which will be available for 12 to 14-year-olds who persistently offend. Action is in hand to establish five secure training centres in which those sentenced to the order will serve the first half of their sentence. We have also acted to stop the inappropriate use of cautioning. In October 1995, I announced plans to set up a ministerial group on juveniles to consider ways of strengthening measures to prevent those children who are most at risk of offending from becoming involved in crime.

An efficiency scrutiny of probation service in-house training began in 1991 has been completed and implemented, and new arrangements for qualifying training and the recruitment of probation officers were announced this year. A major efficiency programme, backed by the introduction in 1994 of key performance indicators and the establishment of a national information system strategy, is on-going and will produce significant cash savings while maintaining a high quality of service delivery.

In addition, action has been taken to secure better co-operation among all criminal justice agencies and the legal professions. Acting on the recommendations of the Woolf report into the prison disturbances in 1990, the Criminal Justice Consultative Council was established in January 1992 and 24 local area criminal justice liaison committees some months later.

In the Prison Service, the largest new prisons building programme this century has continued with 13 new prisons opening since 1990. Competition has been introduced as a stimulus to better performance in the Prison Service, with four prisons now being operated by the private sector. The Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 put industrial relations in the Prison Service on a new footing by clarifying the legal position of prison officers and governors under employment law, confirming that these groups of staff have the same employment rights as other crown servants, while also confirming that it is illegal for them to be induced to take industrial action. The Act also allows for associated changes to be made to pay determination arrangements for the staff affected.

Since the Prison Service became an executive agency on April 1993, it has reduced the rate of escapes by 76 per cent., ended the practice of holding three prisoners in cells designed for less than that number; provided 24-hour access to sanitation for 95 per cent. of prisoners; and increased the amount of purposeful activity being undertaken by prisoners. A new system of release on temporary licence which came into force on 25 April 1995 has reduced temporary release failures by over 75 per cent. compared with the same period last year. A programme of mandatory drug testing in prisons and a new national framework of incentives and earned privileges, linking incentives to prisoners' behaviour, have both been introduced during 1995.

There have been a number of important improvements to the immigration control. The Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993 has enable the average decision time for the asylum applications to be halved; further proposals for dealing with undeserving applications will be announced shortly.

The extension of visa regimes to nationals of a number of countries, the development of Carriers' Liability Act procedures, the increase in forgery detection rates and the introduction of a computerised suspect index have all strengthened the control. Revised shift patterns and the introduction of service standards at ports of entry have enabled the Immigration Service to cope with significant increases in both casework and passenger arrivals which rose from 47 million in 1990 to 63 million in 1994. Since November 1993, some 240 additional places have been provided in purpose-built accommodation for immigration detainees and a further 125 places will shortly be made available at a new centre at Gatwick.

Since 1990, close co-operation has continued with our partners in the European Union in tackling a range of common problems in the area of justice and home affairs. Before 1992, such work took place in a number of working groups such as those on immigration, the Trevi groups on police co-operation, the European committee to combat drugs and the judicial co-operation working group. This work resulted in a significant body of agreements and, particularly in the areas of police and customs work, the development of highly effective procedures for operational co-operation by member states. The third pillar of the treaty on European Union, which came into force in November 1992, brought this work within a unified framework and has enabled the tradition of intergovernmental co-operation on justice and home affairs issues to continue successfully. Four major conventions have been signed, covering extradition arrangements, fraud against the Community budget, Europol and the customs information system, together with a large number of important instruments particularly in immigration and asylum policy.

Crime Statistics

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) violent crimes and (b) sexual assaults took place against (i) men, (ii) women and (iii) in total for (1) 1993 and (2) 1994 at major railway stations and on London Underground. [37526]

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport on 23 October, Official Report, column 467.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Parliamentary Constituency Boundaries

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he discussed the new boundaries for Northern Ireland constituencies with the Southern Irish Foreign Minister, Mr. Dick Spring, on 17 October. [38576]

Mr. Ancram: No

Irish and Ulster–Scots Languages

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people answered the Irish language question in the affirmative at the last census; if he will arrange that in the next census the questions on the Northern Ireland census form relating to speaking and understanding the Irish language are printed in Irish and that it will require a positive written answer in the Irish language for an adult individual or family to be counted as Irish speaking; and if he will consider a similar question for speakers of the Ulster-Scots language. [38484]

Sir John Wheeler: The number of people who answered the Irish language question in the affirmative at the last census was 142,003. The number and form of questions to be included in the 2001 census has not yet been determined. Those finally decided on will be as a result of consultation, testing and review. The suggestions put forward by the hon. Gentleman will be considered as part of this process. A census order including the proposed questions will be laid before Parliament in 1999.

Information about the numbers of nursing home residents in receipt of the preserved rights rate of income support or who are self-financing is not readily available.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will estimate the cost of (a) doubling and (b) trebling the present £8,000 capital disregard for nursing home fees. [40190]

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the average length of time a person spends in full-time nursing care. [40182]

Mr. Moss: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what telephone call rates for people living within the area served by Kingston Communications are charged when using the Child Support Agency's advice telephone service; what monitoring of these rates is conducted by his Department; and in what circumstances his Department will pay compensation for telephone users that have been charged at a higher rate than for local telephone call service. [38729]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Ms Liz Lynne dated 27 October 1995:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security on the Child Support Agency's telephone advice service.

The Agency offers several enquiry and advice lines, and provides customers with a reduced—rate-calls service to its six Centres. All these services are provided by means of the British Telecommunications "Link-Line" facility. The numbers, all prefixed 0345, are charged at the BT local call rate. This applies to all calls no matter who the subscriber is billed by. This means that an 0345 call made in Hull is charged at the same rate as a call from anywhere else within the UK.

I understand from Kingston Telecommunications that their local call charge is different to BT's. It may be this disparity that is causing the misunderstanding about the charges made for calls to the Agency from Hull. Although an 0345 call made in Hull costs more than a local call within the Kingston Telecommunications network, it is still cheaper than a direct dialled long distance call from Hull to any of the Agency's Centres.

The Agency in conjunction with the Departmental Information Technology Authority constantly monitor the rates and tariffs of our telecommunications suppliers so that the maximum discounts can be achieved for our customers.

As with all matters, the Agency will consider a compensation payment where a clear and unambiguous error by the Agency has resulted in a financial loss to a client. Each such case is decided on its own merits.

Family Credit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will revise the guidance given to family credit claimants in the claim form and information leaflets to ensure that they are aware of the circumstances in which delaying their claim for the purpose of obtaining pay slips or other documents will result in loss of one or more weeks' benefit. [39657]

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of family credit is a matter for Mr. Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Paul Flynn dated 26 October 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about revising the guidance given to Family Credit (FC) claimants in the claim form and information leaflets to ensure that they are aware of the circumstances in which delaying their claim for the purpose of obtaining pay slips or other documents will result in loss of one or more weeks benefit.

Since the introduction of FC in April 1988, the claim form (FCI) has been regularly updated. The current version has been designed to take account of comments made by customers, in an annual customer Opinion Survey, regarding the guidance on the claim form about delaying their claim.

From April 1996, the FCI will include eight separate, highlighted statements informing the customer that sending in a claim should not be delayed in order to obtain any relevant documents.

I hope that you find this reply useful.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to decide on the legal responsibility for paying housing benefit to tenants of the Greenwich hospital. [38582]

Mr. Roger Evans: The issue of the status of Greenwich hospital, for housing benefit purposes, is being reviewed.

Fraud

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will relate the £1.4 billion a year cost of social security fraud he announced in July to the annual total of £558 million published by his Department in January 1994; and if he will make a statement. [39076]

Mr. Heald: The figure of £1.4 billion refers to the estimated annual loss to income support from fraud, indicated by the results of a survey into the extent of benefit fraud and error on income support and unemployment benefit undertaken in late 1994. These results were announced in July 1995. The figure of £558 million is the amount of fraud detected and stopped in 1992–93. The amount of fraud detected and stopped has risen to £717.6 million in 1994–95.

Industrial Injuries

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many reduced earnings allowance claims are currently outstanding for each of the benefit offices covering the Doncaster and Mexborough postal districts; [39038]

(2) what is the average time taken to process a PD4 claim at (a) each of the disability benefit centres covering the Doncaster and Mexborough postal districts and (b) nationally. [39039]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is not available and could be obtainable only at disproportionate cost.

Cash Limits

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has to change the cash limits of his Department for 1995–96. [40211]

Mr. Roger Evans: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class XIII, vote 3 will be increased by £14,566,000 from £403,139,000 to £417,705,000.

The revision takes account of the new scheme for private sector tenants from 2 January 1996 and provides for subsidies to local authorities in respect of discretionary spending on rent allowances—£2.5 million—above the maximum rent; for subsidies to housing and local authorities towards the cost of administering the housing benefit scheme and for subsidies to charging and levying authorities towards the costs of administering the council tax benefit scheme—£12,066,000.

The increase will be charged to the reserve and will not, therefore, add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Independent Living Fund

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for the ILF were outstanding on 1 September; and how many of these had been outstanding for more than six months. [38110]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The information requested is not available in the format requested and can be provided only at disproportionate cost. I am informed by the director of the independent living funds that there are currently 455 applications to the independent living (1993) fund outstanding where no decision has been made. Nine of these have been waiting for more than six months.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total number of asylum seekers receiving income support at the discounted rate of 90 per cent. for the latest available date and for the equivalent date in 1992, 1993 and 1994. [39878]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is set out in the table.

	Number of cases
November 1993	40,000
November 1994	42,000

Note:

1. Figures are rounded to the nearest thousand.
2. Figures for November 1992 are not available.
3. Figures prior to November 1994 include about 2 to 3 thousand cases which, although still recorded as asylum seekers, were in fact no longer being paid at the 90 per cent. rate.

National Insurance Fund

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the cost to the national insurance fund of allowances given in respect of private pension insurance for each of the last five years. [39879]

Mr. Heald: The information is in the table.

Paid in the year	Contracted-out rebate	2 per cent. incentive	2 per cent. addition	Total £ millions
1990–91	1,462	512	—	1,974
1991–92	1,739	598	—	2,337
1992–93	1,897	644	—	2,541
1993–94	2,051	690	—	2,741
1994–95	1,719	17	220	1,956

Government Actuary's Department.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the total subsidy paid to the national insurance fund for each of the past five years. [39880]

Mr. Heald: The treasury grant to the national insurance fund was £7,589 million in 1993–94 and £6,280 million in 1994–95. There was no such payment into the national insurance fund for the preceding three years.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Union Flag

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the Government's policy on flying the union flag from Government and other public buildings. [39847]

Mr. Sproat: The regulations for flying flags on Government buildings are issued by the Department of National Heritage in consultation with the Lord Chamberlain's Office. Under Her Majesty's command, flags are flown on 20 appointed dates. Flags may also be flown additionally by special command of Her Majesty. There are no regulations for the flying of flags on other buildings.

Football (Financial Dishonesty)

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what discussions she has had with Government legal officers on the status of the Football Association report into financial dishonesty in football. [39795]

Mr. Sproat: None. This is an internal matter for the football authorities.

Drug Testing Programme

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the annual cost of the drug testing programme run by the Sports Council. [39785]

Mr. Sproat: In 1994–95, the Sports Council's expenditure on doping control was £819,301. In addition, the Sports Councils in Wales, in Scotland and in Northern Ireland spent a total of £87,952 on doping control.

Sports Coaching

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans her Department has for the development of sports coaching at national level and school level. [39790]

Mr. Sproat: The Department of National Heritage will continue to assist in the development of sports coaching at national and school level through its funding of the GB Sports Council. In particular, the Government's sports policy statement, "Sport: Raising the Game", published on 14 July, also outlines the Sports Council's intention to spend an additional £1 million on providing opportunities for trainee and serving teachers to gain coaching qualifications.

Cash Limits

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what changes she proposes to make to her Department's cash limits for 1995–96. [40636]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, the cash limit for class XI, vote 1 will be increased by £23,776,000 from £993,273,000 to £1,017,049,000. This is to increase provision for assets accepted in lieu of tax, for the British library St. Pancras project and for compensation payments in respect of the concessionary television licence scheme. The increase will be met partly by recovery of overpayment of compensation payments made in previous years under the concessionary television licence scheme, by a reduction in the capital provision for the Historic Royal Palaces agency, from savings on provision made for commemorations to mark the 50th anniversary of the end of world war 2, and by a charge to the reserve. The increase will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Cusworth Hall, Doncaster

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assistance her Department is giving to the restoration of the 18th century chapel at Cusworth hall, Doncaster; and if she will make a statement. [39073]

Mr. Sproat: Government funding for repairs to historic buildings is channelled through English Heritage, which contributed £25,000 towards repairs to Cusworth hall, including its painted chapel, between 1988 and 1993. Further repairs to the chapel may be eligible for additional grant aid from English Heritage.

Historical Building Renovation

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list, by location, buildings of historical importance that are currently being renovated in Humberside and in each of the three counties of Yorkshire; and if she will make a statement. [39001]

Mr. Sproat: This information is not held centrally and could be supplied only at disproportionate cost. The numbers of grade I and II buildings in these counties in receipt of repairs grants from English Heritage, for instance, number in excess of 100 in 1994–95 and 1995–96 to date.

Merchant Taylor's School, Rickmansworth

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what action she is taking to save from demolition the world war pill-box attached to the grade II listed structure Great hall at Merchant Taylor's school, Rickmansworth; and if she will make a statement. [38963]

Mr. Sproat: None. I understand that, following an application from the owners, consent for the demolition of this grade II listed pillbox has been granted by the local planning authority, Three Rivers district council. Arrangements have been made for the structure to be recorded.

National Lottery

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list the guidelines which determine the exclusion of projects receiving lottery money from access to the public funds they would normally receive. [38346]

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) pursuant to her answer of 27 June to the hon. Member for Knowsley, North, (Mr. Howarth) Official Report, column 598, what further guidance has been issued with respect to matching national lottery awards with public funds; [39145]

(2) what principles govern the definition of partnership funding from the public sector that is eligible to match awards of funding from the national lottery. [39122]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 24 October 1995]: The Government have always made it clear that the partnership funding required for national lottery-supported projects could come from any source. We have also made it clear that applicants for lottery support who intend to seek partnership funding from other public sector sources, be they central Government, local authority or European funds, should ensure that the scheme in question allows for other funds toward the project to come from other public sector sources. There are a number of grant schemes which are specifically designed to lever funds from non-public sector sources. Lottery proceeds are clearly public sector funds and could not, therefore, count as private sector partnership funding to such grants.

WALES

Organophoshorus Sheep Dips

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will encourage initiatives in Wales in parallel with those of the National Farmers Union and the British Medical Association in running seminars on the hazards of organophosphorus toxicity; and if he will make a statement. [38620]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The National Farmers Union and the British Medical Association arranged a conference earlier this year to discuss organophosphorus sheep dips. I understand that they have no plans for any further seminars on this subject. Advice on the safe handling and disposal of sheep dip is available in various forms, including a leaflet produced jointly by the Health and Safety Executive, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Department of the Environment. This was distributed to all farmers in the United Kingdom.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what methods the Countryside Council for Wales uses to calculate the number of sites of special scientific interest damaged in Wales each year. [39240]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The definitions used in categorising damage to sites in Wales are set out in the annual report of the Countryside Council for Wales, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Grant-Maintained Schools

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish information on the cost on the series of conferences organised by the Grant Maintained Schools Foundation for Wales for head teachers and chairs of governors on grant-maintained status between September 1995 and June 1996. [38541]

Mr. Richards: The cost of these seminars is a matter for the foundation.

Nursing Homes

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people pay the cost of their nursing home care (a) in full and (b) in part; and how many have their costs entirely met through (i) income support or (ii) their local authority. [40184]

Mr. Hague: Nursing homes in Wales reported that of their 10,661 residents on 31 March 1994:

1,845 were wholly privately supported;

5,128 were supported in whole or in part by the Department of Social Security;

1,322 were supported in whole or in part by both the local authority and the Department of Social Security;

933 were supported in whole or in part by the local authority;

45 were supported by the health authority;

1,388 residents did not disclose their means of financial support.

Separate figures are not collected centrally to show the proportions of fees that are met by individuals. Almost all residents placed in nursing homes by local authorities will make some contribution towards the costs from their income, such as pensions.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the cost of (a) doubling and (b) trebling the present £8,000 capital disregard for nursing home fees. [40188]

Mr. Hague: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him today by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Health.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what is his estimate of the number of people who have had to sell their homes to fund the cost of their long-term stay in (a) residential and (b) nursing homes in each of the last five years; [40176]

(2) what is the average length of time a person spends in full time nursing care. [40180]

Mr. Hague: This information is not available centrally.

Class Sizes

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what percentage and how many primary school pupils were in classes of 40 or more in each local education authority in Wales and in total; and what was the actual and percentage change in numbers from January 1994 in each Welsh local education authority and in total; [39983]

(2) what percentage and how many primary school pupils were in classes of 36 or more in each local education authority in Wales and in total; and what was the actual and percentage change in numbers from January 1994 in each Welsh local education authority and in total; [39984]

(3) what percentage and how many primary school pupils were in classes of 31 or more in each local education authority in Wales and in total; and what was the actual and percentage change in numbers from January 1994 in each Welsh local education authority and in total. [39985]

Mr. Richards: Information about class sizes in Wales is collected centrally only in respect of the number of classes, not the number of pupils in classes.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make available the latest 1995–96 indicative standard spending assessments and disaggregated budget figures for unitary authorities. [40631]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The figures, along with those issued by the Welsh Office on 19 July, are set out as follows. They show the funding the new authorities would have received if they had taken up their responsibilities on 1 April 1995. The figures will be discussed by the Welsh Consultative Council on Local Government Finance on 16 November.

Cash Limits

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what changes he proposes to make to the cash limits for his Department and the office of Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools in Wales for the current financial year. [40633]

Mr. Hague: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, the cash limit on class XV, vote 1 will be reduced by £5,000,000 from £29,557,000 to £24,557,000; the cash limit on class XV, vote 2 will be increased by £14,481,000 from £645,453,000 to £659,934,000; the cash limit on class XV, vote 3 will be increased by £7,749,000 from £553,941,000 to £561,690,000; the cash limit on class XV, vote 6 will be reduced by £2 million from £2,266,342,000 to £2,264,342,000 and the cash limit on class XV, vote 7 will be increased by £275,000 from £8,471,000 to £8,746,000.

Running costs limits for the Welsh Office and the office of Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools which were not spent in 1994–95 have been carried forward under the normal end-year flexibility arrangements into 1995–96, increasing the running costs limits by £486,000 from £75,412,000 to £75,898,000 and £250,000 from £3,281,000 to £3,531,000 respectively.

The local authority capital cash limit—WO/LACAP—will be increased by £15,019,000 from £500,514,000 to £515,533,000. The Housing for Wales cash limit WO/HFW will be increased by £2.3 million from £103,210,000 to £105,510,000.

The decrease in the cash limit for vote 1 arises from lower forecasts of the amount required to meet claims for agricultural grants and measures.

The increase in the cash limit for vote 2 is mainly in respect of (i) an additional £11,009,000—including £6,247,000 take-up of end-year flexibility entitlement—to meet additional demand for payments of regional selective assistance; (ii) an increase in the Welsh Development Agency's grant in aid and public dividend capital of £1,400,000 (offset by a corresponding decrease in WDA's non-voted provision); (iii) an additional £750,000 for grant maintained schools—take-up of end-year flexibility entitlement—for essential backlog maintenance.

The increase in the cash limit for vote 3 allows mainly for the take-up of end-year flexibility entitlement for the central Government road programme—£2,288,000—the National Library of Wales—£1,700,000—and secure accommodation—£3,250,000.

The decrease in the cash limit for vote 6 reflects mainly a reduction in the provision for shadow authorities' special grant in respect of the proportion of the grant that will not be claimed until 1996–97. Of the £2,000,000 decrease, £1,750,000 has been transferred to WO/LACAP and the remaining £250,000 has been transferred to class VIII, vote 1 as a contribution towards the costs involved in the reorganisation of police authorities in Wales.

The increase in the cash limit for vote 7 results mainly from the take-up of end-year flexibility entitlement—£250,000—and a transfer of £25,000 from class XV, vote 2 in respect of payments to the Welsh Joint Education Committee for examination data.

The increase in the non-voted cash limit WO/LACAP comprises (i) £1,750,000 transferred from class XV, vote 6, and (ii) the take-up of end-year flexibility entitlement of £13,269,000—mainly for information technology for local government reorganisation and the strategic development scheme.

The increase in the Housing for Wales cash limit reflects the take-up of end-year flexibility entitlement.

None of the proposed changes will add to the planned total of public expenditure.

HEALTH

Pay Delegation

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide in respect of his plan for pay delegation submitted to the Treasury (a) a description of the staffing each bargaining unit covered by the plan, distinguishing staff in headquarters functions, agencies and agency candidates, and in other identifiable business units and (b) proposals for trade union recognition in each bargaining unit and the negotiating machinery to be put in place in each bargaining unit. [38276]

Mr. Sackville: The Department plans to take pay delegation as a single bargaining unit. Delegation will cover all administrative and professional staff at grade 6 and below. A procedure agreement detailing arrangements for trade union recognition and for the negotiating machinery is under discussion.

Management Costs

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the management costs (a) in cash terms and (b) as a proportion of their total income for each district health authority and each family health services authority in England in (i) 1992–93, (ii) 1993–94 and (iii) 1994–95. [38381]

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was (a) the per capita expenditure of each (i) district health authority and (ii) family health services authority on (b) the management costs for each authority for each year since 1993–94; and what are the planned costs for the current and next financial years. [38108]

Mr. Malone: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State shall publish information on district health authority and family health services authority costs shortly.

North Thames Region

Sir Michael Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the extent to which the private finance initiative has progressed within the North Thames region; and if he will list those projects that have received outline business case approval. [38692]

Mr. Sackville: The private finance initiative has made good progress within the North Thames region. Projects in the North Thames region approved under the private finance initiative are available in the Library. Business cases are not dealt with centrally at the outline stage.

District Health Commissions

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list, by regional health authority and by name, the number of district health commissions currently in operation; what are their management statements; and what is the estimated annual cost of each one. [38979]

Mr. Malone: Health commissions exist only as management arrangements to promote joint working between authorities, and have not separate existence. In all cases, the statutory bodies—district health authorities and family health services authorities—remain the accountable authorities.

Details of the management structures of health authorities are not held centrally. Information on the costs of health authorities and family health services authorities will be published shortly.

Water Charges

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will encourage the water companies to agree universal flat rate charges for the water consumed by each hospital within a region for budgeting and hygiene purposes. [39010]

Mr. Sackville: No. General policy is to encourage the suppliers to relate water charges to costs incurred, including the volume of consumption, without cross-subsidy. This provides an incentive to national health service and other customers to negotiate the best available terms of supply and to ensure economies in use.

Temazepam

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is his latest estimate of the number of people who have had one or more of their limbs amputated as a result of injecting the gel formulation of the drug Temazepam during each of the past five years; [39185]

(2) what is his latest estimate of the number of deaths in each of the past five years which were related to the abuse of the drug Temazepam; what estimate he has made of the percentage of these which involved the gel formulation, and if he will make a statement. [39197]

Mr. Bowis: Because of the covert nature of its misuse, information on the precise extent to which Temazepam is misused and on the precise extent of the physical injury or damage which may result when Temazepam soft gelatin gel-filled capsules are injected is not available centrally.

However, the scientific and medical literature record a number of limb amputations following misuse of the capsules by injection. Other serious health complications reported which can cause lasting physical damage or injury include thromboses, gangrene, ischaemia, cellulitis, tissue necrosis and abscesses.

The number of deaths certified as due to abuse of Temazepan—ICDs[1] 304.1, 304.7, 304.8, 305.4, 305.9—alone or with other drugs for the years 1989–1993 in England and Wales is

1990: 12
1991: 13
1992: 15
1993: 15

The available data do not differentiate between the different formulations of Temazepam that may be available in any one year.

My right hon. friend the Secretary of State for Health announced on 17 October a ban on general practitioners prescribing Temazepam capsules under the national health service from 1 January 1996. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department announced on 12 September increased controls on all formulations of Temazepam under the Misuse of Drugs Regulations 1985.

Needles (Safe Disposal)

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provision exists for the safe disposal of needles by diabetics. [39065]

Mr. Sackville: People with diabetes who self-administer insulin by injection within their own homes may be prescribed needle clipping devices. When full, the device should be appropriately sealed and left with the used syringes at an agreed collection point.

Departmental Appointments South Yorkshire

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the public appointments for which his Department is responsible in the county of South Yorkshire, indicating in each case the duration of the appointment, the date when a new appointment is due, and the salary. [39448]

Mr. Sackville: The public appointments in South Yorkshire for which the Department is responsible, and the dates on which new appointments are due and the rates of remuneration will be placed in the Library. The appointments are made for periods of up to four years.

Solihull Hospital

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will intervene to ensure that Solihull hospital continues as an independent hospital. [39620]

Mr. Malone: The provision of health services for the residents of Solihull and the decision on how and where these are provided are matters for Solihull health authority, and I refer my hon. Friend to the adjournment debate on 25 October, Official Report, columns 991–98.

Dental Students

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, how many British dental students have been accepted by each dental school in the United Kingdom for each year since 1985. [38115.]

Mr. Malone: The information is shown in the table.

Blood

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many date expired units of donated blood were destroyed at the end of August 1993, 1994 and 1995. [38098]

Mr. Sackville: Most National Blood Service blood centres operate a rolling programme of destruction of units of blood which have become date expired, rather than waiting until the end of the calendar month. The following figures therefore relate to the number of date expired units of donated blood destroyed throughout the month of August in the years in question: 1993—2724 units, 1994—2230 units, 1995—2668 units; this represented 1.35, 1.15, and 1.18 per cent. respectively of total units of blood collected in the previous month in each case.

Oral Cancer

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he will take to improve early detection of mouth cancer. [38102]

Mr. Sackville: The chief dental officer is chairman of the National Advisory Group on Screening for Oral Cancer, a group recently formed to co-ordinate work in the detection and prevention of oral cancers. This will enable dentists to be provided with information needed to examine the oral health of their patients more effectively.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients with mouth cancer were first seen by their dentist in each of the past 10 years prior to referral to hospital for treatment. [38103]

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the effect of the abolition of free dental check-ups on the incidence of mouth cancer patients who are referred to hospital only when the oral cancers are already large. [38104]

Mr. Sackville: Regular dental inspections offer ideal opportunities for dentists to check for oral cancer as a routine part of an oral examination. The latest information shows that the number of examinations is at approximately the same level as it was before the introduction of charges for examinations. Some 25 per cent. of adult courses of national health service treatment get full or partial relief from charges. All children are treated free of charge.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will institute a survey of the evidence regarding the relationship between the availability of free dental check-ups and the early detection of mouth cancer. [38105]

Mr. Sackville: We have no plans to do so.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department is taking to improve public education about the importance of early diagnosis and treatment of mouth cancer. [38106]

Mr. Sackville: Oral cancer can result from smoking and excessive consumption of alcohol. Both areas are highlighted in general health education initiatives and health education. Dentists and doctors advise patients of the dangers of tobacco and alcohol.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what support his Department has provided for oral cancer work. [38109]

Mr. Sackville: Diagnosis of oral cancer is provided through the general and community dental services and treatment through the hospital dental service. The Department has commissioned research into oral health education.

Dental Register

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many new registrations on the dental register have been made for each year since 1985. [38111]

Mr. Malone: The total number added by new registrations to the dental register from 1985 is in the table.

Registered for	Total
1985	1,103
1986	1,036
1987	1,083
1988	1,038
1989	1,047
1990	1,206
1991	1,075
1992	1,141
1993	1,254
1994	571

The drop in the numbers added to the register in 1994 is due to the effect of the extension in 1990 of the British dental undergraduate course from four years, one term to five year.

Queen Charlotte's Hospital

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received about services for women with post-natal depression at Queen Charlotte's hospital, London; and if he will make a statement. [38114]

Mr. Malone: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received one such letter. The post-natal depression clinic at Queen Charlotte's hospital provides a valuable consultant-led service.

Nursing Homes

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people pay the cost of their nursing home care (a) in full and (b) in part; and how many have their costs entirely met through (i) income support or (ii) their local authority. [40187]

Mr. Bowis: Figures published by Laing and Buisson in "Care of Elderly People: Market Survey 1995" suggest that in February 1994 an estimated 41,000 elderly or physically handicapped people in nursing homes in Great Britain were "self-payers".

The total number of nursing home residents with preserved rights to the higher levels of income support was 85,000, in November 1994, of whom around 1,000 were wholly dependent on income support.

At 31 March 1994, local authorities in England were supporting, in whole or in part, a total of 25,200 adults in nursing homes. Some residents placed in nursing homes through arrangements made by local authorities will also receive income support. Almost all residents placed by local authorities will make some contribution towards the costs from their income such as pensions. Some residents of nursing homes have been placed there and paid for by local health authorities.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the cost of (a) doubling and (b) trebling the present £8,000 capital disregard for nursing home fees. [40191]

Mr. Bowis: It would depend on the total capital disregard threshold and the rate of tariff income between that and the upper figure.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, what is his estiamte of the number of people who have had to sell their homes to fund the cost of their long term stay in (a) residential and (b) nursing homes in each of the last five years. [40179]

Mr. Bowis: No such estimate has been made.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, what is the average length of time a person spends in full-time nursing care. [40183]

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

Unregistered Childrens Homes

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, if he will make a statement on the numbers of proprietors of unregistered children's homes, based on social services inspectorate study published in August who had convictions relating to (a) fraud, (b) sexual abuse and (c) physical abuse. [38188]

Mr. Bowis [holding answer 24 October 1995]: We received reports of two proprietors having convictions for fraud and one having convictions relating to sexual abuse. The homes are now closed.

Nuclear Industry (Health of Workers)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what follow-up monitoring programmes exist in respect of the health of workers who have retired from employment in the nuclear industry. [39257]

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

The nuclear industry, including the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, British Nuclear Fuels plc and Nuclear Electric, carry out or commission epidemiological studies of their current and former, including retired, employees. Through these programmes, data are assembled on the mortality record of the current and past workforce. Detailed mortality studies using this data undertaken by independent researchers have been published. These compare overall mortality, and mortality from individual diseases, between radiation workers, including those who have left the industry, and both non-radiation workers and the general public.

Employers in the nuclear industry also contribute data to the National Registry for Radiation Workers operated by the National Radiological Protection Board. A first analysis of the data held on the NRRW covering more than 95,000 nuclear industry employees and former employees in the UK has been published. This showed that deaths from all causes amongst these employees and former employees were 85 per cent. of those expected from national statistics for the general population, while deaths from all cancers were 86 per cent. of those expected. A second analysis is expected to be carried out in the near future. In addition, data on the mortality record of workers in the UK nuclear industry have been included in a study published by the International Agency for Research into Cancer which studies the health of nuclear industry workers in a number of countries.

TREASURY

Hourly Average Earnings

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will detail full-time and part-time hourly average earnings, inclusive and exclusive of overtime, and annual percentage increases in earnings, inclusive and exclusive of overtime, for (a) all workers formerly covered by wages councils, (b) workers formerly covered by the clothing manufacture, licensed residential and licensed restaurant, licensed non-residential, hairdressing, retail food wage councils allied trades and retail trades non-food and (c) all worker using the matched samples from the 1994 and 1995 new earnings surveys. [37608]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 26 October 1995]: The new earnings survey records for 1995 are due to be combined with the database of employees formerly covered by wages councils within the next two months. Once that has been done, we shall know whether the results are statistically reliable.

I shall write to the hon. Member when this has been done.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of new jobs, created in the last year, have been taken by (a) women, (b) people with disabilities and (c) ethnic minorities. [39377]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 26 October 1995]: The available information from the labour force survey shows that between spring—March to May—1994 and spring 1995 the number of people of working age in employment in Great Britain rose by 249,000. Over the same period, the number of women in employment rose by 75,000, and the number of people in employment from ethnic minorities increased by 38,000.

The latest available information on people whose work is affected by long-term health problems or disability, shows that between winter—December to February—1993–94 and winter 1994–95, the number in employment fell by 41,000.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of new jobs, created in the last year, have been taken by people aged (a) between 16 to 19 years, (b) 19 to 25 years, (c) between 25 to 30 years, (d) over 30 years and (e) over 40 years. [39378]

Mrs. Knight [holding answer 26 October 1995]: The available information from the labour force survey is shown in the table following.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of new jobs have been taken, in the last year, by people with (a) national vocational qualifications, (b) no qualifications, (c) first degrees and (d) other professional qualifications. [39375]

Mrs. Knight [holding answer 26 October 1995]: The available information from the labour force survey is shown in the table following.

There was a net increase of 267,000 between spring 1994 and spring 1995 in the number of people in employment of working age in Great Britain who said they had a national vocational qualification.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of unemployed (a) men and (b) women have (i) no qualifications, (ii) a vocational qualification, (iii) five GCSE's or equivalent, (iv) two A-levels and (v) a degree. [39775]

Mrs. Knight [holding answer 26 October 1995]: The available information from the labour force survey is shown in the table following.

Treasury Industry Group

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people are employed with the Treasury's industry group in Scotland on (a) a full-time basis and (b) a part-time basis. [39662]

Mrs. Angela Knight: There is no group of this name within the Treasury.

Tax Inspectors (Guidelines)

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the review of the guidelines for tax inspectors in respect of section 313 of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988. [37289]

Mr. Jack: I understand that representations have been made to the Inland Revenue about the application of section 313 of the Act to situations where certain undertakings are given by employees as part of a financial settlement upon termination of their employment. The Revenue are discussing these with the representative bodies concerned.

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the costs in a full year of increasing the threshold for capital gains tax by (a) £1,000, (b) £2,000, (c) £3,000, (d) £4,000 and (e) £6,000; and how many people would be taken out of capital gains tax as a result of each of these measures. [39090]

Mr. Jack: The estimated full-year costs of increasing the indexed capital gains tax threshold by the specified amounts, and the associated reductions in taxpayer numbers, are given in the following table:

Raise CGT threshold by	Full year cost (1996–97) £ million	Full year cost (medium term) £ million
£1,000	10	20
£2,000	20	40
£3,000	30	60
£4,000	50	80
£6,000	70	110

Raise CGT threshold by	Number of taxpayers taken out of tax
£1,000	around 10,000
£2,000	around 20,000
£3,000	25,000–30,000
£4,000	30,000–40,000
£6,000	40,000–50,000

The estimates given take account of the likely effect of changes on the volume of disposals in a full year, caused by changes in taxpayer behaviour.

Mr. Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the likely revenue consequences in a full year due to (a) straightforward revenue loss and (b) behavioural effects of the introduction of a maximum rate of capital gains tax of 25 per cent. [39155]

Mr. Jack: The full year costs of introducing a maximum rate of capital gains tax of 25 per cent. are shown in the table. Estimates are given before and after taking into account the likely effect of changes on the volume of disposals in a full year, caused by changes in taxpayers' behaviour.

Introducing a maximum CGT rate of 25 per cent.	Full year cost (1996–97) £ million	Full year cost (medium term) £ million
Without behavioural effects	450	600
With behavioural effects	300	450

The figures exclude gains made by companies which are charged to corporation tax.

Corporation Tax

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate for repayments of corporation tax for the year 1995–96. [39094]

Mr. Jack: Corporation tax repayments in 1995–96 are expected to be about £2.35 billion.

Mortgage Interest Tax

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he consulted the Secretary of State for Social Security on the review of tax on mortgage interest. [38816]

Mr. Jack: I consult my right hon. Friend on all matters in which he has an interest.

Nationalised Industries

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the net effect on public expenditure of the nationalised industries in (a) 1978–79 and (b) 1994–95. [39343]

Mr. Waldegrave: In 1979, the nationalised industries' net cost, in terms of public expenditure, measured by their total external financing requirement, was £2.3 billion. The estimated outturn for their total EFR in 1994–95 was £2.9 billion.

EDS

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 16 October, Official Report, column 7, when he expects to have the information requested on savings to the Inland Revenue from its contract with EDS; and if he will publish it when it is available. [39796]

Mr. Jack: It is expected that updated estimates of savings will be available within the next two months when publication will be considered in association with other information about the Inland Revenue's contract with EDS.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Agencies

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many times in each month of the current year he has met personally the heads of the agencies which report to him to discuss the work of those agencies. [39850]

Mr. Hanley: The FCO has two executive agencies, Wilton Park and the Natural Resources Institute. The Foreign Secretary has not met personally with the chairman of either in the current year.

French Nuclear Tests

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice his Department has given the inhabitants of the Pitcairn Islands in respect of the series of French nuclear tests; and if he will make a statement. [39480]

Mr. David Davis: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on 16 October 1995, Official Report, column 18.

Public Appointments, South Yorkshire

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the public appointments for which his Department is responsible in the county of South Yorkshire, indicating in each case the duration of the appointment, the date when a new appointment is due, and the salary. [39447]

Mr. Hanley: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the ODA are not responsible for making any public appointments in the county of South Yorkshire.

Public Bodies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all the non-departmental public bodies to which his Department makes appointments in the county of South Yorkshire, indicating the total annual budget and the number of appointments made or renewed for each body in each of the last four years. [39490]

Mr. Hanley: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the ODA are not responsible for making any appointments to non-departmental public bodies in the county of South Yorkshire.

Former Yugoslavia

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, if he will estimate (a) how many residents of the former Yugoslavia became refugees between January and between January and May, (b) how many refugees resulted from the Croatian military offensive in Krajina in May and (c) how many refugees have been created since 31 August. [39995]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The only figures available from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees estimate that approximately 3,300 refugees went from northern Bosnia to Croatia between January and April.

The UNCHR estimates that approximately 11,000 refugees moved from sector west into northern Bosnia following the Croatian military offensive in May.

In August, approximately 200,000 Croatian Serbs fled from sectors north and south and some 25,000 Bosnian Muslims left the Bihac pocket for Croatia.

Since 31 August, approximately 127,000 Serbs have been displaced within north-west Bosnia; more than 20,000 Croat and Muslim minorities have been expelled from Banja Luka.

Sudan

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made on monitoring human rights conditions in the Sudan. [38107]

Mr. Hanley: The Sudanese Government are withholding permission for the UN special rapporteur and for Amnesty International to enter Sudan. Some other human rights groups have been given access. Despite some recent improvements in northern Sudan, the overall human rights situation remains grave.

Burma

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, what representations he has received about human rights abuses in Burma. [38112]

Mr. Hanley: We have received representations about human rights abuses in Burma from a wide variety of sources including church groups, non-governmental organisations and members of the public.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the EU partners concerning the use of chemical weapons against the Karen people in Myanmar. [38113]

Mr. Hanley: We discuss the plight of Burma's ethnic groups, including the Karen, and the human rights situation in Burma in our regular contacts with our EU partners. There have not, however, been any discussions specifically about the alleged use of chemical weapons against the Karen with our European Union partners.

The Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment has analysed samples of equipment allegedly used to transport bacteria against the Karen. No conclusive evidence was found. We deplore any use of bacteriological and chemical weapons and are willing to consider carefully any new evidence of their use in Burma.

Antarctic Treaty

Mr. Corbyn : To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what discussions have been held with other signatory states to the Antarctic treaty regarding the siting of the secretariat; and if he will make a statement; [39877]

(2) what representations have been received from fellow signatories to the Antarctic treaty concerning the siting of the proposed secretariat: and if he will make a statement. [39881]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: I refer the hon. Member to the answers given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Grantham (Mr. Hogg) on 24 April 1995, Official Report, column 378.

The question of the location of the Antarctic treaty secretariat is raised periodically as part of our regular bilateral meetings with other Antarctic treaty parties.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps have been taken by his Department to control tourist access to Antarctica since the passage of the Antarctica Act 1994; and if he will make a statement. [39883]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We have continued to monitor the activities of all British expeditions, including tourist cruises, as required under article VII(5) of the Antarctic treaty.

Also, the necessary steps have been taken to bring into force from 1 November the provisions of the Antarctic Act 1994, with the exception of sections 3 to 7. We have made the Antarctic Regulations 1995, which will also come into force on 1 November. These regulations provide details for the issue of permits under the Act.

Intergovernmental Conference

Mr. Edward Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will report on the 25 to 26 September and 3 October meetings of the study group preparing for the intergovernmental conference. [40099]

Mr. David Davis: The eighth and ninth meetings of the study group took place on 25 to 26 September in Brussels and on 3 October in Luxembourg. I attended both meetings as the Foreign Secretary's representative, though I was delayed by other Government business on 25 September and was represented for part of the meeting by the head of European union department, Internal.

The 25 to 26 Septenber meeting covered topics 4 and 5 of the interim report, which deal with European citizenship and justice and home affairs.

On citizenship, we repeated our concerns that the concept was associated in the public mind with statehood, and therefore created anxiety about the long-term evolution of the EU. Such concerns, and those related to potential duties of citizenship, did not emerge clearly enough from the chairman's interim report. We also warned against the temptation to develop citizens' rights and non-discrimination clauses in the EU treaty in a way that duplicated rights already protected in national law. We maintained our opposition to EC accession to the European convention on human rights and to the suggestion of a bill of rights in the EU treaty.

The study group has not yet received the study which it commissioned from the Council secretariat into how the treaty might be simplified without altering its substance. The representatives from the European Parliament, however, circulated a study which the Parliament had commissioned separately, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

On justice and home affairs questions, I said that the interim report was unbalanced in its failure to acknowledge what had been achieved so far, in a very short time, in the third pillar. Britain was determined to improve the operation of the pillar, but did not believe that this would be achieved by compromising its essentially intergovernmental character.

The 3 October meeting was concerned with the common foreign and security policy and with defence questions.

There was some discussion of creating a CFSP Secretary-General to give impetus to the preparation and implementation of policy and to help with the growing external representational burden. I said that it was essential that any such figure was the servant of the presidency and of member states. I agreed, however, that CFSP needed a strengthened capacity for policy formulation and planning.

On decision-making, I continued to insist on the retention of consensus in CFSP as the basic rule. Unanimous decisions gave strength to the EU, as they engaged all member states. If the CFSP ceased to be a common policy and became a majority one, it would be less effective. Would dissenters be free to pursue an independent policy? How could they be prevented from doing so?

On defence questions, I said that the interim report was confused, and needed to be substantially revised. NATO was the essential basis of Europe's defence, and strengthening of the Western European Union/NATO relationship should be the first priority. The WEU/EU relationship was a subsidiary question. An essential element of the British approach was that the WEU should not be made subordinate to the EU, not least because not all member states were bound by article 5 of the WEU treaty.

It would be wrong for the latter to be involved in decision-making on the so-called Petersberg tasks—peacekeeping, humanitarian missions and crisis management. Some of these would carry a risk of escalation in which the absence of guarantees of mutual assistance between participating states would be a severe disadvantage. In addition only those bound by WEU's article V could judge whether secondary tasks could be undertaken without jeopardising their ability to fulfil their mutual defence commitments.

Iraq

Mr. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what occasions the United Kingdom supplied (a) cultures and (b) chemical agents for the Iraqi biological weapons programmes between 1974 and 1990. [40096]

Mr. David Davis: Comprehensive information on relevant exports to Iraq is not available because many items were not subject to export licence procedures. Lists of export licences issued for Iraq between the years 1987 and 1990 were supplied to the Select Committee on Trade and Industry in November 1991.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will seek further information from the United Nations special commission on Iraq on the involvement of British companies in Iraq's (a) chemical, (b) nuclear and (c) biological warfare programmes. [40097]

Mr. David Davis: We are in regular communication with UNSCOM and follow up any evidence that British companies have supplied materials relevant to Iraqi programmes to acquire weapons of mass destruction.

TRANSPORT

Oil (Dumping at Sea)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many incidents of tankers dumping oil at sea have been recorded by his Department in the last five years; and how many incidents have resulted in the prosecution of the companies owning the tankers. [39338]

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Coastguard Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from C. J. Harris to Mr. Elliot Morley, dated 27 October 1995:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question as the question deals with an operational matter, for which I have responsibility as Chief Executive.

The Coastguard Agency does not record incidents of illegal discharge by vessel type. However, details of significant incidents in which the Agency's Marine Pollution Control Unit has been directly involved show that between 1990 and 1994 (53 incidents) there were 37 incidents involving tankers. Most of these related to collisions, groundings, breakdowns and machinery malfunctions, not all of which involved spilled oil. One case was successfully prosecuted for a MARPOL offence, three were referred to Flag states (outcome awaited) and two were referred for Port State Control Inspections and subsequently cleared.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which legislation regulates the dumping of oil at sea by tankers carrying either bilge oil or crude oil. [39336]

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Marine Safety Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from R. M. Bradley to Mr. Elliot Morley dated 27 October 1995:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your Question about regulations on the dumping of bilge oil or crude oil from tankers.

The International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution from Ships 1973 Annex I, (Regulations for the Prevention of Pollution by Oil), as amended by the Protocol of 1978 (MARPOL 73/78 Annex 1) to that Convention applies.

The Merchant Shipping (Prevention of Oil Pollution) Regulations 1983, as subsequently amended, give effect to this Convention and Protocol to United Kingdom (UK) ships, wherever they may be, and to other ships in UK waters.

Dock Labour Force

Mr. Parry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much was paid in 1989 to reduce the dock labour force nationally; and if he will make a statement. [38535]

Mr. Norris [holding answer 24 October 1995]: I have been asked to reply.

Figures for payment made under employment protection legislation in 1989 are not readily available. Payments by Government and port employers in respect of redundancies of registered dock workers under the Dock Work (Compensation Payments Scheme) Regulations 1989 in the financial year 1989–90 totalled £150,077,500 nationally.

Aircraft Procedure Trials

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the proposed reduced departure wake vortex separation trials at Heathrow airport have been the subject of a full safety audit by the Safety Regulation Group's air traffic services standards department; and if he will make a statement. [39278]

Mr. Norris [holding answer 24 October 1995]: The proposed trial is currently in the final stages of the Safety Regulation Group's approval process.

The trial procedures have been the subject of a full audit by the air traffic services standards and the flight operations departments of SRG. A full safety assessment has been carried out by the CAA's national air traffic services.

Mr. Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the reduced final approach separation trial conducted at Heathrow airport earlier this year had been the subject of a full safety audit by the Civil Aviation Authority Safety Regulation Group's air traffic services standards department; if all the pilots involved in the trial were aware of their participation; and what representations he has received from the airlines involved in respect of the trial. [39274]

Mr. Norris [holding answer 24 October 1995]: The procedures associated with this initial trial were evaluated by the air traffic services standards department of the Civil Aviation Authority's Safety Regulation Group.

All the pilots involved were fully aware of their participation.

My Department has received no representations from the airlines involved.

Passenger Ships (Evacuation)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which countries have registered ships carrying passengers whose vessels do not meet the international provisions of evacuation of all personnel; and if he will make a statement. [38622]

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Marine Safety Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from R. M. Bradley to Mr. Martin Redmond, 27 October 1995:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your Question about the international provisions for evacuation of all personnel from ships carrying passengers.

Provisions for the evacuation of ships are contained in the International Convention for the Safety of Life at Sea, 1974 (SOLAS 1974), to which 128 states are signatory. The combined fleets of these contracting states constitute approximately 98% of the gross tonnage of the world's merchant fleet. Ships registered in those signatory states must comply with the provisions of the Convention. Ships registered in other states will be given no more favourable treatment by states which are party to the Convention.

Driving Tests

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the Driving Standards Agency to clear the back log of driving test applications on the agency's credit-card booking line; and if he will make a statement. [39075]

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Driving Standards Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from B. L. Herdan to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 27 October 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to the question you raised about the Agency's Credit Card telephone booking lines and backlogs of driving test applications.

It is recognised that there are currently short-term problems with telephones, and also that there are longer waiting times for tests than might be desired. With respect to the credit card telephone booking service, DSA is obviously wanting to ensure that candidates are aware of the alternative methods for booking a test by Credit Card. Candidates who wish to book by credit card can do so in three ways. They can telephone the credit card line, post their applications quoting their credit card details or fax their application to the appropriate DSA Booking Office. The addresses and Credit Card telephone numbers are included on Driving test application forms obtainable from Driving Test Centres.

Following the outcome of a Market Test the Agency is in the process of restructuring its Driving Test Booking service which has caused some temporary disruption but which in the longer term will yield a better service at lower cost. Increased use has been made of the popular Credit Card booking facility—up to 60% of business in some Booking Offices is now by telephone. Additional Credit Card facilities are being made available nationally by introducing more telephone lines, Credit Card processing machines and the recruitment of extra staff. Telephone calls to the Agency are dealt with on a queuing system and new technology systems have been procured for automated call distribution within booking offices.

With the increased resources the Agency is devoting to the Credit Card facility, customers should receive a greatly improved service within the next 3–6 months.

With regard to test waiting times, the service standard is a 6 weeks average across the country, but this is not currently being achieved—the current average is just over 7 weeks. This is due to temporary staff shortages and a temporary rise in demand for driving tests by those seeking to pass the test before the introduction of the new theory test next July. This situation can be expected to pertain until July 1996 although the backlog will be reduced with recruitment of extra driving examiners which is currently in hand.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many and what percentage of people taking driving test pass after the (a) first, (b) second, (c) third, (d) fourth, (e) fifth, (f) sixth and (g) seventh and subsequent attempts. [39832]

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Driving Standards Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from B. L. Herdan to Mr. Gordon Prentice, dated 27 October 1995:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your Question about the numbers of attempts people take to pass their driving test. We do not routinely collect this information as it does not directly affect the operation of the Agency.

For consistency of testing, and in fairness to the candidate, it is preferable if the examiner is not made aware of the number of previous attempts a candidate has made at a test. The overall pass rate on driving tests in the last two financial years was:

As part of our third Customer Survey, completed in March this year—the results of which were published in July, we asked a random sample of all our customers whether it was their first test or a repeat attempt. Of 1,187 people in the sample who had recently taken their driving test, 837 (71%) had just passed and of these passes, 252 (30%) were at the first attempt, 280 (33%) at the second, 158 (19%) at the third, 86 (10%) at the fourth, 24 (3%) at the fifth and 35 (4%) were at their sixth or subsequent attempt.

Heathrow (US Airline Access)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the outcome of the recent talks in Washington aimed at clarifying US airline access to Heathrow. [39759]

Mr. Norris: A very limited and balanced deal on new transatlantic services at Heathrow and/or Gatwick was one of the items on the agenda for discussion. Despite a UK offer of four new opportunities for passenger flights to London, two at Heathrow and two at Gatwick, the US broke off negotiations on 20 October. We stand ready to resume them as soon as the US Government wish to do so.

Ministerial Information System

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what system his Department has corresponding to MINIS; and what arrangements are made for hon. Members to access it. [39617]

Mr. Norris: My Department is pursuing the 20 per cent. efficiency gains plan announced by the then Secretary of State to the House on 9 May 1994, Official Report, column 58. My Department is currently working to develop a new resource planning and management system consistent with that envisaged in the efficiency unit report: "Resource Management Systems" and meeting the plans in the White Paper: "Better Accounting for Taxpayers Money" (Cm 1929).

My Department will continue to place an annual transport report before Parliament.

Alternative Fuels

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is he doing to promote alternatives to petrol-driven vehicles. [39768]

Mr. Norris: The Government are currently considering the role that alternative fuels might play in minimising road transport emissions. To that end, they are continuing to sponsor studies, including the £1.2 million collaborative field trials of alternative fuels announced last year. Results should be available in late 1996.

Keep Right Sign

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement of progress on implementing the new regulation drafted by the Automobile Association on the use of the keep right sign. [39622]

Mr. Norris: We are preparing updated regulations on the signing of temporary obstructions, which will take account of the AA's proposal, and we expect to publish a draft statutory instrument for public consultation soon.

Heavy Goods Vehicle Drivers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to reduce the number of accidents caused by tiredness in drivers of heavy goods vehicles. [39772]

Mr. Norris: We have recently issued new research-based advice to drivers of all vehicles on how best to avoid the dangers of driver fatigue. We are continuing to enforce the regulations which limit driving time of HGV drivers and set minimum requirements for breaks and rest periods.

Crossrail

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy towards the new crossrail project in London. [39794]

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friend the Member for Peterborough (Dr. Mawhinney) asked for a study on several aspects of the crossrail project, including its structure and ownership under the railway privatisation arrangements, central London employment forecasts, and the advantages and disadvantages of possible small-scale alternatives to it. Ministers will be considering the results of the study when it has been completed.

Fatal Crash, Settle

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the mechanical digger involved in the fatal road crash with a coach at Settle, North Yorkshire, on 23 August carried a current vehicle excise licence enabling it to be driven on public highways; and if he will make a statement. [39456]

Mr. Norris: The vehicle was appropriately licensed.

Public Bodies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the public appointments for which his Department is responsible in the county of South Yorkshire, indicating in each case the duration of the appointment, the date when a new appointment is due, and the salary. [39471]

Mr. Norris: The answers are as follows.

(1) My right hon. friend is responsible for the appointment of the north-eastern traffic commissioner and deputy traffic commissioners. The north-eastern traffic area includes the county of South Yorkshire. The present traffic commissioner was appointed in 1992, and a new appointment will be due in 2007 when the present incumbent retires. The current standard salary of a traffic commissioner is £43,836 per annum.

(2) Three deputy traffic commissioners have been appointed to assist the north-eastern traffic commissioner. The appointments are for a fixed term of three years and are due for review in November 1996, December 1996 and April 1997 respectively. Deputy traffic commissioners are paid a daily rate of £186.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by grade the numbers of staff and their cost for (a) the financial year 1994–95 and (b) the estimated figures for the financial year 1995–96, for each executive agency for which he is responsible. [39497]

Mr. Norris: Estimated outturn for 1994–95 and plans for 1995–96 for civil service manpower and pay bill are set out in my Department's annual report (Cm 2806), copies of which are in the Libraries of the House. A breakdown by grade and individual agency could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all the non-departmental public bodies to which his Department makes appointments in the county of South Yorkshire, with the total annual budget for each body and the number of appointments made or renewed for each body in each of the last four years. [39436]

Mr. Norris: The answers are as follows:

(1) My right hon. friend is responsible for the appointment of the north-eastern traffic commissioner and his deputies whose functions as tribunals classify them as non-departmental public bodies. The north-eastern traffic area includes the county of South Yorkshire. Traffic commissioners do not have a budget but the annual administrative budget for the office which supports the north-eastern traffic commissioner and his deputies in their work is £1.18 million.

(2) Four appointments have been made within the last four years. The present north-eastern traffic commissioner was appointed in October 1992, and deputy traffic commissioners were appointed in January 1994, April 1994 and October 1995.

(3) My right hon. Friend is also responsible for the appointment of the chairman of the north-east rail users consultative committee, after consultation with the rail regulator.

(4) The RUCCs were set up under the Railways Act 1993. They are sponsored by the rail regulator. Budgeting for the RUCCs is managed centrally, the total provision for 1994–95 was £1.119 million. The Secretary of State has appointed one chairman to the NERUCC, in 1995.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many times in each month of the current year he has met personally the heads of the agencies which report to him to discuss the work of those agencies. [39864]

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friend has met the chief executive of the Highways Agency on 11 occasions to discuss matters relating to the work of the agency and the chief executive has attended departmental meetings on five occasions when my right hon. Friend has been present. He has discussed the work of the Transport Research Laboratory with its chief executive on two occasions (July and September); and on one occasions he has discussed with the relevant chief executive the work of the Driving Standards Agency (July), the Marine Safety Agency (July), the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency (September) and the Coastguard Agency (September). To date, he has not discussed the work of the vehicle inspectorate or the Vehicle Certification Agency with their chief executives.

Vehicle Pollution Levels

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which agencies are charged with controlling and enforcing vehicle pollution levels; and what assistance they receive from his Department. [39904]

Mr. Norris: The Department's Vehicle Certification Agency is responsible for ensuring that new motor vehicle types conform with pre-registration type approval requirements, which include the internationally agreed standards relating to emissions.

After a vehicle has entered into service, the Department's Vehicle Inspectorate Executive Agency enforces emissions standards both at annual roadworthiness tests and at the roadside. The agency's own personnel carry out annual tests on heavy vehicles and also carry out compliance checks on all types of vehicle at the roadside. Annual emissions checks on light vehicles are carried out under the MOT testing scheme, which is supervised by the agency.

The agencies' approval and testing activities are financed by fees paid by applicants although a public expenditure survey allocation is made to them each year to finance their enforcement activities.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many heavy goods vehicles were tested on emission standards as a percentage of the total in 1994; and how many of them were (a) prohibited and (b) prosecuted. [39902]

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Vehicle Inspectorate Executive Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ron Oliver to Mr. Graham Allen, dated 27 October 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question concerning emission standards testing of heavy goods vehicles during 1994.

Every heavy goods vehicle (HGV) is tested for emission standards at annual test. In the financial year 1994/95, the Vehicle Inspectorate tested 447,660 HGVs. Of those that failed, 1.6% failed because of excess emissions. In the same period, the Inspectorate inspected 128,116 vehicles at the roadside. All were examined at least visually for excess emissions. 16,000 were put through an instrumented check. The roadside checks resulted in the issue of 450 prohibitions for excess emissions and one prosecution.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what course of action his Department advises motorists to take if they see gross emissions from other vehicles and wish to report it in order that authorities can take appropriate action. [39895]

Mr. Norris: Members of the public are encouraged to report excessively smoky heavy goods vehicles and public service vehicles to the Vehicle Inspectorate. The procedure for doing so is explained in detail in a leaflet we published originally in August 1993 and re-launched in March this year. I have placed copies of the up-to-date leaflet in the Library.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given to allowing local authorities to stop vehicles in order to carry out emissions tests. [40059]

Mr. Norris: There are no plans to change the law which only permits police officers to stop vehicles. Enabling regulations could, however, be made under the provisions of section 87 of the Environment Act 1995 to permit local authorities, with police support, to carry out emissions checks on vehicles using the road. We are currently consulting with interested parties on how this might be done in practice.

Buses

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secrtary of State for Transport what is the current trend in ownership for United Kingdom bus services. [40168]

Mr. Norris: Most bus services are now run by operators in the private sector. The trend is towards larger groupings although the number of operators providing local services continues to increase year on year.

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce the establishment of a statutory regulator for the deregulated bus industry in the United Kingdom. [40084]

Mr. Norris: I have no plans to establish a regulator for the bus industry.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he is proposing to counter the problems caused by conflicts between bus companies. [39769]

Mr. Norris: The Office of Fair Trading has powers to deal with anti-competitive behaviour between bus companies, and traffic commissioners can act where operators intentionally interfere with the services of other operators or operate services in a manner dangerous to the public.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of buses are more than 12-years-old; and what was the figure in 1986. [40166]

Mr. Norris: Of those public service vehicles in the bus taxation class having nine or more seats, 36 per cent. were 12-years-old or more at the end of 1994. The corresponding figure at the end of 1986 was 19 per cent.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to set up a regulator for the bus industry. [40057]

Mr. Norris: I have no plans to establish a regulator for the bus industry.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of bus services are controlled by the five largest bus companies in the United Kingdom. [40167]

Mr. Norris: Owing to the complexity of the structure of the bus and coach industry it is difficult to give an exact figure. However it is estimated that between 40 and 45 per cent. of local bus mileage is run on services controlled by the five largest bus companies in the UK.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the change in percentage terms (a) in the number of passengers carried and (b) in the revenue generated in real terms since bus deregulation to date. [40029]

Mr. Norris: Bus deregulation in Great Britain only affected bus operations outside of London. Figures obtained from annual surveys of public service operators show that passenger journeys on local bus services in Great Britain excluding London declined by 22 per cent. between financial years 1986–87 and 1994–95. Comparable passenger receipts on local bus services, which include concessionary fare reimbursement for groups such as disabled people, the elderly and children, declined by 7 per cent. in real terms over the same period.

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what steps he intends to take in response to the recent Office of Fair Trading report in respect of the problems of anti-competitive behaviour in the deregulated bus industry; [40088]

(2) what is his response to the recent Monopolies and Mergers Commission report into bus deregulation. [40083]

Mr. Norris: The general recommendations of the recent MMC report are being considered by the bus working group that I set up earlier this year.

SCOTLAND

Sheltered Housing

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will consider giving statutory effect to the NHBC (Scotland) code of practice for sheltered housing. [37930]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: My right hon. Friend welcomed the introduction by the National House Building Council (Scotland) of the code on a voluntary basis in 1991. We are pleased to see the building industry regulate itself and give protection to its customers, and we do not believe action by the Government to regulate such activity is required at present.

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what control he at present exercises over companies owning sheltered housing in Scotland which (a) fail to hold meetings with residents, (b) fail to publish accounts justifying their service charges and (c) appoint wardens with access to residents' property without consultation. [37928]

Mr. Robertson: My right hon. Friend has no powers over how sheltered housing companies manage the properties they own. However, problems encountered within some sheltered housing developments are being considered by the Scottish Law Commission in the context of its work on reviewing property law in Scotland. The need for legislation will be considered in the light of the commission's reports and recommendations.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many sites of special scientific interest in Scotland have been denotified since 1981 on the grounds of decline in their scientific interest. [38356]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: Information on the number of sites of special scientific interest which have been denotified is published in the annual reports of Scottish Natural Heritage, and the former Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland and Nature Conservancy Council, copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Scottish Nuclear Ltd.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will instruct the corporate communications department of Scottish Nuclear Ltd. to refrain from using company resources to promote the case for privatisation. [38752]

Mr. Kynoch: The Government have announced their intention to privatise the advanced gas-cooled reactor and the pressurised water reactors power stations currently owned by SNL and Nuclear Electric.

Scottish Nuclear is a limited company governed by the Companies Acts and bound by its memorandum and articles of association. The directors of the company are obliged by law to act in the best interests of Scottish Nuclear and it is for them to decide the company's corporate communications policy.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the transfer of responsibility for nuclear safety of Scottish Nuclear from Mr. Richard Killick to Mr. John McKeown between 30 August and 7 September; and what assessment he has made of what transition period is sufficient for the transfer of responsibility for safety at nuclear power stations. [38750]

Mr. Kynoch: Staff changes within Scottish Nuclear below board level are a matter for that company's management. However I can confirm that Dr. McKeown was the director of safety at Scottish Nuclear prior to Mr. Killick's appointment and has long experience of nuclear safety issues. Scottish Nuclear has an excellent safety record.

Anti-social Neighbours

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to introduce legislation to penalise anti-social neighbours who are (a) public sector tenants, (b) private sector tenants and (c) owner-occupiers; and if he will make a statement. [29216]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: My right hon. Friend recently announced his intention to take action to suspend the right to buy of tenants who are subject to eviction proceedings for anti-social behaviour. The Scottish Office has consulted recently on the effectiveness of existing neighbour noise controls, any changes to which would affect both tenants and owner-occupiers. We have also consulted on the introduction of probationary tenancies for public sector tenants. The comments received on both these issues are currently under consideration.

Apiculture Industry

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to develop the apiculture industry in Scotland; what plan he has to encourage the marketing of Scottish honey elsewhere in the United Kingdom and overseas; and if he will make a statement. [39218]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: While we have no specific plans to develop the apiculture industry in Scotland, there is a wide range of marketing and export support measures provided by the Scottish Office, Scottish Enterprise, Highlands and Islands Enterprise, and the network of local enterprise companies in support of the agri-food industry in Scotland from which the apiculture industry could benefit. The Scottish Office Agriculture, Environment and Fisheries Department, processing and marketing branch—0131-244-6386—would be happy to advise industry representatives of the most appropriate sources of support.

Student Allowances

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if student allowances are available for the purchase of course and class manuals which course organisers consider compulsory for the completion of university classes. [38881]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: For students in full-time higher education, provision for the purchase of books and so on forms an integral part of the overall package of maintenance support provided through maintenance grants and student loans. This enables students to determine their own priorities in terms of expenditure.

Resit Examinations

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for the latest year available, the average number of resit examinations for students attending each higher education institution in Scotland. [38880]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The information requested is not available.

Cash and Running Costs Limits

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what changes he intends to make to the cash limits and running costs provision for 1995–96 within his responsibility. [40586]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, I intend to make changes to nine voted cash limits and nine running costs limits:

The cash limit element of class XIV, vote 1, agriculture and fisheries, Scotland will be decreased by £1,500,000 from £132,667,000 to £131,167,000. The decrease takes account of slower than expected take-up of measures aimed at providing support in special areas.

The cash limit for class XIV, vote 2, training programmes, roads and transport services, industrial and regional support, Scotland, will be increased by £21,659,000 from £941,222,000 to £962,881,000. The increase includes an additional £4.7 million in capital grant towards investment in new shipping by Caledonian MacBrayne Ltd., balanced by a corresponding reduction in the non-voted element of the company's external financing limit; a reduction of £630,000 in the repayment of voted loans—capital—by Scottish Enterprise to be accompanied by a similar reduction in the provision of grant in aid; and the take-up of £16,961,000 capital end year flexibility entitlement as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 13 July 1995, Official Report, columns 776–82, for regional assistance and motorways and trunk roads.

The cash limit for class XIV, vote 5, housing and environmental services, Scotland will be decreased by £364,000 from £417,068,000 to £416,704,000. The decrease takes account of a reduced requirement of £1,721,000, under departmental administration, environment and central services, which is being transferred to class XIV, vote 8; and a net increase of £1,357,000 covering an increase of £1,606,000 in gross running cost provision for Historic Scotland from £14,215,000 to £15,821,000 reflecting the take-up of end year flexibility entitlements—£151,000 capital and £1,206,000 running costs—further increases in provision for this agency of £400,000 for running costs and £496,000 for capital expenditure which are offset fully by increased appropriations in aid. In addition, there is an increase in provision for the Local Government Staff Commission (Scotland), the Scottish Environment Protection Agency and establishes provision for the Local Government Property Commission (Scotland) and for the Monklands inquiry, all of which is offset fully by savings within the vote.

The cash limit for class XIV vote 10, law, order, miscellaneous health and social services, Scotland, will be increased by a net total of £3,883,000 from £311,890,000 to £315,773,000. Provision for running costs on this vote will be increased by £1,290,000 from £149,619,000 to £150,909,000. This includes a transfer of £58,000 from class XIV, vote 18. The changes include the take-up of the end year flexibility entitlement for the Scottish Prison Service, increasing its running cost provision by £1,028,000 and capital provision by £354,000; for the Scottish Office Pensions Agency, increasing its running cost provision by £204,000 and capital provision by £418,000; and the social work residential accommodation for children capital provision by £1,271,000. A number of other minor transfers have taken place, within the vote itself, from within other votes in the Scottish Office block and from the Department of Social Security vote, in respect of consequences of changes in housing benefit arrangements.

The cash limit for class XIV, vote 12, hospital, community health (part) and other health services, Scotland, will be increased by a net total of £29,839,000 from £3,131,164,000 to £3,161,003,000. This increase includes £48,482,000 reflecting the partial take up of the end year flexibility entitlement announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 13 July 1995, Official Report, columns 776–82, a transfer of £840,000 from class XII, vote 1 in respect of the Scottish contribution to the Prescription Pricing Authority's administration costs in connection with the assessment of claims under the Scottish low income scheme; a transfer of £246,000 from class XII, vote 1 to cover the costs of services previously funded directly by the Department of Health; a transfer of £17,000 from class XIV, vote 10 to meet the maintenance, repair costs and insurance premiums from invalid three-wheelers, the responsibility for which has transferred to the CSA; a transfer of £1,000 from class XIV, vote 10, in respect of income from insurance claims from invalid three-wheelers; a transfer of £180,000 to class XIV, vote 10 to meet the costs of a merit award given to a member of the Mental Welfare Commission. In addition, there is a reduction in provision of £19,554,000 as a result of a revision of NHS trusts' external financing limit; some adjustments between subheads to reflect revised requirements and changes to anticipated appropriations in aid.

The cash limit for class XIV, vote 15, education, arts and libraries, Scotland will be increased by £2,101,000 from £965,655,000 to £967,756,000. The increase reflects the full take up of end-year flexibility of £2,000,000 as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 13 July 1995, Official Report, columns 777–78, for further education capital—£1,250,000—and National Library of Scotland building programme—£750,000; also a transfer of £101,000 from class XIV, vote 18 for the Student Awards Agency, Scotland—£36,000 for administrative costs in respect of additional responsibilities and £65,000 in respect of end year flexibility. Running cost provision on this vote will increase by £101,000 from £2,840,000 to £2,941,000.

The cash limit for class XIV, vote 18, Scottish Office administration is being increased by £5,745,000 to £174,607,000. Within this total, the running cost limit for Scottish Office administration is being increased by £3,391,000 from £149,729,000 to £153,120.000 as a result of the take-up of end-year flexibility—£3.5 million—predominantly to fund staff early departure costs, less inter-vote transfers of £144,000. In addition there is a transfer of £35,000—running costs—from the Department for Education and Employment. The capital provision is also being increased, as a result of the take-up of £720,000 of end-year flexibility and inter-vote transfers. The additional capital provision is to cover information technology costs associated with agricultural grants.

The overall running cost limit for the Scottish Office, together with its agencies, is being increased by £6,521,000 from £333,087,000 to £339,608,000. This results from the take-up of end-year flexibility, increased provision for Historic Scotland being covered by increased income, and a transfer from the Department of Employment in respect of European social fund work.

The cash limit for class XIV, vote 19, Scottish Record Office, is being increased by £996,000 to £5,459,000. Within this total, the SRO running cost limit is being increased by £782,000 from £4,804,000 to £5,586,000 and results from the take-up of end-year flexibility to cover increased costs associated with water and sewerage charges, contributions in lieu of rates and other running costs of the new repository. The increase in capital provision results from the take-up of end-year flexibility to meet costs arising from slippage in the construction of the Thomas Thomson house repository.

The cash limit for class XIV, vote 20, General Register Office (Scotland), is being increased by £337,000 to £5,372,000. Within this total, the GRO(S) running cost limit is being increased by £100,000 from £7,158,000 to £7,258,000, resulting from the take-up of end-year flexibility to compensate for cost increases. The capital increase results from the take-up of end-year flexibility to cover costs of the refurbishment of Ladywell house and New Register house.

The increases will be offset by savings on other votes within my responsibility or by transfers from other Departments. There will not therefore be any addition to the planned total of public expenditure.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the expenditure for (a) environmentally sensitive areas and (b) other agri-environment schemes in (i) 1992–93, (ii) 1993–94 and (iii) 1994–95. [39750]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson [holding answer 26 October 1995]: The information is set out in the table:

	Expenditure
	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95
Environmentally sensitive areas	1.086	0.963	1.044

The other agri-environment schemes were not launched until 1994–95 and there was no expenditure in that year.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the allocated budget for (a) environmentally sensitive areas and (b) other agri-environment schemes in (i) 1995–96 and (ii) 1996–97. [39751]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson [holding answer 26 October 1995]: There is no allocated provision for individual environmentally sensitive areas. Supply estimate provision for 1995–96 and current planned provision for 1996–97 for (a) the environmentally sensitive area scheme and (b) other agri-environment schemes are set out in the table.

Financial provision: £ million

	Supply estimate 1995–96	Planned provision 1996–97
Environmentally sensitive areas	5.5	8.074
Other agri-environment schemes	1.697	4.098

Rating Revaluation (Appeals)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of state for Scotland how many appeals have so far been lodged in each valuation area in Scotland against the valuation of business premises; how many appeals have been dealt with; how many appeals have been successful; and what was the average amount of time taken to resolve these appeals. [39400]

Mr. Kynoch [Holding answer 26 October 1995]: The information requested is not yet available. It is planned to gather regular statistics on the progress of appeals resulting from the 1995 rating revaluation, from 15 December, the date by which such appeals must be lodged.

Housing

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been spent in respect of each development corporation in Scotland in transferring their housing stock to other landlords during the wind-up. [39414]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 26 October 1995]: The information requested is shown in the table. Expenditure includes consultants' fees to tenants' advisers, support to housing associations, conduct of the ballot and registration of title.

Development Corporation	Expenditure to 30 September 1995 £
Cumbernauld	286,400
East Kilbride	359,000
Glenrothes	856,300
Irvine	476,100
Livingston	443,400

New Water Authorities

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money so far has been paid to the members of the new water authorities in their capacities as members of the boards of these organisations. [39412]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 26 October 1995]: Since the establishment of the three water authorities on 17 July 1995, 32 members, excluding chief executives, have received a total of £45,048.59 by way of remuneration and £5,833.82 in reimbursement of expenses incurred on water authority business.

The chief executives of the water authorities, who are also members, have since 17 July received a total of £25,851.29 by way of salary and £1,384.61 in expenses.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money the new water authorities have been granted by his Department to cover the cost of their operations during their shadow period. [39411]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 26 October 1995]: A total of £9.7 million has been allocated for grant in aid to the new water authorities in 1995–96. This represents less than 2 per cent. of the estimated current expenditure on water and sewerage services this year. The allocations to the individual water authorities is shown in the respective grant in aid tables at chapter 4 of the Scottish Office departmental report—published as Cm 2814.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money his Department spent in commissioning consultants Babtie Shaw to draft the proposed water asset transfer schemes for the existing regional and islands authorities in transferring their water assets to the new water authorities. [39413]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 26 October 1995]: The Babtie Group was contracted to prepare a model framework and guidance notes to assist regional and islands authorities and the Central Scotland water development board in drawing up their asset transfer schemes. The cost of that contract was £108,815.98.

Babties has also been retained to examine and comment upon the asset transfer schemes submitted to the Secretary of State for approval. The value of that contract will be up to £337,750.

Irvine Development Corporation (Housing)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much his Department estimates will be spent by Irvine development corporation in balloting its tenants on the transfer of its housing stock to alternative landlords during wind-up. [39415]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 26 October 1995]: Irvine development corporation's costs in balloting their tenants are estimated at £247,000.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much expenditure his Department has incurred so far as a result of local government reform. [39403]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 26 October 1995]: A wide range of Scottish Office staff have been involved to varying degrees on local government reform. The administrative and associated costs incurred by them cannot be separately identified. Specific elements of the reform have, however, been separately costed and these are listed in the following table:

	Cost £
Consultation Paper—"The Case for Change" (1991) and Consultation Paper—"Shaping the New Councils (1992) and associated leaflets, consultation videos, summary of responses etc."	148,800
White Paper—"Shaping the Future—The New Councils" and associated leaflets	58,200
"The New Councils" leaflet (household drop)	138,660
Total	345,660

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what use his Department has made of outside consultants as part of the process of local government reform in Scotland. [39401]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 26 October 1995]: The services of Touche Ross were used for work in connection with the costs of local government reform.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 264

SESSION 1994–95

16th October—27th October 1995

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker's rulings and statements'.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Comm = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
